REPLY: It occurs to us that any compound suitable for lettering slides with the pen would be susceptible to freezing if the same were kept, or allowed to remain, in a freezing temperature. The remedy is to keep the slide-lettering compound in a reasonably warm place, or to adopt the following procedure: Secure some photographer's opaque from any photographic supply house, such as G. Gennert & Co., 24-26 E. 13th Street, New York, and opaque a supply of clean slides, or cover glasses. Then when it is desired to make up a slide, scratch the lettering through the opaque coating with any suitable sharp metal point or stylus. The slide so prepared projects white letters on a dark ground.

H. L. GRAY, Southwest Harbor, Me., "Do you know of any equipment that can be used on a motion picture machine that will enable one to give a continuous performance without using two machines?"

REPLY: We are not aware that any device has been placed on the market which will allow one projector to function as a continuous performer, and it is in no wise to be desired that such a device should come into regular use at present. The objections need not be enumerated here, but after two or three thousand feet of continued operation any projector will benefit by a brief respite, and this gives the necessary opportunity for looking to the carbons and any other adjustments which it may be advisable to make while the other machine is running. All of the professional projectors may be equipped with magazines accommodating 2,000-foot reels of film, and it will be noted in the advertising pages that a 3,000-foot Motiograph is now available. All things considered we think that available machines satisfy the requirements of continuous performances, and there is no doubt whatever that two projectors are essential to the proper presentation of multiple-reel shows.

J. M. DeWOLFE, Bessemer, Ala., "Kindly state Ohm's law, as a great many cities use this in license examinations."

REPLY: Ohm's law states that the current is directly proportional to the E. M. F. or voltage that is exerted in a circuit, and is inversely proportional to the resistance of a circuit. Expressed as a formula, it is: $\frac{E}{R} = I$. Where E represents the E. M. F. (in volts) R represents the resistance (in ohms) and I represents the resultant current strength (in amperes).

G. W. BOSSARD, Rochester, N. Y., "Will you kindly tell me of something to clean a projector with, which has been through a film fire?"

REPLY: Unless recourse is had to abrasives the deposit left on the mechanism by burning cine film can hardly be entirely removed, but the machine can be sufficiently cleansed to permit of its use, if otherwise all right, by immersion in kerosene. The kerosene will soften the adherent deposit, so that a great deal of it can ultimately be scraped or wiped away, but unsightly traces will remain which could only be removed by polishing or re-finishing.

National Anti-Misframe League
Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

League Member Enjoys Army Life

THE nation's call for soldiers has been answered by quite a number of members of the National Anti-Misframe League in the past few months, and we have just received the following letter from Mr. Ernest Lissard of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.:

"I thought that you would be interested to learn that I have joined the Forty-first Infantry at Fort Brady here in Sault Ste. Marie. It is very nice in the army, and I am going to operate the motion picture machine which they have here in the Y. M. C. A. I hope that the N. A. M. L. is improving every day, and that I am still counted among its members."

If our correspondent has the opportunity of glancing through an occasional issue of the NEWS he will see that the League is, indeed, gaining steadily in membership, and that the purposes of the League are being recognized by an ever increasing circle of exchange-men and exhibitors.

SPEER ALTERNO CARBONS

Pictures projected with Speer "Alterno" Carbons give positive assurance of Intense Illumination—Noiseless Projection—Wanderless Arc—A Bright, Flickerless, Eye-Resting Light and the Elimination of all A. C. Difficulties.

No necessity of buying new housing, new holders—or in fact—any additional equipment. Speer "Alterno" Carbons produce a pure white light and steady burning with the use of the apparatus you now have in your booth.

The results are almost unbelievable. For that reason all A. C. operators and exhibitors should investigate the wonderful possibilities of Speer "Alterno" Carbons. A. C. houses can now assure their patrons that "ghosts," "dark-spots" and "aggravating shadows" are all eliminated. It means a complete transformation of former alternating current conditions.

Chapters on Photographic Optics—IV

FOR the purpose of providing an accurate insight into the action of lenses and optical systems, we have in the preceding chapters given an outline of optical imagery from the viewpoint of the wave theory, but we now enter a more practical channel and shall consider some fundamental properties of lenses.

A most necessary requirement for all users of, and experimenters with, lenses is the knowledge of how to determine their focal length, and it is surprising to note that many photographers and users of projection apparatus do not know how to accomplish this in a practical way. This is generally the result of clinging to antiquated and empirical methods, but is frequently due to lack of knowledge on the part of the experimenter of some of the elementary characteristics of lens action.

In the old treatises on optics the focal length of a lens was measured from the so-called "optical center," which point was determined by drawing two parallel lines, one from the centre of curvature of each surface, and connecting the points where these parallel lines touched the curved surfaces of the lens by a straight line. The point where this connecting line cut the axis was termed the optical center of the lens, and it was from this so-called optical center that focal lengths were measured. It is unnecessary for us to reproduce diagrammatically this archaic method of determining the optical center of a lens, because measurements made therefrom are incorrect from the present day standpoint, but the method still survives in some of the textbooks, where it may be consulted by those who are interested.

Nowadays, focal lengths are determined from the "principal points" of a lens or lens system, and a knowledge of the location and properties of the principal points is of fundamental importance to the maker and user of lenses.

According to the well-known action of refracting surfaces, a ray of light which enters a lens at an angle is always bent twice in traversing the lens, as shown in Fig. 1. If, now, we extend the direction of the incident ray until it intersects the axis of the lens (as shown by dotted lines) and also extend the direction of the emergent ray straight back to the axis (also shown by dotted lines) we find that we have located two points which have the property that a light ray which passes through one of these points upon entering the lens always emerges through the other point in a direction parallel to the direction of its entrance, although somewhat laterally displaced, of course.

These are the "principal points" of the lens, and the planes passing through these points (at right angles to the axis of the lens) are termed the "principal planes" of the lens. These points are very generally referred to as the "nodal points," and in the case of photographic objectives and projection lenses this is permissably correct, but there is a difference between the nodal points (properly so called) and the principal points which we now proceed to outline. In the case of a lens in air the nodal points and the principal points coincide, and their action is therefore identical, but if the lens is in contact with a denser medium than air on one side, the nodal points are shifted along the axis toward the medium of higher index, and the customary action of the principal points then takes place through the nodal points. As an example of this we might mention the human eye, wherein the nodal points are situated further back than the principal points of the crystalline lens. In the case of a lens in contact with air on one side and water on the other, the nodal points would be separated from the principal points (toward the side in contact with water) and would replace the principal points in their action as the optical center of the lens.

As the position of the principal points and the nodal points is not always identical it seems advisable, therefore, to distinguish definitely between them, and instead of following customary usage we shall not refer to nodal points when considering lenses in air, but will consistently refer to the "principal points" of lenses or lens systems.

The introduction of principal points into practical optics was at the hands of the noted mathematician, Carl Friedrich Gauss[1], but it will interest many students of optics to learn that it has been pointed out by the late Dr. Hugo Schroeder[2] that the properties of the principal points had been previously discovered and worked out many years before the publication of the important investigations of Gauss. The following is a free translation of Dr. Schroeder's remarks on this prior usage of the principal points in optical calculations:

"In studying through the older optical works I have come across the not uninteresting fact that the theory of the Gaussian 'principal points' with reference to lenses, and also conforming to the case of the Gaussian treatment where the first and last media are the same, has been previously [to 1841] published in full detail, with the necessary formulæ and copper-engraved diagrams covering all practical kinds of simple lenses, in the year 1775 by Joseph Harris, late his Majesty's Assay Master of the Mint. It is to be found in 'A Treatise of Optics': containing Elements of the Science in two books by Joseph Harris, London. Sold by B. White at Horace's Head, Fleet St., page 50, par. 2. Of oblique pencil of rays—Harris designated the first principal point v, the second principal point s, and the optical center O. In none of the earlier optical works, neither in Newton's work [Opticks, 1704] nor in the work of 'The History and Present State of Discoveries Relating to Vision, Light and Colours,' published by Priestly in 1772, can I find even an intimation concerning them [the principal-points], and the same is true of the later works, for, as is known, it is not even stated by Herschel in his classical work 'On Light' [1827], in which the focal length is still erroneously measured from the optical center, so that this praiseworthy treatment of geometrical optics [Harris's treatise] has fallen entirely into oblivion until it was again revived at the authoritative hands of Gauss in his well known 'Dioptrische Unterschungen,' 1841."

In spite of this early anticipation of his optical researches, Gauss is clearly entitled to the credit of having pointed out the utility of the principal points in the measurement and calcula-

[1] "Dioptrische Unterschungen," Göttingen, 1841. So far as we can discover, no translation of Gauss' "Dioptric Investigations" has ever been published in English, but Gauss' methods have been very comprehensively demonstrated in a work by Charles Pendlebury entitled: "Lenses and Systems of Lenses, Treated After the Manner of Gauss." Cambridge, 1884. A good outline of the Gauss theory is also to be found in R. S. Heath's "Treatise on Geometrical Optics," second edition, Cambridge, 1895.

tion of lenses and the principal points and planes are accordingly often termed the Gauss points and planes by opticians.

To return, therefore, to the practical utility of the principal points, it is apparent that if we can locate with accuracy their situation in any lens or lens system we then have the necessary data whereby to determine the actual focal length. The position of the principal points depends upon the form of the lens and the refractive index of the material of which it is made. The principal points are, therefore, found in different positions in the various forms of lenses, and the approximate positions of the principal points in a variety of well-known forms of simple lenses are shown in Fig. 2. It is evident from Fig. 2 that the principal points are generally found nearest to the face of greatest curvature of any given lens.

It is convenient to be able to calculate the positions of the principal points of simple lenses and this may be accomplished by the use of the following formulæ:

Let r_1 = radius of first surface,
Let r_2 = radius of second surface,
Let v_1 = vertex of first surface,
Let v_2 = vertex of second surface,
Let d = thickness of lens, or distance between v_1 and v_2,
Let p_1 = first principal point,
Let p_2 = second principal point,
Let n = refractive index of the glass.

The distance from the vertex of the first surface (v_1) to the first principal point (p_1) measured inwards is given by

and the distance from the vertex of the second surface (v_2) to the second principal point (p_2) measured inwards is equal to

while the equivalent thickness, or distance between p_1 and p_2 is found from

$$\frac{d(r_1 + r_2 - d)(n-1)}{n(r_1 + r_2 - d) + d}$$

which, when d is small compared with r_1 and r_2, reduces to

$$d \times \frac{(n-1)}{n}$$

The true focal lengths f_1p_1 (front) and p_2f_2 (back) may be derived from the formula

With a knowledge of the action and location of the principal points it is possible to locate graphically the image of any object as formed by a lens. In Fig. 3, A is an object situated in front of the lens, and we require to find where its image will be found. We therefore draw a line, parallel to the axis, from A to the first principal plane p_1 (corresponding to the first principal point). We know that the action of the principal planes is such that a ray when it reaches the first plane, after entering the lens, appears to travel right straight across to the other plane before emerging from the lens. We therefore prolong the parallel ray from A right straight across the space between the planes p_1 and p_2, and as we know that parallel rays will always come to a focus at the equivalent focal point of a lens we continue the ray right through the (back) focal point f_1' after its emergence from the lens. We now draw another ray from the object A, so that it passes through the (front) focal point f_1 and continue the same to the principal plane p_1 and thence straight across to p_2. We are justified in doing this because if a parallel incident ray passes through the focal point of a lens upon emergence, an incident ray which passes through the focal point must be parallel on emergence, so we continue this second ray after emergence as a line parallel to the axis until it intersects the first ray carried through, and the point of intersection is the image A′ of the object A. It requires to be pointed out that the actual paths of the rays from object to image, as refracted by the lens, are not identical with the directions of the rays shown in Fig. 3, but it is nevertheless true that the action of the lens in forming an image leads to the same result as the graphic method of the diagram, and the location of images may be plotted in this way without any knowledge of the refracting action at the surfaces of the lens.

Music and the Picture

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Heart of Mine," by Ralph C. Smith. This wonderful number, first played by the composer as a Solo, is a monument to his genius. It is a charming ¾ Moderato Cantabile, most appropriate for Love Scenes. (Sam Fox Edition.)

2—"A Selection" and "One-Step" from "Chu-Chin-Chow." The Musical Sensation of London and New York are now obtainable from J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., New York City.

3—"In the Land of Wedding Bells," a splendid dancing arrangement, "Fox Trot" of this new novelty song by Geo. W. Meyer is now obtainable from Leo Feist, New York City.

4—"Master Melodies," No. 2, from "Light Operas," arranged for Orchestra by Chas. J. Roberts. An interesting number for your program—compiled of hits from "Beggar Student," "Mikado," "Erminie," etc. (Carl Fischer Edition.)

5—"The Hymn of Free Russia," by Alex Gretchaninoff—an exceptional fine composition of standard quality, orchestrated by Otto Langey and published by G. Schirmer.

6—"Constance"—Theme and Romance, by Earnest S. Golden. A Concert number of serious intent with a melodious theme that will allow for musical synchronization to tense and emotional situations, on the Photoplay Screen. The Romance is a natural illustration for passion. (J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., New York City.)

7—"Heavy Mysterioso," by Sol. P. Levy. The title signifies the purpose. (Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bld., New York City.)

8—"Give Me the Right to Love You," by Abe Glatt. Considered by many and competent judges to be the finest composition of its kind—most appropriate for Love Themes and scenes. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

9—"Chasing the Chickens," a great Jazz number. (Published by Foster Music Co., Chicago, Ill.)

10—"Jazzing Around," One-Step, by Earl Fuller. A snappy and melodious composition, which every leader can use to good advantage. (Leo Feist Edition.)

11—"Longing for My Dixie Home," by Shannon. A 4/4, Andante moderato, movement—very melodious and very effective. (Published by the Vandersloot Music Co.)

13—"In A Garden of Shadows and Tears," by A. Manlowe. A very attractive melody of pathetic character. (Vanderlost Pub. Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

14—"Hail, Hail, the Gang's Here," by Theodore Morse. Every musician knows the famous old song hit, "We Won't Go Home Till Morning." "Hail, Hail" is better. (Leo Feist Edition.)

Take An Example from Albert F. Wayne

AS Musical Director for the Stanley theatre, over a period of nearly four years, with a large orchestra and organ at my command, it has always been my rule to give to the public all that is best in the world's great Library of Music.

The Motion Picture depicts the human passions. The composers of the world depict in tones, these same emotions. With this as a common ground, it should not be hard to combine the two and give to the public the best music of the world with your picture. It is but natural that the opinions of those having this work to do, should vary, but nevertheless, I am positive that artistic results to satisfy the most exacting, can be secured if the proper thought is given to each scene of the picture.

My Musical Library is classified, not by title or composer, but by the emotion it conveys to the public. Every composition is played as printed, and as the composer intended it to be played, giving as perfect a rendition musically, as it is possible for the orchestra to give, believing that this is the way to educate those needing the education and to satisfy those capable of judging a musical composition and its rendition. The words "fitting a picture" should be discarded. It is my object to find music that absolutely HARMONIZES with the scene on the screen. In other words, I place myself in the position of the man who would compose original music of the picture.

The senseless repetition of a number is something to which I have always been strongly opposed, or the sudden termination of a piece, to grab the next cue. Someone in the audience knows what you are playing and is left unsatisfied. The picture is at all times the jewel and the orchestra the setting.

I study all musical plots to see what other minds have chosen. If their choice is good, I use it; if not, it has aided me in selecting another composition. My first rule is to see the picture, get the story, the length of the scenes, etc. Then the music is selected and the picture run again to see if everything harmonizes; if not, changes are made and when it does go before the public it is as nearly perfect as we can make it.

The success of my work here is due to the fact that the Managing Director, Mr. Stanley V. Mastbaum, is a man of the highest type, and has never permitted us to give the public anything but the best. He personally supervises every projection and his knowledge of music and artistic taste does not allow anything to pass which might mar an otherwise perfect performance.

Let us have music if the picture is to live. There is life, love and hope in it, joy, inspiration and heart. Let us have music, for if ever the world needed music, it needs it now, but let it be good music, played the best we know how, and I am sure the results will be most gratifying all around.

Selections by Ban-Joe Wallace

MR. WALLACE is one of the best known banjo players in the country. He never lacks good engagements, not bebause he has more friends than any other performer in the show business, but simply because he knows how to select the proper kind of music for the various gatherings that he entertains. One day Wallace may be rendering selections for the elite in a fashionable hotel or for the guests in a millionaire's mansion, and the following day he may be booked to play at the annual entertainment of the Lady Conductors' Association. When about to take a car or a cab to the hotel, mansion or public hall where the affair is to be held, Wallace does not grab a bundle of music and hurry off, regardless of what kind of music the bundle contains, for if he did, instead of having plenty of engagements booked far ahead, he would have a great deal of idle time on his hands and a few benefits.

As soon as Wallace knows that he is billed to play as a certain affair he makes a study of the kind of people he will very likely face, and then maps out a program that he thinks will most appeal to them, and the program that he chooses for the Fifth avenue crowd will be somewhat different from that selected for the Lady Conductors. Experience has taught him that the high brows like some good popular music and that the middle classes appreciate certain classical numbers, and by mixing the light and heavy stuff, as well as picking out special numbers appropriate for the different occasions, Wallace has built up a big and profitable following.

Motion picture exhibitors would be doing a wise thing if they made it their business to see that their musicians did likewise. Wise musicians do without being told, whether they are playing for pictures or any other form of entertainment, but it is nothing unusual to see a pianist grab a stack of music at the last moment and begin to play just as the title of a picture is thrown on the screen and continue to play, whether the music fits the picture or not. There is not a situation shown in photoplays that the musician cannot find at least twenty numbers from different publishers that will dovetail with the scene. And the right music at the right time will do a great deal towards making a picture more interesting, as well as adding to the comfort and enjoyment of the audience. Classical music offered in conjunction with some pictures is just as detrimental as all popular numbers offered with others. If music publishers followed the careless methods adopted by some musicians and exhibitors there would be no music publishers of any account. A publisher aims to build up a catalogue that will have something in it for everybody, just the same as a magazine editor does. Successful magazine editors do not grab the first batch of stories that comes to their desks—it would be fatal and would drive away thousands of subscribers. The reading text is at least fifty per cent of a magazine, just as music is fifty per cent of motion picture entertainment, but few exhibitors give the same attention to the music that goes with their pictures as editors do with stories and articles, and when business falls off the exhibitor is puzzled and discouraged and gets the idea that there is no money in the game. He shoulders the loss, while the man who failed to produce the proper kind of music moves on and secures another job. E. M. WICKES.

General Comments

MEYER COHEN, for many years business manager for Charles K. Harris and Harry Von Tilzer, has taken offices in the Astor Theatre Building, where he will publish under the name of the Meyer Cohen Music Co. He has been fortunate in getting hold of several excellent numbers from well-known writers. Meyer should have little difficulty in winning success, for there is no one in the game who knows the many angles better.

CLEVELAND can boast of other things besides having had Lajoie for a number of years. It has a live newspaper in the Cleveland News, live in motion pictures and musical events. Last week it ran a big song story with pictures of Frederick Knight Logan, the waltz king; Teddy Moore, Fred, Rath, Bailey and Cowan, L. Wolfe Gilbert, Jack Mahoney, Harry Von Tilzer, Ed. Rose and Earl Carroll.

JAMES W. CASEY, head of The Echo Music Co., has been doing a wonderful business during the past month with "My Golden West," "Come Along Ma Honey" and "My Hawaii, I Hear You Calling Me."

FISCHER AND McCARTHY have a great picture number in "Alsace Lorraine." Fred Fischer wrote the melody, which should be sufficient to get it a hearing with all musicians.

THE only thing that bothers Joe Hollander, manager for Joe Morris, these days is where he will get goods to fill orders for half a million copies. "We're Going Over" and "There's a Service Flag in Our House" are the best sellers at present.

GILBERT AND FRIEDLAND are playing in Chicago this week and are featuring "Are You From Heaven?" If you have not tried this with pictures you are missing a great deal.

Splendid New House Opens in Poughkeepsie

POUGHKEEPSIE has a real institution in the new $100,000 theatre, the Stratford, which opened on January 21 with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man." It is distinctly a city institution and has been made possible by the public spirit of Ely Elting, Herbert R. Gurney, John Lurie, De Garmo Smith, D. W. Wilbur, Dr. H. L. Salisbury, Alfred F. Schwartz, John H. Doherty, Edward E. Perkins and C. W. H. Arnold. It is located at the corner of Liberty and Cannon streets, and is the largest house for the exclusive presentation of photoplays in that section of New York State. The main floor seats 1,000 and the balcony 500.

The theatre is modeled along the lines of the Rialto, New York, and is promised as the last word in modern construction and equipment. It includes even the parking space for fifty automobiles, as there will be a large appeal to that patronage.

The Stratford was designed by W. H. McElfatrick, of New York. It is absolutely fireproof and there are twelve emergency exits and all the known safety devices employed.

The decorations follow very closely those of the Rialto, the general effects being Roman gold and antique ivory, these colors being carried through the house, varied with other tints and mural decorations that harmonize with the general scheme.

The house has a large ventilating system, the air being subject to constant changes by exhaust fans. In cold weather the fresh air, warmed in a plenum chamber, enters the auditorium through mushrooms under the seats and ventilators in the way and passes out through vents in the ceiling.

In the summer time the same system is used for forcing fresh, cool air into the theatre. In the hottest weather outside, the Stratford will afford a cool, refreshing atmosphere to patrons.

The lighting system is a decided novelty, not to be found elsewhere in the State. It is technically known as the X-Ray indirect self-suffusing light, by which there may be produced any desired effect—moonlight, sunlight, twilight or dawn—as the nature of the picture may make appropriate.

The musical feature of the Stratford is given special emphasis by the engagement of Frank L. Scofield as director. For thirty years Mr. Scofield has been leader of the Twenty-first Regiment Band, and Scofield's Orchestra has played on countless occasions at Vassar College and wherever, in fact, the best music has been demanded and appreciated. Mr. Scofield's plans for orchestral performances in the Stratford, where he will have the support of talented instrumentalists, give promise of an uncommonly high order of music.

The Stratford is under the management of T. W. Williams, who has had fifteen years' experience in the theatrical business in New York City.

Howard Theatre Cost $500,000

IN a recent issue of Motion Picture News the statement that the Howard Theatre which has recently been erected in Chicago was erected at a cost of $500. In order that our readers may not be misled as to the importance of this house we want to state that this is a typographical error and that it was erected at a cost of $500,000.

The new De Luxe model Motiograph is being used. The entire equipment of the projection room has been chosen with the greatest care, so that the picture on the screen is of the highest order.

ALABAMA

The Sterling Amusement Company of Alabama is about to erect a new motion picture theatre at Sheffield, with a seating capacity of 400. The name of the theatre is to be decided by popular vote.

CALIFORNIA

The new motion picture theatre at Los Banos being erected by Gennelly Bros. is rapidly approaching completion and A. Gennelly, a member of the firm, announces that 500 opera chairs are to be installed this week. The walls and ceilings have received their finish coats and are ready for the decorators. Due to many delays and disappointments, the management has not yet definitely announced the opening date.

Samuel H. Levin, a pioneer motion picture man of San Francisco, has bought, through the agency of Umbsen, Kerner and Eisert, the southeast corner of Clement street and Ninth avenue, Richmond, upon which he intends to erect a substantial, modern theatre to be devoted to the silent drama. The lot has an area of 11,250 square feet. Levin's plans call for the erection of a Gothic structure with steel frame, and work upon same will be commenced as soon as preliminary details are arranged.

Plans have been prepared and contracts let for a motion picture theatre at San Jose to cost about $100,000.

The contractor for the J. B. Lankershim theatre building improvement at Los Angeles will soon start operations. The permit has been granted by the city building department. The building will be erected on the east side of Main, near Eighth street, and when completed will be known as Miller's new theatre. The structure will be one of the handsomest of its class in the West and will have a seating capacity of about 3,000.

The new Iris theatre at Hollywood was formally opened January 17 to capacity business, under the ownership and personal management of Frank R. Alexander. A notable feature of the new building is the beautiful decorations obtained under the direction of Howard Verbeck of the Potter Park studios. Mr. Verbeck endeavored to present a cheerful and inviting entrance, and, without question, he has accomplished this end by the brilliant and harmonious blending of the colors used. The interior also is beautifully decorated with colors which rest the eyes.

The new Rex theatre, Oroville, was opened recently and is already proving its popularity, and Manager Slissman is rejoiced with its outlook.

To Charles W. Kent and Son of Glendale has been awarded the contract for the construction and remodeling work in connection with the alteration of the present Hampshire Hotel, at 814-16 South Broadway, Los Angeles, into a motion picture theatre for J. A. Quinn. Plans for the project have been prepared by A. R. Walker. The hotel interior is to be gutted to make space for the theatre auditorium, and the front of the building will be completely changed. The property is owned by the Katherine Hooker estate and has been secured by Mr. Quinn under a long-term lease.

Complete remodeling of the theatre section of the Majestic theatre building, owned by the Hamburger Realty Company, south of Eighth street on Broadway and near Ninth street, Los Angeles, will be made in the near future under the direction of Architect Albert C. Martin. The auditorium floor, balcony, gallery, auditorium ceiling and stairways will be removed and rebuilt to conform with the approved plans made by the architect. The seating capacity is to be increased and ramps constructed to replace some of the present stairways. The construction work required for the new balcony and gallery will be of reinforced concrete.

INDIANA

The Family theatre at Lafayette was formally opened a week ago with a mixed program of vaudeville and motion pictures, to the entire satisfaction of management and patronage alike.

KANSAS

The new playhouse now under construction at Council Grove to be known as the Stella Opera House will be opened to the public early in April if present plans do not miscarry.

The Colonial theatre, 117 North Market street, Wichita, which has been owned by J. C. Mackey of Denver ever since it was established in 1910, has just been taken over by a number of Wichita business men, headed by O. K. Mason and Frank Krehbiel. For the first time in eight years Wichita men are going to be behind the proposition. Mr. Mackey, former owner, died not long ago and the property has just been secured from the estate.

KENTUCKY

The Pastime theatre, Winchester, is to be enlarged to a seating capacity of 650. The interior will be redecorated.

MISSOURI

The Shubert interests recently acquired control of the Jefferson theatre, St. Louis, which they will run in conjunction with the Shubert-Garrick. George H. Lighton, present manager of the Shubert-Garrick, will also assume the management of their recent acquisition.

NEW YORK

Plans for the proposed new theatre at the corner of Main and Elm streets, Lockport, as being promoted by W. N. Cross, a former Lockport theatrical man, were prepared by Architects Esenwein and Johnson of Buffalo. Mr. Cross is presenting a stock company proposition to Lockportians. He proposes an expenditure of about $100,000.

The Typhoon System was selected strictly on its proven merits.

The owners had before them the perfectly satisfactory service given them by the Typhoons in their famous Rialto Theatre for three years.

They knew from experience that only the Typhoon System could give them the same satisfactory cooling and ventilating service in the Rivoli Theatre.

And for that reason the Typhoon System was installed in the Rivoli.

Gentlemen:--

It has been my privilege to serve you over a period of nearly eight years. For the success I have attained I thank YOU.

Previous to my advent as a manufacturer in 1910, I actively served in the motion picture trade journal field--it was a great school.

I have not forgotten the good friends I made during those years--I have pleasing evidence that they have not forgotten me. I consider it my business in life to prove worthy of these friendships.

The company which bears my name owns and occupies the most magnificent and up-to-date laboratory-studio in America.

The original home of PERFECT DEVELOPING AND PRINTING is ready to handle your work in quantities large or small.

Our marvelous multiple-set studio can be yours at reasonable rental rates.

We are equipped and qualified to serve the motion picture trade completely and well.

Co-operatively yours,

MARY PICKFORD

"STELLA MARIS"

BY WILLIAM J. LOCKE, SCENARIO BY FRANCES MARION
DIRECTED BY MARSHALL NEILAN

An ARTCRAFT Picture

"STELLA MARIS" already has taken its place as Mary Pickford's masterpiece. It is the picture the fans will use as a basis for judging all pictures for years to come.

"Almost as good as 'Stella Maris'" will mean a photoplay "almost" perfect. Here's what the New York City newspapers told their readers about "Stella Maris" when it was presented by Harold Edel at the Strand Theatre:

The Sun—"Such artful mimicry in the simultaneous delineation of two sharply contrasted characters is rarely to be seen as Mary Pickford is doing it this week on the screen at the Strand Theatre. . . . the picture, with its many novel incidents, extraordinary photography and its interesting story undoubtedly lifts the actress as high as she has ever gone in her art."

The Tribune—"Mary Pickford did wonderful character work as the little waif who bore slight resemblance to her beautiful Stella Maris. If any there be who think that Mary Pickford is not a great actress let him go to see 'Stella Maris' and be converted."

The Evening Telegram—"When worshippers at the shrine of Mary Pickford have seen 'Stella Maris' which is at the Strand this week, they will probably be more devoted than ever."

Written, directed and produced by Benjamin Chapin.

Do They Read The Saturday Evening Post in your city?

OF course they do. And it's a great advertising medium.

Paramount and Artcraft advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post get results. You know that.

The Saturday Evening Post is one of twenty magazines of national circulation advertising "The Son of Democracy" to YOUR patrons. They are gathering an audience of millions, eager to see "The Son of Democracy."

That's only the beginning of Paramount's advertising on "The Son of Democracy." A direct-by-mail circularization campaign is reaching hundreds of thousands—"occasional patrons" who will be made permanent patrons by "The Son of Democracy."

In your city each clubwoman, teacher, librarian; each member of a patriotic society (G. A. R., D. A. R., etc.), each Boy Scout, Girl Scout, public official, has been told about "The Son of Democracy" and wants to see it.

Paramount's nation-wide circularization has accomplished this.

"The Son of Democracy" will make new friends. It will hold the old ones.

A FIVE PART BLUE RIBBON FEATURE

Here is a winning combination in story, star, cast and production—another of the 100 per cent features that are making the Vitagraph program dominant in box-office value.

"The Woman Between Friends" is a truly powerful drama from the pen of one of the world's greatest authors—probably the best known fiction writer in America—presenting beautiful Alice Joyce, supported by Marc Mac Dermott, Mary Maurice, Robert Walker and a splendid cast of Vitagraph favorites.

Against a gay background of carnival and revelry, this dramatic story stands out with striking intensity. Its appeal will be eagerly awaited by the ready-made audience of millions that the book has created.

MABEL NORMAND
in "Dodging A Million"

by Edgar Selwyn & A.M. Kennedy

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER'S brilliant picturization of "Dodging a Million," which signalizes the triumphant return to the screen of this star of world-wide popularity became—as we knew it would—a box-office event for exhibitors everywhere. Every picture that this master of production touches at once becomes a profit-maker. These remarkable indorsements tell the story.

WID GUNNING: By Telegraph from Albuquerque, N. M.: Congratulations on Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." It will surely clean up for every exhibitor. Cannot remember ever seeing before such an enjoyable combination of mystery, farce, speed and class, with touches of pathos and romance.

BOSTON RECORD: Tamar Lane: Mabel Normand's return in "Dodging a Million" is more than triumphant. There is no one who could take her place as a star; she's the queen comedienne of the screen.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD Louis Reeves Harrison: "Dodging a Million" is a genuine photodrama—swift, with plenty of zip. A new Mabel Normand indeed, and a joyously surprising one.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: Frances Agnew: Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" registers an entertainment value of 100 per cent. plus. George Loane Tucker at his best; Goldwyn exhibitors have a treat in store.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: Geo. T. Pardy: One of the brightest mystery dramas the screen has known in a decade is "Dodging a Million," which launches Mabel Normand as a Goldwyn star under happy auspices. This is a picture destined to go down in film history as one of the most brilliant offerings on record. George Loane Tucker's direction is an exhibition of perfect craftsmanship. Exhibitors will find this unique picture a valuable attraction.

VARIETY: Sime: The combination of star, director and story in "Dodging a Million" is irresistible. George Loane Tucker never lost a chance in making this splendid picture, which proved pure entertainment to capacity houses at the Strand. "Dodging a Million" will be liked all over.

CHICAGO HERALD: Welcome, twice welcome to Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." This Goldwyn production is of George Loane Tucker's make, which is as big a boost pictorially as Worth was when applied to a Paris frock twenty-five years ago. This production has brought the crowds flocking to the Orpheum.

DRAMATIC MIRROR: "Dodging a Million" is a splendid production and a novel mystery drama which serves as a wonderful medium for bringing Mabel Normand back to the screen. It will delight her legion of admirers.

BRINGS CAPACITY BUSINESS to the Theatres of America

—winning Unanimous Praise

EXHIBITORS, newspapers and the motion picture trade press unanimously agree in hailing Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" as one of the sensational screen successes of the year. Capacity business resulted instantly in New York, Chicago, Boston—in Goldwyn's sixty odd first-run cities. Only a money-making production arouses enthusiasm like this:

STRAND THEATRE, Harold Edel, Managing Director: "Dodging a Million is one of the finest productions The Strand has ever had. There is magic in Mabel Normand's name; we were crowded all week.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Toledo, O., H C. Horator, Manager: In the face of zero weather Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" opened to splendid business. We have had a remarkable week with this popular star and unusual production.

N Y GLOBE "Dodging a Million" is one of the most entertaining pictures ever presented at the Strand Theatre Mabel Normand's return to the screen after a year's absence is a veritable triumph. At once she resumes her place in the very foremost rank of screen stars

N. Y HERALD Why Mabel Normand's grace and beauty remained for three or four years concealed under grotesque comedy make-up is a question that would puzzle anyone seeing her in "Dodging a Million." This is one of the most splendid and popular productions seen in a long time.

N. Y EVE. SUN "Dodging a Million" shows Mabel Normand as an actress of unsuspected emotional range. Her good looks and vivacity combine at once to give this photoplay wide popularity This corking good mystery drama has brought crowds to the Strand.

N. Y. TRIBUNE: Once upon a time we may have seen a picture that we liked better than we did "Dodging a Million" but, if so, we cannot recall what it was. There is something new under the sun in motion pictures and it is "Dodging a Million." It is to be hoped that Mabel Normand will never again see fit to stay away from the screen again, and the only trouble with "Dodging a Million" is that it is going to make everyone dissatisfied with just ordinarily good pictures. Never once does your interest relax.

CHICAGO NEWS Mabel Normand is still irresistible. Surprising things follow in rapid succession in "Dodging a Million," in which all of the detail is typical of Goldwyn productions — another way of saying "excellent."

CHICAGO EXAMINER "Dodging a Million" is a cleverly devised mystery drama filled with complicating incident and it keeps an audience on edge every minute.

CHICAGO POST: Mabel Normand's return to the screen is an item of tremendous interest to many. The combination of Mabel Normand George Loane Tucker and "Dodging a Million" is an unbeatable trinity.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE: With George Loane Tucker directing, Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" has a vehicle that suits her down to the ground and has come back with a flourish, the same captivating star as when she disappeared. This is one of those "sure things" that the gang will all be there to see. A surprise packet picture. . . . H'raay for Mabel.

FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD

Ira M. Lowry's Nationally Successful Patriotic Spectacle

by Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser

This picture is a big, sensational, gripping "thriller." It has a rushing, wonderful melodrama and a big love story. It is the greatest production made thus far about the World War. It sends thrills along the spine. It appeals to everyone's love of and loyalty to their country. It shows mothers, fathers, sisters, sweethearts how their missing ones battle for the glory of the nation. To date all of the thousand and more exhibitors who have played this in their houses have made a profit and in most cases it has broken every existing house record for attendance. You can book "For the Freedom of the World" only through the branch offices of

What critical New York newspapers think of "LEST WE FORGET"

Now breaking records at the Lyric Theatre, New York

Presented by SCREEN CLASSICS INC.

THE NEW YORK HERALD. "Most impressive and elaborate photoplay seen in New York this season · The action and arrangement of the photoplay are particularly excellent, and the title is really significant, as no motion picture drama yet presented reminds the spectators more clearly of the reasons why this nation is at war."

The Evening World. "Affords onlookers more excitement in ten minutes than the average film thriller does in an hour · Holds interest from start to finish · Replete with stirring incidents · Jolivet admirable as the heroine ·"

THE EVENING MAIL "Splendidly acted throughout · Miss Jolivet carrying off the honors."

The Evening Call "Logical and sane · Dignified, unbiased indictment of German militarism."

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL "Calculated to give lovers of military pictures all the thrills they require · Jolivet most capable actress that could be chosen for part of heroine · Equal to any that have been shown ·"

The Morning Telegraph "Public will go in force to see this production."

UNANIMOUSLY ACCLAIMED THE BOX OFFICE EVENT OF THE YEAR

Morning Telegraph
"The Grain of Dust" in picture form, preserves an astonishing amount of the spirit of the novel's gifted author, much of the sweep and compelling interest that made him one of the most widely read of our fiction writers.

Exhibitors' Herald
A thrilling page from life that holds one spellbound... Better than a sermon. No expense spared in making the picture complete in every detail.. Cast, particularly good.

Wid's
As a drama for big business, this feature is the candy... Powerful story, splendidly acted and well presented makes gripping feature.

New York Review
A picture which bears the stamp of artistic merit in every detail, rich in dramatic contrast and conflict, and rich, too, in its revelation of men and women's souls.

The GRAIN of DUST
By David Graham Phillips

Dramatic Mirror
"The Grain of Dust" will be a rock of success for any exhibitor. It contains the type of story that will always prove popular, and it is interpreted with artistic emphasis.

Motion Picture News
An unusually strong production... Careful and original handling has worked wonders with Mr. Phillips story, and there is something wierdly fascinating about it that constantly keeps the attention.

Moving Picture World
An artistically made picture, strong enough in human appeal to make it exceedingly popular with all audiences.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY

A Mighty Solid Old Structure

"I have run General pictures exclusively for five years and have had but one losing week. Can you beat that?"—J. A. KEENE, BIJOU THEATRE, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA. (Motography, February 2nd, 1918.)

This man has said something with five years of cumulative Fact behind it.

Stability and consistent service are built into General Film Company, as any exhibitor knows.

There are many other exhibitors who have remained ever constant to General Film Company, clients who originated in the former days of very high profits and who continued through the days of lesser profits—but always profits—well satisfied. And there are those who made adventures into other fields of supply only to return to General Film voicing appreciation of its more reliable service.

For that is what has made General Film Company a landmark unshaken —Service.

Specializing in the desirable type of one-reel, two-reel and three-reel picture, it was the commanding purveyor of such product. Discriminative showmen looked nowhere else for worth while subjects of short length. Even those going to other sources for pictures in five reels, six reels and seven reels did so reluctantly. But these exhibitors returned with a rush—a rush that is current history —when the splendid Paralta Plays, seven-reel productions, became available at all General Film Exchanges via the "Hodkinson Service." Thus General Film Company's debut into the field was sensational. But it was easy and graceful as it was triumphant.

General Film Company is a mighty solid old structure, firm on its foundation, fresh and unscarred amid younger rivals that are already in decay and toppling.

And the motion picture exhibitor, full of the enduring memory of prosperous relations, may well say, "Can you beat that?"

N. B.—General Film Company does not impose the 15*-cent charge on any of its releases.*

TRIANGLE

"Thumbs Down"

Picture one of those magnificent, barbaric, gladiatorial combats of ancient Rome!

A gladiator has just downed his opponent. With foot planted on his vanquished foe he rests a moment, sword in hand, to await the Emperor's decision. Shall it be " thumbs down " for death, or " thumbs up " for victory?

The motion picture exhibitor, confronted by the dangers to his business has indicated " thumbs down " to those producers and distributors who are not giving proper consideration to his problems.

He wants a clean-cut, open and above-board proposition from the distributor or producer.

The exhibitor wants to make his profit. He wants to place his confidence with those producers who will study his problems, look at his business from the box-office standpoint, cooperate with him, sympathize with his efforts to make a real and lasting success and give him every reasonable advantage that can be extended.

Triangle is the company with which the exhibitor can place his confidence—fully, freely and always successfully. And that is because Triangle has indicated " Thumbs down " to evils and methods that have been practised in the motion picture business.

Triangle recognized the evils of the inflated star system and put a curb on its excesses. Obtaining the best actors, because of genuine talent, pleasing qualities and consistent drawing power, Triangle inaugurated the system of paying salaries that were within reasonable bounds—a fair and sane policy which met with the instant approval of exhibitors.

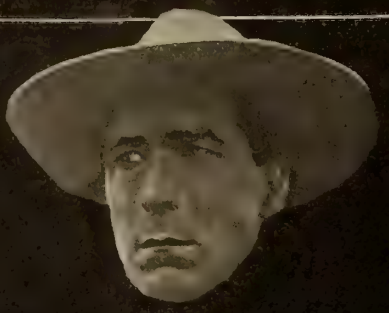
Consequently Triangle indicated "thumbs down" to the policy of charging impossibly high prices on films.

"Thumbs down" was the policy on the war tax. Triangle cheerfully shouldered the burden of the tax instead of placing it on the already over-burdened exhibitor.

"Thumbs down" is the Triangle policy on "just ordinary" service. Every month a special seven-reel feature of unusual merit is issued to Triangle exhibitors at no extra cost. This is a part of the regular program.

"Thumbs down" is the policy on waste, hackneyed stories, ordinary production, and anything which tends to keep the business from entering at the box-office.

If you are one of those exhibitors who have not yet looked into Triangle service, suppose you write or call at one of our exchanges. You are a business man. You are always anxious to learn something new. You want to know why Triangle might be of value to you—might show you a bigger profit—a larger audience—and greater satisfaction. We are certain after a careful investigation that, like thousands of other exhibitors enjoying Triangle service, you will say



"THUMBS UP" ON TRIANGLE.

FACTS Mirrored in "THE EAGLE'S EYE"

FACTS about Imperial Germany's spies and plots in America are the foundation of the marvelous story in each of the twenty episodes of "The Eagle's Eye"—

FACTS obtained by William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the Secret Service, when he was combating the enemy plotters against American lives and American industries—

FACTS in the first episode—"The Hidden Death"—show how Imperial German agents in America made plans for torpedoing the Lusitania.

FACTS of how the Kaiser's arch-conspirators schemed to destroy a part of the Atlantic Fleet with electrically controlled torpedoes, while it steamed down the Hudson river on Presidential Review, are pictured with exciting suspense in the third episode, "The Plot Against the Fleet."

In the month of January MOTION PICTURE NEWS carried over 20 more pages of paid advertising than any other trade paper in the field —and in the last issue, over 10 pages more.

This is but a recent indication of a constant and consistent lead in advertising which in the course of a year carries the "NEWS" ahead of any other trade paper by as much as a total of several hundred pages of paid advertising.

There's a reason—

A reason as solid and consistent as is our lead in advertising.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS dominates the field —in editorial value, in circulation value—and therefore in advertising value.

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S
BIG PICTURE

Did you play "The Whip"?

If you did you know what a box office bear it is.

Well, there is a companion picture to "THE WHIP" in the making.

Over $100,000 has already been spent on it.

The last reel alone remains unfinished and it shows a battle in mid-air between a monster Zeppelin (not a model—a real one) made on government lines at a cost of over $25,000, with a war hydroplane over the real ocean.

The real actors go in the clouds, not faked—the real thing.

Its Title

"STOLEN ORDERS"

founded on the Drury Lane play "Sealed Orders," written by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, authors of "The Whip," which ran at the Drury Lane longer than "The Whip" did. The title, "Sealed Orders" was appropriated by a Danish picture some years ago, hence the change of name to "Stolen Orders."

ACTED BY 6 STARS

CARLYLE BLACKWELL	KITTY GORDON	MONTAGU LOVE
GEORGE MacQUARRIE	MADGE EVANS	JUNE ELVIDGE

Guaranteed bigger than "THE WHIP."
It's in 8 Reels, just jammed full of Love, Sport, Passion, Jealousy, Crime and Thrills. No war.

For sale the world over on a territorial basis.

Many a packed house is directly traceable to an advertisement in the "News."

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 17. No. 7 February 16, 1918

Prosperity and Pictures

IT is gratifying to have the Evening Post of New York take up the motion picture in the intelligent fashion it observes.

It is also gratifying to have several leaders in the industry express themselves in its columns in an intelligent fashion.

Exhibitors who are asking themselves about the future will find much reassurance in the statement from D. W. Griffith, who has seen much of Europe and of European theatres under war conditions and who generally knows what he is talking about. We like his sane and repressed optimism. He says:

"We are passing through a natural period of depression just at present. We are going through a process of readjustment, due to the altered conditions of our national life. This will work itself out and then people will turn again to the houses where entertainment is to be had. I consider amusements a very serviceable part of our affairs, even in war-times, and think it poor economics to retrench along too many lines.

"The quality of America's motion picture productions is constantly improving, and that improvement is sure to find its reward in larger patronage. The turn from present conditions is likely to come any week now, and then you will see a decided improvement in all amusement enterprises."

* * * *

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, who finds that the new Rivoli has called forth—from somewhere—a new audience that has filled its seats from the opening night on, has this to say:

"The admission price brings the motion picture within the reach of all and by careful attention to the several units of our programs we manage to present an entertainment which is restful, amusing, bright and clean—in short, just the sort of diversion to take people's minds off the horrors of the war and give them two hours of much-needed relaxation.

"I think as the war proceeds the public will feel more and more the need of that sort of light entertainment and the motion picture theatres throughout the country, if properly handled, will not only do a real public service by supplying that need, but will earn a legitimate profit at the same time. Naturally if the theatres flourish the whole great industry will flourish, and that is my reason for believing that the picture business was never a sounder field for investment than it is at present and will continue to be for a long time to come."

It will be noted that Mr. Rothapfel says theatres will succeed "if properly handled."

WE heartily second the emphasis.

We believe that the soundest advice that can be offered the exhibitor or anyone else in the industry today is to add several hours to his working day.

That there is no place for the slacker in war-times is just as true in a commercial as in a patriotic way.

Work! Work harder! Conserve in everything, but work. Work doesn't add to expenses. It will add to the receipts.

And in these war-times it will behoove the manufacturer to remember that his retailer-to-the-public—the exhibitor—needs the manufacturers' help as he has never needed it before. There is no reason why the exhibitor should weather the storm alone. There is every reason why the manufacturer should want him to continue doing business and doing business profitably.

* * * *

THE Evening Post interview also contains some remarks on production which interest us exceedingly.

It is significant to note that the two producers interviewed, William Fox and Jesse L. Lasky, are as one on the future character of pictures.

"The lavish and purely spectacular," says Mr. Lasky, "have been developed almost to the limit of human ingenuity. But the merely lavish and the merely spectacular fail to thrill indefinitely.

"The public is not interested so much in how much a production costs as it is in the amount of brains and intelligence which have been applied to the expenditure of that money.

"Great plays and novels," he concludes, "will, in our case, be employed largely as the basis for many of our star vehicles."

* * * *

WILLIAM FOX is much more definite in stating the same thought. He says:

"Greater stories than ever before will be told on the screen; the themes will be closer to the heart of the American public, and the action of the photoplays will be more human. Productions, while not more lavish, will depict actual occurrences in a more convincing way than ever before.

"The great film play of the future will not necessarily be the spectacular. It will be a straightforward story, naturally acted, staged with newly invented lighting effects and directed without exaggeration. That character of story will appeal to every clean human mind."

In other words, the play will be the thing, as it always has been and always must be.

Speaking Editorially:

A Word from Calcutta

LAST week, in commenting upon the growth and size of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, it was mentioned that if all of the pages in last year's volume were laid end to end they would stretch from New York to Bombay, India, via London.

Before that comparison had chance to grow cold a copy of a magazine published in India came to our desk. One of the editorial items contained therein attracted our attention; and in our opinion the subject deserves thoughtful consideration.

In substance, it was as follows:

"We are looking now to America to rally from the first depressing effects of the war just as Great Britain has rallied. What will the United States do? Turn sour—or turn to the other cheek? We film men in India consider that we have grandstand seats, from which we can watch and judge, coldly and analytically, the rise or fall of business in the far-away countries.

"What will the United States do? We are interested because much of the film we depend upon to amuse our patrons is American made. We like the gingery productions from that country."

The Indian Gazette goes on to say that conditions in that section of the world have not been sensitive so far to the war depression, not, at least, to the great extent of the mother countries. But all eyes of India's filmdom are turned upon the United States. As a market, India isn't a gold mine. As a critic—well, we are going to watch for the subsequent issues of the Indian Gazette with what President Wilson calls "a particular and profound interest."

The Reaction Is Here

WE don't believe we are unduly hasty in stating that the reaction to war pessimism is already here.

Our correspondence indicates this; first-hand reports from typical neighborhood houses in Brooklyn has laid stress on it. "Business has never been better," one or two cheery exhibitors went so far as to say.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has pointed to the experience of England in rebounding from the first effects of war to an era of prosperity for picture amusement. We have sought, sincerely and continuously, to bring home assurance that the cycle would be duplicated here.

And now, as our interpretation of the ticker decries a bull market, we deny any feeling of haste to record the practical completion of the cycle.

Virginia Starts the Ball

THE legislative ball has started rolling. The yearly influx of censorship bills is with us.

And we fear that the records will have to list a defeat for the motion picture in the first skirmish of the spring drive.

For Virginia's politicians are entering battle with their standard bearing the alleged admission from a motion picture man that "We want censorship."

Not very encouraging business. Not at all a sign that, with our National Association and all, we have progressed very far in co-ordination of thought and action in the past few years.

The Third Liberty Loan

THE Government will soon be asking for subscriptions to a third Liberty Loan. From good sources, the whisper has gone out that the loan this time will aggregate ten billion dollars.

In the first and second loan drives film men, from producers to exhibitors, have come forward in a way that ought to make everyone connected with this big business of ours very proud and happy.

What are we going to do when the third Liberty Loan comes 'round?

There has been lots of squealing lately, from many quarters. But on the other hand, the nation is at war. The nation needs money. Lots of it!

The shoe many pinch a little bit.

Despite hardships, we believe film men will dig down—deeper than before, to be sure—but nevertheless they will dig, and they will buy bonds of the third Loan issue, and the fourth, and the fifth.

Our representatives, headed by Adolph Zukor, have told the President that we are with him.

Let's prove it!

Watching the Cat

THREE times in the last three days we have asked different film men a question something like this: "You don't seem very active just now; what are your plans?"

Three times in the last three days men have given us the same answer to the question:

"Who? Me?" they say. "Oh, I'm just waiting for the cat to jump."

Which may or may not be good business. It has always seemed to us that it doesn't do much good to know which way the cat jumped if that feline has already nabbed the prize. There's little nourishment in following anyone else's trail.

These are the times for original thinking, confident courage and sharpened wits that will enable you to "beat the cat to it."

Only—jump forward; never to the rear.

WE will, in 1918, if the prophesies come true, say goodbye to the "million-dollar" spectacle. We will stop circusing the trade and the public; and so, in one way, we will stop making the public laugh at us. We will put away the ballyhoo and the bag of tricks and tell the plainly human stories of life in a plainly human way.

And the greatest of all the results will be this: that by making the play the thing we shall put the star and the star's salary back where each belong. We shall first acquire great stories and then select the star to fit them—reversing the wrong process of today.

Not in 1918, perhaps—but the time will come.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

LEANDER RICHARDSON has passed into the Valley.

Filmland has suffered a real loss.

Leander Richardson made friends—many of them—and kept them. But it has always seemed to us that Leander was too efficiently busy to have time for the earning of that much-abused word "Popular."

Too unassumingly quiet, too unswervingly loyal to the interests of his Chief. Leander Richardson gained sincere admiration—where he might have had hollow praise.

Sturdy, strong, smiling—

Leander Richardson has passed into the Valley.

* * * *

FATE seems to have worn a wry smile when she chose the same sheet of the calendar to record the passing of Leander Richardson and the withdrawal of William A. Brady from World Film.

It's over quite a stretch of years that it might have been said that Leander Richardson was William A. Brady's best friend—and employee; and William A. Brady was Leander Richardson's best friend—and employer.

* * * *

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S resignation from a $100,000 a year job makes interesting reading. His new plans are interesting, also. But Interest with a capital "I" is spelled for us—and we feel sure for you—in the interview on producing conditions that he times with the resignation.

Remember our little "Practical Play For Busy Producers" last week? We've got another one planned for next week.

But in between the Brady interview says all of the things we said last week, a few of the things we are going to say in the weeks to come—and some things we wouldn't have the nerve to say at any time.

Because we are mere trade paper persons. "Pish, tush," a magnate is apt to say to us when we tell him a little common sense in his studio could save him his war tax three times over.

But William A. ought to know.

And we dare anyone to "Pish, tush!" him.

* * * *

BROTHER BRADY doesn't confine his remarks to producing conditions. He has a few words to say regarding the National Association, about his fellow manufacturers and—well, about everything.

And everything with typical William A. Brady ginger. You'd better read it now.

* * * *

THIS week our "Feature Article" goes out into the broad highways. "Why is a Salesman?" it asks.

But that is only because a short question looks better in the heading. The article itself doesn't exactly ask "Why on earth are film salesmen," nor "Why are film salesmen on earth?"

No, it merely intends to throw a broad questioning beam on the general methods of selling a motion picture.

The conditions shown in the article are pretty typical of affairs in many sections that we happen to know. Of course, it doesn't apply to every section, to every exchange nor to every salesmen.

This last being said to forestall the flood of indignant letters from some of the really top-notch, A1 managers and salesmen we have in this jamboreed fillum game.

CARL LAEMMLE breaks into print rather broadly this issue. First there's an interesting interview on general picture conditions, then there's a William A. Johnston interview draped in horse-shoe shape around a Harry Palmer cartoon. And then there's a story about how Arthur Leslie's guiding hand enabled President Wilson to mark his "X" on that Laemmle album to Pershing. Being, we are told, the second time in as many weeks that President Wilson has done something or other for Carl.

* * * *

THAT'S a pretty censorship mess they are having down in Virginia. It makes a readable story, if not an entirely new one.

For the reformers (?) haven't changed their spots, and the methods being used in Virginia are the same old hack collection of weird and ridiculous untruths. Lobbying for motion picture censorship bills doesn't show a new trick as the years roll by.

* * * *

AS we go to press Washington administrators of one thing and another are still making up their chameleon-like minds—so we can't say definitely that the Monday holidays are over.

But it is as near to being certain as anything can be in these war times. Back to the routine sort of existence we shall go.

We know of a number of exhibitors who squealed a blue streak when the one-day-a-week fuel holiday was proposed who will yell even louder now that they are off.

For in more than one instance the exhibitors found that throwing an extra holiday in the week gave them just the difference between "breaking even" and clearing a profit.

Figure it out for yourself: Just add an average dull Monday and Tuesday business and then balance it against a packed-to-the-doors holiday house from noon to eleven.

THOMAS D. SORIERO, the New England exhibitor, was a visitor to MOTION PICTURE NEWS office last week. Soriero is one of those ever-thinking type of exhibitors who are a delight to meet.

He has a story in this issue on what picture people are doing to drive the dimes back to vaudeville. It's worth reading.

Manager Soriero has promised us other articles that you should look forward to. They are the product of an unusual first-hand experience. At his Park theatre in Boston, this exhibitor caters to an upper-level audience. His Lowell houses, however, get their patronage from a strictly factory-town class.

The varying methods of appeal are interesting—to all of us; the lessons taught by experience are of value—to other exhibitor readers.

Why The Film Salesman?

By Guy Leavitt

[Editor's Note—Perhaps all salesmen are not in the classification outlined in this fact story from the Midwest. Indeed, as we go to press a letter comes to our desk from a salesman in the South, who says: "The present time motion picture representative to be successful must be straightforward, have character and personality. He must be able to explain the merits of his wares to an exhibitor without resorting to the tactics of putting every production that has ever been made 'on the pan,' stating that everything is rotten but what he is trying to sell."

The frankness of the following article leads us to believe that, as has happened with previous articles of our "From the Field" series, no small storm of criticism both for and against the writer's viewpoint will be forthcoming.]

TWELVE motion picture film salesmen sat about a stove in the Hotel Keeler, Grand Island, Neb., one cold night last week.

Three motion picture exhibitors busied themselves in their theatres, entertaining their patrons. Little they knew of the army of film salesmen that would pour in upon them the next morning! More than that, little did they care!

For be it known, the Grand Island exhibitors, and all other exhibitors in the Middle West, big and little, are expert at dealing with film salesmen. Why? Simply because they have to deal with so many.

"I was in the business just twenty-five minutes when I received my first call from a film salesman," said an exhibitor, telling of his experiences. "I had been in to the exchanges to book my first few pictures. I felt honored at the prompt attention paid me by this salesman and readily signed some contracts with him. Before the day was out I was dismayed.

"At one time I looked up from my desk and there, sticking their heads in the doorway to my tiny office under the machine booth, were three salesmen. Eight called on me that first day. Now film salesmen are as common to me as are my trips to the postoffice—about five a day."

"Sure, I can go out on the streets of my town almost any day and shoot from two to six film salesmen if I had a mind to," said another exhibitor. "They are more common than jack rabbits, and you know Nebraska is no back number when it comes to jack rabbit population."

Film salesmen admit it. They admit they are numerous. More than that, partly because they are so numerous, they admit their number is guilty of some of the most underhanded dealing that ever degraded any business. One of the best salesmen in the Omaha territory; a man who has been on the job as long as any of them, admitted this: "There are more misrepresentations and broken promises in the motion picture film business, as practiced out of the exchanges, than in any other line of business there is."

Dream of the film salesman who finds himself in the midst of exhibitors he has cheated, swindled and filled with lies.

Here are some of the things, according to this salesman, that are common to the trade:

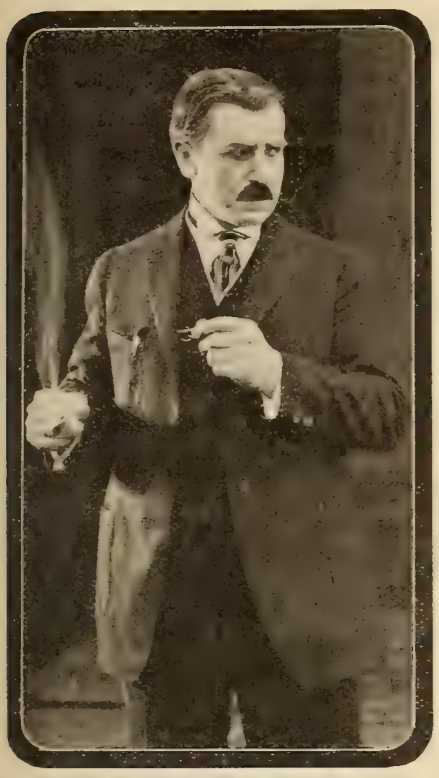
To promise a big lobby display, to promise extra paper, to promise big advertising of the film by the exchange, then, when they have secured the contract, to forget all about their promises.

To sell film, not according to the size of the town, not according to the prominence and popularity of the theatre, not with regard to how much the exhibitor can pay, but on the principle of "How much can I get for it?" "A salesman was in to see me the other day, offered me a picture for $25, and before he left he had come down to $12.50 and would undoubtedly have come lower," said an exhibitor.

To get a contract signed and use it as a club to make other exhibitors offer more. Then put the matter up to the exchange manager, who writes the first exhibitor, "Sorry, but we cannot book the picture at the price for which you contracted with my road man."

To sell a picture to an exhibitor in one town for a certain sum and go to the next town and sell it for less.

Why do they do this? Are film salesmen naturally a low class of brigands, lying in wait to take advantage of the poor, innocent exhibitor? The film salesmen deny they are brigands by nature, and they are right.



Here is why they take such steps:

"For every day the exhibitor has open, here are twenty film salesmen waiting to get his contract for that day. I've got to make a showing, so I'll do almost anything to get his business. If we get him once, he'll be a regular patron. Over production! That's the trouble. We shove film at the exhibitor, we'll almost give it to him, just to keep it off our shelves!" Thus one road man—one who has been on the road for years, gave his reason. "Why isn't the class of film salesmen higher? Because we are paid less than salesmen for any other business. We get from $20 to $40 a week, and our job is nothing but a temporary affair anyway," said another.

In the Omaha territory it is unusual for one film salesman to stay with one company for a year, although there are several that have been in the same territory for several years.

"The higher-ups in New York invest a lot of money in a lemon, and then tell us to urge the exhibitor to put it on for extra days. After that they want us to go again to that exhibitor and get business!" said another salesman, quoting an instance of where such a "lemon" was urged on the exhibitor and later a division manager for the company admitted they knew it was "a rotten picture, but we had to get our money out of it." The picture in this instance proved a boomerang, the exchange losing several good customers.

Ask an exchange manager about the Exhibitor:

Oh, hell; You said that last time, and all I got was five tin cans filled with the worst picture we ever put on.

situation, and what does he say?

"None of my men practice such things; I'd fire 'em in a minute. We have one price for every town, and that price goes. The salesman who goes out and sells film at a higher rental than the exhibitor can pay and make a profit is the poorest kind of a salesman an exchange can have. We can't see the exhibitor personally, we have to depend upon our salesmen. I am square with the exhibitor, and expect my salesmen to be square with him. But you ought to see some of the stuff the exhibitor pulls over on me! Signs a contract for my picture on a certain day, then along comes a salesman for another exchange and he ignores my contract to sign for a cheaper picture, later taking the pains to write me he made a mistake and overlooked the fact he had booked the other picture—etc., etc., etc."

All of which is well and good. But when a number of salesmen out of Omaha were asked about conditions, they substantially upheld the one who said, "There are more misrepresentations and broken promises in the film game than in any other line of business."

Dave Block, sales manager for the Triangle exchange in Omaha, has been in the territory for three years.

"We haven't a salesman on the road; I'm doing it all right from my little desk here in the office," he proclaimed the other day. "I know the exhibitors after three years calling on them; I can call them by their first names. I can write a personal letter that will be as real as if I were talking to them. I know exactly what I am offering, and there is no chance for a slip on our deals. We have never enjoyed better business and it is getting better every day.

"I don't say we won't have salesmen later on. We probably will, but I will pay close attention to their goings and comings.

"I stayed in this territory for three years by being square. I count every exhibitor in the territory my friend. I can look back over my record and be proud." Mr. Block admitted most film salesmen couldn't look back over their records and be proud—they'd be scared of the Judgment day.

A common story in the Omaha territory is of a salesman who sold an exhibitor at one price and went to the next town, where he sold it at one-half that price. The wronged exhibitor threatened to shoot the salesman on sight. The salesman still travels out of Omaha—but he doesn't call on this particular exhibitor.

Another film salesman lasted about a week by going to exhibitors in bone-dry Nebraska and offering them drinks from a bottle of whiskey

Salesman:

Our company will give you the Statue of Liberty, the U. S. Mint and the White House for a lobby display. Anything else you want? Give you that too.

before he talked film.

Several things stand out in a review of film salesmanship:

There are too many film salesmen.

There are too many pictures. There is too much cut-throat competition.

All resulting in underhanded tactics that degrade the trade; that would be a disgrace to any business, and that must be eliminated before the motion picture industry can rest on the secure foundation that is certain to be its position within a few years.

Betzwood Film Enters Industry

ANNOUNCEMENT of the organization of the Betzwood Film Company, of Philadelphia, was made this week by Clarence Wolf, president of the company, from headquarters in the banking establishment of the Wolf Brothers & Co., in the Empire Building in the Quaker City.

The initial step in the enterprise was the purchase outright and for cash of the Betzwood plant from Siegmund Lubin. The plant covers over 400 acres, with three-quarters of a mile fronting on the Schuylkill River, about a mile from Valley Forge and twenty miles from Philadelphia. There is a Pennsylvania Railroad station on the grounds, with a Philadelphia and Reading station several hundred feet from the gates. Daylight studios with room for production of any size, and equipped with up-to-the-minute lighting systems; separate dressing rooms for companies and storage structures with plenty of sets are located on the grounds.

At the technical end of affairs the Betzwood plant has Ira M. Lowry, whose picture, "For the Freedom of the World," is now being shown throughout the country. Leonard A. Blumberg and Norman Jeffries are also connected with the new organization.

One interesting point in the proposed operations of the Betzwood plant is that the company will not engage at the offset any recognized stars.

THE editors desire to express thanks for the stills used to illustrate this article to the following producers: Universal, for the triangular scene on the opposite page, a scene from "Madame Spy"; Paralta for the scene in the upper left hand corner of this page, a scene from Henry Walthall's "His Robe of Honor," and the Fox Film Corporation for the picture in the upper right hand corner, which is from "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," featuring George Walsh.

Crandall Closes Realty Deal

Crandall Theatre Company Passes Under Control of the Washington Exhibitor, in Association with Bulkleys

HARRY M. CRANDALL, head of the Crandall circuit of theatres in Washington, D. C., has returned to the Capital City following a visit to New York, where he closed some important film contracts and secured title to the new Metropolitan theatre, now building in Washington.

The latter deal, which is considered the biggest event of the year in Washington theatrical and real estate circles, includes the purchase by Mr. Crandall, Barry Bulkley and R. W. Bulkley of all right and title in the Crandall Theatre Company, controlling the new Metropolitan. The new house is at F and Tenth Streets, North West, and was to have been opened in March, but a partial collapse of the roof last week will delay the opening about two months. When it throws open its doors the Metropolitan will be under the direction of Mr. Crandall.

The new officers of the company are Harry M. Crandall, president; Barry Bulkley, vice president and secretary, and R. W. Bulkley, treasurer, who, together with Peter A. Drury and Michael J. Keane, of the Merchants' Bank, constitute the Board of Directors. In the transaction Peter A. Drury conveyed to Harry M. Crandall nineteen parcels of real estate for a consideration of $175,000. The capitalization of the new Crandall Theatre Company is placed at $700,000.

In addition to the Metropolitan theatre, Messrs, Crandall, B. and R. W. Bulkley and A. E. Beitzell have purchased outright the recently opened and finely appointed Crandall's Knickerbocker theatre, at Columbia Road and Eighteenth Street, Washington. Messrs. Tucker K. Sands, Fred S. Swindell and A. Muehleisen have retired from this corporation. The capitalization of Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre Company is placed at $250,000.

Upon his return to Washington from New York Mr. Crandall expressed much gratification at the outcome of the above transactions. "The addition of the Metropolitan theatre augments and properly cements the Crandall circuit of theatres in Washington," said Mr. Crandall, "and gives me one of the strongest chains of motion picture houses in the country. Each and every one of these theatres is a representative house and is absolutely owned by myself and my associates. The Crandall Theatre Company is not a mere booking organization; it absolutely controls every house booked by it and owns more theatres than any other firm or company in Washington."

Selznick Backs Up Crandall

Says Fair Dealing Between Producer and Exhibitor Is Not Unknown—Agrees with Crandall in Statements

LEWIS J. SELZNICK this week said, in reference to H. M. Crandall's statement last week:—"I have read with intense interest the statement in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS of that eminent exhibitor, H. M. Crandall, concerning his splendid chain of motion picture theatres in Washington, D. C.

"My hat is off to Mr. Crandall!

"Mr. Crandall's remarks are an able exposition of the progressive conduct of a big business. They are of a special significance, in view of the many less business-like contradictory statements which have been given out concerning the relationship between the big producer and the exhibitor.

"Mr. Crandall states that 'he has never been bulldozed by producer or exchange' and that 'he has been oversold at times, but has also been undersold at times.' He also says that 'he has always obtained fair adjustments' from the exchanges when he has sought them. This is a fine, fair and square statement, straight from the shoulder. But, in justice to Mr. Crandall—and in all my experience in the motion picture business I have never met a fairer man than Mr. Crandall—I wish to record that Mr. Crandall has modestly told only part of the truth.

"The whole truth is that Mr. Crandall has voluntarily raised the price he has paid me for pictures in the past. Let the strife breeders take note of that fact. Isn't it a complete contradiction of the usual representation of the relation existing between exhibitor and producer? Here is the result. If Mr. Crandall were to inform me that he was paying too great a price for my pictures, and that in consequence he required an adjustment of prices, he would find me ready and willing to accommodate him and happy to do so. When a man has raised the price he is paying me voluntarily, he will never have to ask the second time for an adjustment on what he considered an unfair price.

"There are all sorts of men in the motion picture industry. If more of them were imbued with the fair spirit of H. M. Crandall and conducted their business along the same principles of rock bottom justice and fair play, there would be less talk of trouble between exchange and exhibitor, and there would be fewer calamity howlers."

Lesser Buys Series of Re-Issues

Sol L. Lesser announces that he has closed a contract with Y. Freeman, of S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., for the Hart-Fairbanks-Keenan-Talmadge re-issues which have been released on the Triangle program. By virtue of this deal, Mr. Lesser becomes sole owner of all the re-issues featuring the above stars. It is announced that the price which changed hands runs into six figures.

New Corporations

THE following new corporations within the industry were included in the records of the Corporation Trust Company, of Jersey City, for the week ending January 26:

DELAWARE

EDWARD WARREN PRODUCTIONS, INC. To conduct public and private theatricals and other entertainments; incorporated for $5,000 at Dover. Arthur W. Britton, Samuel B. Howard and George V. Reilly, all of New York, are the interest parties.

BRANDYWINE MOVIES PICTURE COMPANY. To exhibit moving pictures and other amusements. Incorporated for $50,000 at Wilmington. Emily M. Anderson, Evelyn Culver and Aaron Finger, all of Wilmington, are the incorporators.

MAINE

MASTERCRAFT PHOTOPLAY CORPORATION. To exhibit and deal in motion pictures, all kinds of manufacturing, trading, contracting, building, and do all things incident. Incorporated for $1,000,000 at Kittery. Horace Mitchell, Kittery, Maine; Fred R. Jefferson, Allston, Mass.; Edward H. Wood, Wellington, Mass., are the incorporators.

NEW JERSEY

COURTLAND EXHIBITING COMPANY. Amusement enterprises; incorporated for $100,000 at Jersey City. H. Charles Hespe, 390 Central avenue, Jersey City, N. J.; Frances E. Hespe, 390 Central avenue, Jersey City, N. J., and William Hackett, 8 Charles street, Jersey City, N. J., are the incorporators.

Hammell Manages General Film Office

John A. Hammell, associate manager of Pathe Film Company, has resigned his position with Pathe to become general office manager of the General Film Company.

Mr. Hammell is one of the pioneers in the motion picture business, and he is one of the most popular managers in the industry.

His first experience in the film business was as an exhibitor in New York, leaving this to become general manager of the Moss and Brill chain of vaudeville and picture houses. In his new position, as manager of the New York sales forces of the General Film Company, Mr. Hammell has many ideas and innovations which will soon be put in force.

Sweaters Supplied to Army Men

The Stage Women's War Relief Association, of 356 Fifth Avenue, New York, is bending every effort to keep men who have joined the colors from the motion picture industry well supplied with sweaters and other things necessary to comfort.

Men from the industry now in the ranks have been requested to send their names to Mrs. Julia Hurley, of the Stage Women's War Relief Association, and they will get special attention.

Exhibitor Joins Colors

George C. Brown, formerly assistant manager of the Victoria theatre, a vaudeville and motion picture house of Baltimore, has been appointed to the Purchasing Bureau of the Ordnance Department of the U. S. Government.

Brady Plans to Cut Out the Waste

In Withdrawing from Active Service in World Film Producer Aims to Continue Making Pictures Unrestricted—Steger Rumored as World Successor

WILLIAM A. BRADY has resigned as director-general of World Film Corporation, and statements which he has made concerning his withdrawal and future intentions indicate that his decision is another feather in the cap of "efficiency," beginning with cutting out the waste all the way from scenario to finished product, and then through the distribution courses.

However, Mr. Brady does not completely sever with World, as he retains his interest in the company and a seat as director, according to announcements. His latest move, after two years as head of the World organization, is to test out the idea of conservation as applied to the production of pictures.

Time Clock for Stars

The announced fact that World Film Corporation could ill afford, considering conditions at present, to pay Mr. Brady $100,000 a year as director-general appears to have less bearing on the case following the producer's statement to MOTION PICTURE NEWS February 2. In this interview he asserted that his plans include an attempt to avoid precedents, which, in effect, will make conditions as set forth in the article, "The Solemn Truth Satirized," in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, impossible.

"Yes, I am going to continue to produce unrestricted by any rules or precedents," said Mr. Brady. "A man said to me today: 'You say in one breath that things are wrong and can't go on, and in the next you say you are going to continue producing. How do you reconcile the two statements?' My answer is that I am going to continue producing, but on an equitable basis. I don't want or I don't propose to stand around a studio and see a star come in at 11 o'clock, do a couple of scenes, go out at 12 o'clock for lunch, stay away for a couple of hours more, come back and put in an hour or two and then have an engagement which requires immediate departure.

"I have been supposed to install an efficient system, and I have got tired of trying to put up with some things as I have outlined. If a man or woman is to be paid five hundred or a thousand dollars a week by a company for whose expenditures I am responsible the player must deliver the goods.

People Avoid Real Issue

"I took the job as president of the National Association, and have tried to make good. I found all the people arguing about conditions, but nobody ever approached the producing condition. Asked to get at the root of things they sidestepped. I have traveled over the country talking to exhibitors, spending my own money, trying to get them to harmonize. You know those efforts have been successful. But it is different with the producers and distributors. At a dinner the other night at which all the heads of the business were present I talked about the fundamental wrongs of the trade. When I got through I was alone.

"I have resigned a position paying a hundred thousand dollars a year because I don't feel that I can earn it, as conditions are at present. You know if a stage producer puts on a play and he feels that it is not going to be a success at first he can explain the situation to his players and obtain a temporary concession in the way of salaries. Do you think anything like that can be done in the picture business. Conditions mean nothing to some motion picture players, they will tell you they can't cut salaries.

"As head of the industry, I am supposed to represent the exhibitor as well as anybody else. The exhibitor doesn't believe that. The only way I can prove I am in earnest about my public job is by throwing up my private job. I know that this business needs reconstruction. If you don't have reconstruction you are going to have bankruptcy—just as sure as we are sitting in this room.

Big Future for Films

"I know I am connected with one of the greatest businesses in the world. There is no business in the world to-day that has so great a future as the motion picture business.

"For the past eighteen months I have been in a studio working with my coat off, and I know what goes on in studios. I have seen with my own eyes what some of these people do. I know many industrious and conscientious directors, actors and studio employees—people who really work. I am not referring to these, because their honest efforts are blocked by the incompetent ingrates who refuse to give value received. Howard Kyle is one of the foremost figures and a man of influence in the Actors' Equity. Recently I put Mr. Kyle in a picture—the first he has appeared in—and did it with the particular purpose of giving Mr. Kyle the opportunity to observe at first hand in the studios the deplorable conditions which the producer is forced to stomach in his relations with many overpaid actors who hardly earn their salt.

"The exhibitors got together. Now, I am going to make the producers get together. I am going to try and lick producing and distributing conditions.

"I am leaving the World Film in excellent shape. The product is provided for up to June 1. 'Stolen Orders,' on which I am working, is not to be a World Film production. It is an all-star subject, on the lines of 'The Whip.' I have met the expense of the subject out of my own pocket.

"I shall continue as president of the National Association until August, and I am going to work along the same lines as in the past."

In connection with the rumor that Julius Steger is to be the successor of Mr. Brady as director-general of World Film Corporation, a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS asked the former to verify the report.

Mr. Steger was reluctant to volunteer information, neither denying nor affirming the rumor. He did admit, however, that negotiations to that effect were pending, and his decision in the matter will largely depend upon Joseph M. Schenck, who is Mr. Steger's friend and business associate.

Mr. Steger feels that nothing could induce him to assume the great responsibilities of that position if, thereby, his partnership with Mr. Schenck would have to be severed. He wishes to retain the privilege of serving Mr. Schenck's interests in an advisory capacity, thereby insuring for himself Mr. Schenck's co-operation in fulfilling his duties as director-general of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Schenck is taking an active part in the negotiations now pending.

Directors Score Social Hit

Initial Supper-Dance of Motion Picture Directors' Association Sets the Town Talking Stars and Officials Present

DIRECTORS, ever on the qui vive for originality and perfection in their accomplishments, had their first big social inning in New York the evening of January 26, when the Motion Picture Directors' Association held its initial supper-dance at the Biltmore Hotel.

To say that the affair was a big success is but a vague compliment to the directors, who threw not only their efforts into making the event one of the most talked-about receptions of the season, but their personalities as well. To revert to tried and true studio language, "the blowout was a riot." Already one of the strongest club organizations within the motion picture industry, it is safe to say the Motion Picture Directors' Association was given added impetus through this ten-strike carefully planned as the best thing of its kind ever held in film circles, and carried out along the same lines.

In speaking of the supper-dance it is well to start with the directors who were prime movers in the affair, and to whom unusual credit is due. Among them are Wally Van, William F. Haddock and Carroll Fleming. They worked thriftily and with zeal unceasing for the success of the event. After it is over, and the great babble of complimentary exclamations has been noted, it is difficult to think of "work" being associated with the reception. But, nevertheless, the directors behind it did their full share, and are no more than repaid in reaping the harvest of "well-

To begin with, they called upon Joseph Urban, considered by some the dean of scenic designers, to do the special decorations. The peculiar charm of Urban curtains, hangings, draperies and decorations is well known throughout the entire theatrical world, and the directors are of the opinion his reputation will not suffer through his efforts in providing something unusual for the supper-dance. The music was by Nicholas Orlando, and further instrumentalities in the way of skirls and syncopation were provided by a Scotch bagpipe band, composed of champions of Scotland and a colored jazz band that jazzed through melody after melody in regular style.

To supplement this were Spanish dancers from "The Land of Joy," a patriotic novelty in which a flag shower, including flags of all the allies, figured prominently, and colored entertainers. Dancing, of course, cut a large swath in the trend of events, and in the midst of this were noted not alone directors but film stars of international reputation and officials and others high in picture circles.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Johnson, Doris Kenyon, Nat C. Goodwin, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Jarvis, Grace Valentine, Sheldon Lewis, Virginia Pearson, I. E. Chadwick, Geo. LeGuere, Mr. and Mrs. William Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Loeb, Pearl White, Lord Innes Ker, Baron DeWitt, Lois Meredith, Tom Moore, Betty Howe, Miriam Nesbit, Mr. and Mrs. Max Karger, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rowland, Jules Rancourt, Fred Block, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Terris, G. M. Anderson, Lawrence Webber, Capt. E. H. Lambert, Raymond McKee, Mr. and Mrs. James Huff, Lieut, Earl Felter, Gertrude McCoy, Phil Lang, Sam Spedon, Nathan Burkan, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Selden, Capt. Lansky, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Blache, Ted Barron, Crawford Kent, Elsie Ferguson, J. F. Chalmers, Carlton King, J. W. Rumsey, William Russell, Carlyle Blackwell, O. A. C. Lund, Geo. L. Derr.

Clara Kimball Young, Pauline Frederick, Willard Mack, Harry Garson, Oscar Apfel, S. L. Rothapfel, Alice Joyce, Antonio Moreno, Duncan McRea, James Kirkwood, Maude Fealy, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Arthur Albertson, Courtland Young, Normal Selby, A. M. Werner, Mr. and Mrs. Chas Abrams, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morey, C. A. Kracht, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Willat, Mr. and Mrs. John Rock, Daniel Frohman, Madge Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Losee, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Connelly, Alice Hollister, Herbert Brenon, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Selznick, John Emerson, Anita Loos, Ouida Bergere, Marjorie Rambeau, Alan Dale, Sonia Markova, Lieut. Albert Kaufman, Chas. Maigne, Jack Pickford, Olive Thomas, Owen Moore, Victor Morley, Jules Powers, Edwards Davies, Valentine Grant, June Caprice, Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo and Samuel Goldfish.

The officers of the association are: J. Searle Dawley, director; Maurice Tourneur, assistant director; Edwin Carewe, technical director; James Vincent, scenarioist; Robert G. Vignola, treaturer; Paul Scardon, inner guard; Wally Van, outer guard, and Sid Olcott, Barry O'Neill and Travers Vale, trustees.

Wally Van was chairman of the dance committee; Vignola and Crane, tickets; Carroll Fleming, door; James Vincent, refreshments; Wally Van, music; Dell Henderson, supper; Sid Olcott, reception. These chairmen had scores of able directors as assistants, but lack of space crowds their names out of this issue.

President Signs Laemmle Album

Gold-Mounted Booklet with Signatures of Prominent Men Sent to France for Delivery to General Pershing in Person

THE Laemmle gold mounted album from the house of Tiffany has been dispatched to France, for delivery to General Pershing as a message of good cheer from America, and in it are the names of numerous men prominent in affairs of the United States. President Wilson personally autographed the album, and commended Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., highly for his suggestion which resulted in the materialization of the album.

Mr. Laemmle last week received word from Washington that the album had been signed by the President and that it had been sent to France by Secretary of War Baker for delivery to General Pershing. It is expected that the American commander will receive the token of esteem and cheer this week, or next week at the latest.

Universal's director-general conceived the idea of sending an album, with autographs of prominent men in the country's affairs, a few months ago, and at that time was roundly praised for his move. An order was immediately placed with Tiffany for a booklet appropriate in every sense of the word, and following its completion it was sent to Washington for the signature of the President. It is said that the nation's head was greatly pleased with the idea, and did not hesitate to place his name with the others. In addition, he caused a letter to be sent to Carl Laemmle, commending him, and conveying the further information that the album was being sent to France in the care of a responsible representative of the Government, who would personally see that General Pershing received it.

This latest patriotic move of Carl Laemmle has been given much attention all over the country, not alone by the public which has read about it in the news columns, but by the editors of the leading newspapers, who have taken the action as another of the public-spirited ideas advanced by Mr. Laemmle. The result has been editorials in many of the newspapers, in which Universal's chief was praised not a little.

Motion Picture News of February 2 carried a notice which President Laemmle issued to Universal employees, in which it was made clear the company was entirely out of sympathy with the committees from the various industries which were flying toward Washington to protest against the order of the fuel administrator. The fact that the order had the approval of President Wilson was pronounced as quite enough for Universal. A letter of acknowledgment and thanks was also received by Mr. Laemmle from Washington concerning the notice.

When requests from the Capital were sent out to producers, asking them to use trailers on films to help Food Controller Hoover, Universal was among the first to receive attention, and has thrown itself into the cause wholly.

Joseph Kaufman Buried Sunday

Funeral services for Joseph Kaufman, director for Famous Players, who died Saturday morning, were held at Campbell Funeral Church, Broadway and Sixty-sixth street, Sunday. Reverend Dr. Goldsmith of the Free Tabernacle officiated.

Mr. Kaufman was the husband of Ethel Clayton, the actress, and had been one of Famous Players' leading directors. He was founder of the Motion Picture Directors' Association. He was born in Washington, D. C., in 1882.

Noted Writer and Critic Dies

LEANDER RICHARDSON, publicity director for World Film Corporation, dramatic critic, author and newspaper man, died early Saturday morning at his residence, 130 West Forty-seventh street, New York, after an illness of little more than a week, due to bronchial-pneumonia. He is survived by his widow, two daughters and two sons. Funeral service were held from St. Malachy's Roman Catholic Church, Monday morning. Interment was in St. Raymond's Cemetery, Westchester, New York. The ballbearers were Daniel Frohman, William A. Pinkerton, Henry Dixie, Edward E. Rice, Al Hayman, A. O. Brown, Robert McIntyre, Charles Stone, Joseph Lowe and Frederick McCloy. The deceased was sixty-two years of age.

Mr. Richardson was a widely known dramatic critic and writer. Three years ago he entered the editorial branch of the motion picture business, and for that period of time was publicity director for World Film Corporation. He was a close friend of William A. Brady, Daniel Frohman and was personally acquainted with every one of importance in the theatrical world. He was the son of Albert Dean Richardson, for many years editor of the New York Tribune. He was born in Cincinnati, and his first introduction in the theatrical business was his affiliation with Charles Albert Byrne, A. C. Wheeler and Archie Gordon, and others who at that time were heads of the New York Dramatic Times, the leading theatrical publication of that time.

Mr. Richardson wrote several works of note some of which were adapted for stage presentation. Among his books are, "The Dark City," "Lord Dunmersley" and "As Ye Sow." His "Olivette," "The Snake Charmer," "Anselma" and "The Nominee" were adapted and presented on the stage. "Under the City Lamps" and "The Millionaire" were written also by Mr. Richardson.

Mr. Richardson lived for many years with Captain Gustave Frohman, father of Charles and Daniel Frohman. For many years Mr. Richardson was dramatic critic and general news writer on the staff of the New York Times, and as writer on current topics of the stage for the Morning Telegraph. He was one of the foremost men of the times in the profession of journalism. With the death of Mr. Richardson the theatrical world loses one of its foremost authorities and critics.

Cleveland Exhibitors Appear Satisfied

Motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland are more than satisfied with the results of the Tuesday closing proposition. All of them reported excellent business for Monday. In most cases they said that they had done fully as well in the one day as they usually do in two days, and several exhibitors confessed to a margin over and above that taken in in the two days. So the storm, which broke so violently on Saturday, subsided into a sudden calm by the middle of the week.

Virginia Fights Censor Bill

Exhibitors Gather in Richmond and Ask That Measure Be Amended to Strike Out Three Censors—National Board Favored

THE State of Virginia this week comes more closely face to face with censorship by three censors appointed by the governor than it has yet experienced. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Virginia is, however, strongly opposing the pending legislation, and telegrams, as announced in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, have been sent broadcast by Jake Wells in an effort to get the exhibitors together to combat the alleged evil.

It is contended by the Virginia exhibitors that censorship is unnecessary by three persons in a state, as it is discriminatory. They are not opposed, however, to having the pictures they use passed upon by the National Board of Review.

It seems though, the exhibitors say, that nothing but a miracle can stop the present movement on the part of the Legislature. Up to January 29 it appeared there was a possible chance of killing the bill. On that day, however, any possible effort that might have been made towards helping the legislators to see the matter in the same light as the exhibitors was probably set at naught by the assertion of Jake Wells, in opening the conference which had been called in Richmond. He expressed himself in favor of "censorship," and the assembled exhibitors endorsed the move. The House and Senate patrons will now be urged to amend the censorship bill so as to read: "To bar all pictures unless passed upon by the National Board of Review or by some board of censors or review created by the laws of some state of the American Union."

This, the exhibitors explain, will do away with a three-person censorship, which has been proven practically worthless in other states. They cited Maryland as an example, in which state they claim the censor board has been a financial failure as well as a political blunder.

It remains now for the legislators to interpret the resolution adopted by the exhibitors in the proper light, which will strike out the clause for three censors and substitute one permitting the National Board to view the pictures and pass upon them. The opinion seems to be, however, that the legislators will not swerve from the original bill, though clinging to the exhibitors' statement, "We want censorship."

A representative of organized labor, present at the Richmond meeting, spoke against censorship, declaring it to be against the spirit and feeling of any true American. He denounced censorship itself from every angle and added that there is no stability in it because no two people even censor alike. He said that one film denounced by a local Richmond newspaper had been viewed by himself and his wife and that they were still wondering what there could possibly be that was objectionable in that film.

Carl Senning, of the Fox Film Corporation, summed the case up for the manufacturers. He pointed out that the proposed censorship measure would cost the industry approximately $30,000 to $35,000 per year—an expense which would fall heavily on the exhibitors of the State, since the film producers themselves would be unable to stand this extra tax. This, in turn, he pointed out, would fall upon the people in increased admissions to theatres. He also asked the committee for time to prove by an appeal to the people themselves that censorship is not a popular measure, but is the reformer's plea for publicity. This drew down the wrath of Mr. Wells, who publicly rebuked Mr. Senning on the floor of the Senate, stating that none of the Wells's theatres would be used for the purpose of getting a public expression from the people along these lines.

The adherents of the bill then took the floor, and by inference and such evidence as they could bring to bear endeavored to show the Senate Committee how baneful is the influence of the "movies" upon children.

The second witness to be called by the reformers was a woman who said she did not represent organized society, but was a mother pleading for mothers; that she and other mothers of Richmond had been lured to go to see a motion picture recently that they believed to be especially good for children. But when they got inside of the theatre her child and some of the others cried and hid their eyes at the cruelty depicted on the screen—that some of the children did not sleep for three nights afterward. She implored the legislators to stop such pictures for the children's sakes.

Her description so fitted "Jack and the Beanstalk" that Mr. Senning rose to his feet; offered to have the film brought down specially by special messenger from Washington, to show to the Senate Committee, so that they could judge what a horrible scene it was that the woman was describing. The chairman of the Senate Committee told Mr. Senning that there was no

THE FUEL SITUATION

Probable Let-up Next Monday

ANNOUNCEMENTS from Washington last Saturday indicated that the fuel holiday would be called off next Monday. Inasmuch as the printers were permitted to work this Monday there is every likelihood that all industries will be allowed to resume work next week.

Mary MacLaren With Universal

Differences Between Star and Producer Are Bridged, and Plans Are Laid for New Picture —Two Directors

MARY MacLAREN, former Bluebird star, who within the past twelve months has had court difficulties with Universal, has signed a new contract with that company, which gives the organization her services exclusively for a period of a year.

Miss MacLaren left the Universal ranks about a year ago, following which difficulties arose when she attempted, Universal declares, to sign contracts with another company under the name of Mary MacLaren, which name Universal claims. Before joining the company Miss MacLaren was called Mary MacDonald.

Miss Lois Weber is given credit for "discovering" Miss MacLaren. The first picture in which she appeared was "Where Are My Children," in which she had the role of a maid. Then came "Shoes," and with it a fair measure of success. Based upon a story written by Edith Wynne Herron, which appeared in Collier's, and which in turn was based upon a report made to the Chicago Vice Commission by Jane Addams of Hull House, the Bluebird feature did well when it was released in June, 1916. The feature carried with it the girl who played the stellar role.

Followed in turn "Saving the Family Name," "Wanted, a Home," "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," "Money Madness" and finally "The Plough Woman." Each of these productions added to the player's popularity, Universal asserts, and helped make her the asset the Universal considered her.

According to Carl Laemmle, president and director general of Universal, Miss MacLaren will work under the direction of either Lynn Reynolds, another prominent member of the film world to return to the Universal ranks, or Wilfred Lucas. In any event, the next few days will see the actress hard at work in the first of a series of new productions.

Farrell Goes to Select Forces

Was Formerly Manager of Metro's Boston Exchange—Louis B. Mayer Takes His Place with Latter Organization

AN interesting and important change in the personnel of the Select Pictures Corporation branch in Boston became effective February 4, when E. J. Farrell, late manager of the Metro exchange in that city, became Select's Boston manager.

Mr. Farrell has been secured, it is understood, to further the management of the corporation's rapidly growing business in the New England territory. He was probably the first traveling representative of the picture distributing organizations in the New England field, and was employed in that capacity by George Kleine when the latter established his Kosmic Film Exchange in Boston in 1909. When George Kleine sold out his business to General Film in 1910, Mr. Farrell was retained, working first in the capacity of traveling representative, then as assistant manager and finally as manager.

In connection with the change, C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager of Select, has gone to Boston to spend two or more weeks. He was accompanied by Myron Selznick, son of Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures. The younger Selznick will, it is said, spend several weeks in the Boston territory, looking after the Exhibitors' Service Department of the company.

Louis B. Mayer, formerly with Metro, has resumed the management of the Metro branch in Boston, filling the position vacated by E. J. Farrell. As his assistant Mr. Mayer will have Thomas Spry, recently with Select Pictures. While with the company in Boston Mr. Spry is said to have made such excellent progress that he was presented with a watch by Lewis J. Selznick.

Pathe Makes Several Changes

Joseph Dunn Is Named Title Editor, After Year with the Company —Winchester Does Serial Publicity

SEVERAL changes in department heads have recently been made by J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Joseph Dunn, who has been with Pathe for something over a year and as a former newspaper man has a wide acquaintance in New York, has been placed in charge of the title editing department. Mr. Berst appreciates the importance of this department, and has determined that in titles and film editing the Pathe releases shall be beyond criticism. Mr. Dunn has been in charge of the Pathe serial publicity department.

Tarleton Winchester, who, in addition to special sales and publicity work, has been the editor of the Pathe Sun has been given the serial publicity department. Mr. Winchester has been in the motion picture business for a number of years and came to Pathe about two years ago from Paramount, where he was publicity director.

Tom North becomes the editor of the Pathe Sun. Mr. North made a big hit with exhibitors in Seattle, where he was manager of the V. L. S. E. Exchange, and where he published the V-L-S-E Pals, a sheet which had wide vogue with theatre men. He has been in charge of the Pathe super-feature department.

In and Out of Town

W. H. Drummond, prominent independent buyer and distributor of Knoxville, Tenn., arrived in New York last week to look over the current features. Mr. Drummond is distributing "The Warrior" and other big features in his territory.

William Parsons, National Film Company of America, who has been in New York for several weeks arranging for the opening of "Tarzan of the Apes," returned to Los Angeles last week. Mr. Parsons will produce comedies.

Don J Bell, Bell and Howell, Chicago, returned to Chicago last week after a business trip to New York.

William A. Brady who announced last week his resignation from World Film Corporation, left last Saturday for Detroit on business.

The Virginia Convention

need of so doing since he himself has seen the picture; saw nothing objectionable in it, and would not have cut the film had he himself been censoring it for a Richmond public. Another Senator spoke up, and said: "Nor would I—I saw nothing in it which was objectionable."

Nevertheless, though thus convicted of the unreasonableness of their claim, the opponents of freedom of speech and liberty of the individual continued their tirade against motion pictures. A minister denounced them roundly. The president of a bank in Richmond who had fought as a rebel in the Civil War in commenting upon the cruelties of the Germans in the present war attributed the present degredation of woman to the evil influence of the screen upon humanity. A young physician of Richmond who said he had made an especial study of defectives ascribed much of the present mental deficiency of babies—not to their parents—but to the "movies." Thus the tidings went on until the weary committee called a halt, and declared the hearings of the Senate Committee on the question of Film Censhopship closed.

No cognizance was apparently taken by the committee of the fact that censorship is not a static quantity; that no two persons ever agree as to the moral quality of a film; that the man's or woman's judgment in viewing a film is governed by his or her environment, education or experience and travel.

Much stress was laid by the adherents upon the fact that Virginia is a sovereign State, and as such is entitled to censor her own films—with the evils of political, religious and social and perhaps racial prejudices properly camouflaged by carefully chosen phrases to hide the real underlying hydraheaded curse—censorship—which, if not stamped out by the people themselves has within itself the latest power to attack the American Independence which to a real American is treasured as his most priceless possession.

Laemmle Sees Industry Solidified

Believes Present Crisis Will Convert Motion Pictures from Inflated Bubble to Gibraltar-Like Rock—Reasserts That Waste Is Too Great

PRESIDENT AND DIRECTOR GENERAL CARL LAEMMLE, of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, last week reasserted his recently made statement that waste within the motion picture industry is too great. He still contends, also, that producers are sugaring their announcements regarding stars' salaries too much, and this has caused a souring of the general public against the industry.

However, Mr. Laemmle has announced himself as a firm optimist in the crisis which has made itself more or less known at the present time, and is sincere in his belief that in time to come the present period will be looked upon as the era which converted the motion picture from an inflated bubble to a rock-solid industry.

Ignores Opposite Assertions

Disregarding the reasons put forth by the men prominent in the field who have voiced their opinions on the present state of affairs, Mr. Laemmle again comes forward with the assertion that waste—and nothing else—is responsible for the present condition of affairs.

Waste has made the industry top-heavy, according to the Universal's head. It has piled cost expense so terrifically high as to preclude all possibility of profit for manufacturer, exchange or exhibitor. It has been the means of attracting the fly-by-nighter and the direct cause in many instances of unfair taxation by municipal and state governments.

"In spite of all we read and hear about the efficiency methods adopted by the various film organizations, there isn't another industry in the world in which waste is so common, or so complacently regarded," declared Mr. Laemmle in the course of an interview granted to a representative of this paper.

"The item of stars' salaries is an old, old story—but an all-important one, nevertheless. Needless extravagance in production is another. Excess advertising of weak productions is a third. Slipshod distributing methods a fourth—but I could go on and detail an almost unending list.

Neglect Loses Money

"Let me cite you an instance of gross negligence that recently occurred in connection with a certain big feature—what I say to you was in turn told me by one of the men connected with the organization which produced the picture.

"The producers engaged a certain world-famous star at a staggering salary. It was agreed that the player was to commence work on a certain date. Yet not until almost three weeks from the date agreed upon was the first set used in the production ready. In the meantime the star's salary had to be paid. I understand that when the picture was finally completed its cost reached a six-figure total—and not a small part of it was merely represented in the money handed to the central figure.

"Here's another instance," said Mr. Laemmle. "In reading a story published in a magazine possessing wide circulation the other day, I came across a few paragraphs telling of the terrific expense to which one company had gone to erect a set which was subsequently destroyed to obtain certain effects. Press agent camouflage? Not at all! The writer told the truth. Perfectly good money, and lots of it, did go up in smoke—and all for a scene which really could have been dispensed with, without in the slightest way detracting from the interest of the story."

Little Cost—Big Success

"You probably know that the most successful productions the industry has known, cost comparatively little. Take 'Traffic in Souls.' Not another of the many imitations that followed in its train ever came within hailing distance of the money it made. They cost anywhere from two to ten times as much as did our picture, too.

"'Where Are My Children?' is another feature that made real money. Cost? Way down in the five figures. Imitations which followed it all cost at least again as much. We produced for Jewel Productions, 'The Price of a Good Time' and right now that picture is making more money than ninety-nine out of every hundred features on the market. 'Shoes,' and such serials as 'Liberty,' 'The Voice on the Wire' and 'The Red Ace,' all made money without the necessity of our wasting fortunes in producing them.

"Frankly, we have stopped producing spectacles because the public would rather pay to see stories—stories dealing with plain people in a plain, human way. We are not paying tremendous salaries to stars for the same reason. Neither 'Where Are My Children,' 'Shoes' or 'The Price of a Good Time' contained world-famous stars, but they did contain the all-important element—the story!"

"As far as distribution is concerned, we have still much to learn from the lowliest organization in the commercial field. As far as I can see, it is the burning ambition of every fledgling film organization to immediately establish a string of exchanges reaching from New York to San Francisco, and from Chicago to Dallas.

"That the wise old policy of 'make haste slowly' is the proper one to follow, apparently never occurs to the average film head. So offices are opened and overhead piled up with the usual result.

Cut Out Weak Spots

"Manufacturers in other fields do things better. If a branch prove unprofitable, they simply withdraw from the territory until conditions are more favorable for success. The Universal has no hesitancy in declaring that it has pursued this policy from time to time. Were this practice general, the market for pictures in the various territories would not be glutted.

"What has been the result of all this extravagance, waste and bad management? The unscrupulous chap who had been living off the fat pickings of the fake mine-promoting game and the oil stock swindle drifted into the business. Thank heaven, he didn't stay long, but he remained with us long enough to do considerable harm.

"Politicians looking for bright prospects for taxation also lit upon us as fair game. The result is that we are probably the most heavily taxed of all legitimate industries.

"We've proudly proclaimed ourselves the 'fifth greatest industry' so long and so loudly that we've almost come to believe it," Mr. Laemmle concluded. "But the truth of the matter is simply this. After we've gotten down to a sane and sensible method of doing business, and by this I include all ends of the industry, we'll find that we are not the fifth nor perhaps the sixth or seventh. What we will find, however, is that we've swapped pretension for rocksolid fact—bubble inflation for genuine profit."

LIKES IT ALL

What a South Dakota Exhibitor Thinks of The News

J. C. LAKIN, president of the Cosmo Theatre Company, Inc., of Winner, South Dakota, writes:

"We take great interest in your exhibitor advertising talks and think they are a great institution in your valuable paper. We also take great interest in Mr. Rothapfel's page as well as in all your special departments and wish to compliment you on the all around make up of the NEWS. Personally I think that it is the ONLY dope on the motion picture game.

"I agree perfectly with your ideas as expressed frequently in your editorial and feel exactly as you do in regard to these many matters which are baffling so many of us today, and the quicker we exhibitors and the producers remedy these evils, which you so thoroughly cover, the better off we will all be."

Album from Universal Goes Abroad

Universal this week announced that it expects General Pershing to receive, either this week or next, the Laemmle gold mounted album containing a message of good cheer from prominent Americans.

WAR-TIME EXTRAVAGANCE

Why Running a Garage and a Picture Machine Frequently Incurs Wastage

"NOPE, we're not in the East, where every operator is an expert, and where the unions are strict with every one of them," said Manager J. H. Calvert of the Laemmle exchange in Omaha, commenting on the damage done film by the exhibitors.

"Out here the proprietor of the motion picture theatre in the small town, who is also the operator, probably runs the garage. He has distinctly original ideas about making his machine behave. Often I have gone into an exhibitor's booth, where he was worrying over his pictures being out of focus, and by wiping a spot of oil from his lens put his machine in good condition. 'And I have torn it to pieces several times, hunting for the trouble,' they said.

"Recently I bought a thousand pretty little boxes for slides, intending for them to go and come with the reels. Now I haven't a one of the thousand left.

"I wish we could tell the exhibitors in some way that we put in an order for advertising material when we get the picture; the manufacturer makes just enough advertising material to fill each demand because with the present high prices he doesn't want a lot wasted, then when we run out, what can we do, We can't get any more from headquarters, for there isn't any more. The other exchanges are having the same trouble as we are. And we can't send out a picture with no advertising. If he knew this, the exhibitor in these close, war-time days would be more careful; I know he would."

"Destroys All Confidence"

Exchangeman Uses the Term in Taking Exception to Editorial in Trade Paper — Picks the Argument to Pieces

"I TAKE exception to a recent editorial in a trade paper—not Motion Picture News—in which the exhibitor was warned not to come near the exchange, but to do business with our road men," said John W. Hicks, Jr., manager of the General exchange in Omaha, Neb.

"It is just such things as this that make the big problem in the business today. Here I am, doing my best to establish confidence between the exhibitor and the exchange; inviting exhibitors in to see me for personal chats, and along comes such advice. What are the exhibitors to think? That I am an ogre, waiting in my den to devour them?

"I was an exhibitor for years before I was an exchange manager. I can talk with the exhibitors about their theatre problems. I can, and I want to be, a personal friend of every exhibitor in my territory.

"When an exhibitor comes to the exchange he eliminates the cost of sending a road man to him. I'll be willing to sell any film just as cheaply; I'll give the exhibitor the best of everything, if he'll come to the exchange to buy it.

"The editorial warned the exhibitor not to come near the exchange, as the exchange manager would say to himself, 'Ah, he's here to buy or he wouldn't be here. I'll just stick the bayonet into him and turn it around a couple of times!'

"When an Omaha merchant goes East to sit down and talk over with the managers of the big dry goods houses his purchases for the spring season, does the manager indulge in such meditation? Do I, when an exhibitor comes in? I do not. I try my best to entertain him; I tell him in actions that I want to be his friend, that I want his confidence.

"I have just written personal letters to one hundred exhibitors, inviting them to come in, as I have something that will interest them. To show how far off that trade paper's opinion of the exhibitor is, let me tell you every one of those one hundred exhibitors answered my personal letter. Some are coming in to see me. Others sent their regrets and said why they cannot come. They appreciated my interest in them. I am working hard to establish confidence between the exchange and the exhibitor—then along comes such an editorial.

"I tell you, it is hurting the motion picture business, not helping it. And, goodness knows, the motion picture business needs helping nowadays."

Plans Progress for the Exposition

Plans for the National Motion Picture Exposition, which has been postponed from February 2 to 10 to October 5-13, are reported to be progressing nicely. The exposition will be held under the auspices of the N. A. M. P. I. and the M. P. E. L. of A.

To promote the exposition in the manner the organizations desire means a concentrated drive in all branches of the industry. President William A. Brady and Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, as well as the directors of the two national bodies concerned, believe that this could be done more advantageously in the fall when it is to be hoped that many, if not all of the problems confronting the nation at the present moment will have been effectively solved.

Bach Joins Hodkinson Forces

The sales department of the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was increased last week by the addition of W. A. Bach as assistant to Sales Manager P. N. Brinch. Mr. Bach has just finished a five months' tour of the country for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company as representative of the general manager. On this trip Mr. Bach investigated and reported on conditions in both exchanges and the territories generally and in addition established publicity and exhibitor service departments in the various branches.

Mr. Bach began his motion picture career with Uniyersal in Canada, but last April joined M. H. Hoffman at the beginning of his independent distribution plans. He left Mr. Hoffman to make a tour for the Universal, winding up that work just previous to his connection with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Finley Films Through General

L. Case Russell, who is writing the scenarios for production by Ned Finley, announced this week that the pictures will be released through General Film.

As stated previously in Motion Picture News, Mr. Finley has organized his own company, which has been incorporated, and the first picture, called "The Return of O'Garry," is now under way in North Carolina. It is understood that two productions will be released each month.

Maryland Feels Secure in Censorship

Members of the committee of the campaign against motion picture censorship in the State of Maryland are daily expecting the bill repealing the act to be introduced into the Legislature at Annapolis. The legislator who will introduce the bill has already been chosen, but his name for the present is being withheld. The exhibitors of Maryland feel that success will be theirs, and already a great sentiment has been aroused in Baltimore against the censoring of pictures, which has been going on now for nearly three years. Slides are being shown in nearly every motion picture house in Baltimore and the people are awakening rapidly to the alleged injustice of allowing three people to decide what the masses shall view.

Metro Photographer Goes to Front

Lucien Andriot, chief of the photographers who took the scenes for Metro's screen spectacle of international war events, "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet, which is now playing at the Lyric theatre, New York, is in government service and expects soon to be taking actual scenes of war at the front.

Andriot is in training to become photographer with the Aviation Corps for service in France.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Laemmle?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

"GOOD afternoon. Mr. Laemmle," we said, poking our head in his office door. "We thought you'd like to know that we've just interviewed you."

Mr. Laemmle arose quickly—he doesn't have to go far—and stuck his hands in his pockets.

"Where is it?" he asked.

We cite this to show that Mr. Laemmle is a very practical man. He goes straight to the point quicker than any man we have ever met.

When we refused to show him the interview—he having mistaken us for a press agent—he got even by interviewing us. And he pretty nearly pumped us dry.

For acquiring information, Mr. Laemmle is a human sponge. He dissolves into ears.

He assumes an attitude of bland and simple innocence that is almost pathetic. This prompts you to treat him in a fatherly and almost pedagogic manner which in turn gives Mr. Laemmle everything he wants to know.

He has a marvelous memory. So it behooves you to remember all the stuff you teach him. Otherwise he'll look up suddenly at you with that bland smile and make you feel foolish.

Be careful, too, in using figures.

Once, on the way to California, we told Mr. Laemmle—in a pedagogic way—the costs of publishing a magazine. We were swimming around placidly when he suddenly and sharply hooked us. He told us we were wrong and we were.

There's a foreign expression somewhat to this effect: He started out with you but was coming back home while you were still going out. That's the way Mr. Laemmle is with figures.

He not only knows just what each of about seventy-five exchanges is doing each week, but he'll tell you within a few dollars what any exchange did the same week last year. If you question him he says: "I'll bet you."

And then you lose.

He has said: "I'll bet you" oftener than John W. Gates ever did.

You know, of course, that horseshoe which always framed his head in bygone advertisements, and the trademark phrase, "Laemmle Luck."

He believes in that luck. It's part of him—an intense superstition—a symbolic horseshoe which aureoles his head wherever he goes, whatever he does.

We got our first impression of Mr. Laemmle from that head within a horseshoe and the blunt, domineering remarks he made in type. We pictured him as a burly individual standing at least six feet in his stockings and weighing many stone.

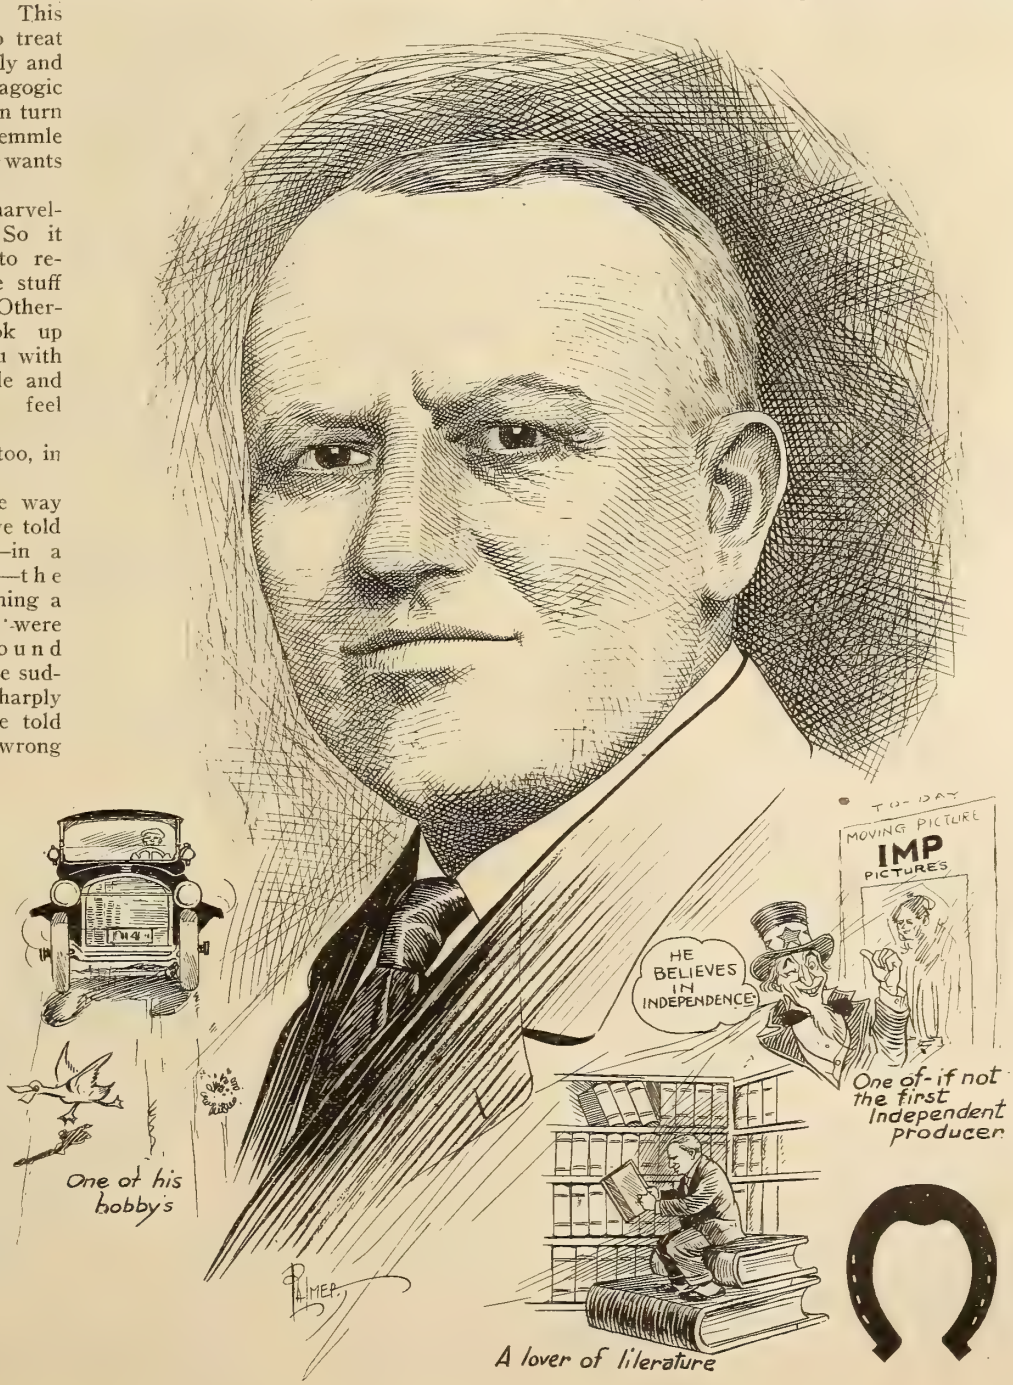
Our first glimpse of him was got in a Chicago hotel. It was a rainy, misty morning and before a window, peering out into the fog we saw a little man with his hands timidly clasped.

"That's Carl Laemmle," some one said.

And we said: "Holy smoke!"

This same little man has been the storm center of the picture business. In the early days he fought patent litigation with one hand, and with the other ran a business that was jumping in forty directions at once.

Most men would have got shell shock and retired. But he kept patiently on in the front trenches, through the thick and thin of it. He's a very patient man.



It must have been a strain. It's hard enough to roll a big stone up hill on smooth ground; but imagine meeting bulwarks every few yards and some one pot-shotting you every now and then.

That's what makes little fellows big; and big ones—who fail—little.

He never quit struggling and for his pluck he has our sincere, abiding American respect.

He shows the strain—any man would. He's nervous and jumpy at times and again he suddenly looks a little old, though he's only

Parsons Helps Tobacco Fund

Ten Per Cent. of Receipts of "Tarzan of the Apes" Will Buy Smokes for Soldiers—Letter to Ennis

THROUGH the patriotism displayed by the National Film Corporation, of which P. A. Parsons is the president, it was announced this week that arrangements had been consummated whereby the organization known as Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund will receive ten per cent of the receipts from the showing of "Tarzan of the Apes," which opened as a Metropolitan film attraction at the Broadway theatre Sunday, January 27.

The arrangements involving this donation to Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund were handled respectively by Harry Reichenbach, publicity director of the National Film Corporation, and Bert Ennis, who, acting in a similar capacity for the Petrova Picture Company and McClure Films, is also directing the exploitation matter for the fund. It has been arranged that the organization which is supplying our boys in France with tobacco from its headquarters at 25 West Forty-fourth Street will receive ten per cent of the proceeds from the showing of "Tarzan of the Apes," commencing with Sunday, January 27. The following letter is an individual and sincere indication of the patriotic effort which is being made by many of the leading film manufacturers to do their share in helping to supply the American boys in khaki now in France with smoke comforts:

"Dear Mr. Ennis:

"Pursuant to our recent conversation, this is an acknowledgement of the fact that we are giving you ten per cent of the proceeds at the Broadway theatre for the week of January 27th of the engagement of 'Tarzan of the Apes' for Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund.

"I hope we will be able to turn a big check over to you. We are not going to make any capital of this fact, except on the banner across Broadway.

"We will render a statement each night as to the receipts, minus war tax, and we will submit check at the end of the week.

"Sincerely yours,

"Harry Reichenbach,

"National Film Corporation of America."

Memphis Claims Loyal Public

Out of Twenty-eight Theatres None Is Finding the Sledding Too Steep—New House Is Being Planned

MEMPHIS exhibitors, congratulating themselves upon having weathered the trials of 1917, collided headon with ten days of snow, sleet, rain, blizzard and slush—never equalled before in the annals of Dixie—and came up smiling.

The Majestic Amusement Company (owning five film houses) and the Marcus Loew Enterprises (owning two) told a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that Memphis was the home of the most loyal screen fans in the country. There are twenty-eight houses there—and nearly every one of them is making money.

Furthermore, just as soon as B. M. Stainback, manager of Loew's Lyceum theatre and representative in Memphis for Marcus Loew, can obtain enough steel and construction material and close contracts for labor, a new, mammoth motion picture theatre, seating 2,800 persons—to be one of the largest theatres of its kind in the South, will be erected in the heart of Memphis.

C. F. Bridges, secretary and treasurer of the Majestic Amusement Company, operating the Majestic No. 1, the New Majestic No. 1, the Majestic No. 2 and Empire No. 1 and Empire No. 2, said that each of the five houses was doing good business. Taking the five houses as a whole, nearly every film manufacturer in America is represented. Three of the houses show first-run features. The two Empires, five-cent admission, play comedies and serials mainly.

Seven colored motion picture houses, under white management, are doing S. R. O. business daily. These houses are fully equipped and have seating capacities from 250 to 1,200.

The majority of the Memphis motion picture houses have made arrangements to comply with the Garfield fuel order and operate every day.

Hal Roach, of Rolin, Visits New York

Managing Director Hal Roach, of Rolin, is in town from Los Angeles and is making his headquarters at the Pathe offices.

Mr. Roach reports that now that Pathe is releasing a one-reel Lloyd comedy every week there is a speeding up at the Rolin studios and that whatever curtailment there is in other quarters has not affected his company. He expresses himself as being much pleased at the success which has been attained by these comedies and prophesies that the new Toto comedies, which are personally directed by him, will score a pronounced hit.

Shows Only Two Days Each Week

Manager William F. Seitz, of the Star theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, in order to save fuel, announces that shows will be given in that theatre only on Saturday and Sunday. Mr. Seitz says that this schedule will be followed throughout the cold season, or until such time as the fuel situation shows improvement.

WHAT KIND OF A FELLOW IS —LAEMMLE?

just turned fifty-one. But at any moment he's apt to fool you.

He'll grin quickly and youthfully, dig his hands in his pockets, look up with a curving, optimistic smile and say:

"I'll bet you."

THEY SAY

He's chicken hearted about firing employes. When it has to be done he goes away and hides his head in the sand till it's all over.

He still reads exhibitor letters, and carries them around in his pockets. He even pores over them in directors' meetings, giving incidental attention to board matters brought up.

He's democratic—sees everybody who calls. Too democratic, his business associates say. He wastes time that way.

He's strong on home-folks stuff. Any man from Oshkosh can get a job with him.

He's a natural born advertiser.

He's very sensitive to criticism upon his pictures; he doesn't mind criticism directed at himself.

He consults his young son—only nine years old—on every picture. The boy has an uncanny knowledge of box-office values.

His door is open to all employes. Stenographers don't greet him with bated breath. He listens to all.

New Sections Submitted in Shipping

The Bureau of Explosives has submitted to the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry several new sections to be included in the proposed amended paragraph No. 43 of the regulations governing the transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles by express.

The new sections, c, d, e and f refer to shipments of unexposed motion picture film, non-inflammable film and shipments of film with advertising matter. It is expected that the recommendations will be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington for final approval at an early date.

The amended paragraph No. 43 as revised to date by the Bureau of Explosives follows.

43 (a) Motion Picture films must be packed in spark-proof metal boxes of cans complying with Specification No. 32. Not more than eight reels (approximately 1,000 feet each) may be packed in one such outside container.

(b) Motion picture films may also be packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19, provided each reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 400 pounds.

(c) Unexposed motion picture film in tight rolls must be packed in interior metal cans not to exceed five rolls (approximately 2,000 feet) in one inside can; the cover of each inside can must fit tightly and be held in place by a strip of adhesive tape or paper. The interior cans must be securely packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19. The gross weight of one outside container must not exceed 400 pounds.

(d) Non-inflammable motion picture (cellulose acetate) films may be accepted without other restrictions when securely packed in strong packages of sufficient strength to carry to destination without rupture or leakage of contents; each outside container must be plainly marked "MOTION PICTURE FILM" and in addition must be marked, "NOT DANGEROUS" as prescribed by paragraph 34 (c).

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Making Your House Organ Pay

Some Things To Avoid in Taking Advertising and How To Make Your Program Merit Patronage

UNQUESTIONABLY the ideal program is one that devotes its entire attention to the theatre. It should not only fill the purposes of informing the patrons on the essential facts about the current bill, but it should also convey enough information about attractions for the remainder of the period that it covers to bring the patrons back to the house again. A third function that it has to fill is to make the people who receive it through the mails read it and bring them to the theatre to see at least one of the features announced for the week.

But one cannot always be governed by ideals; in most cases we have to get down to the bed rock of the practical. In our talks we have firmly controverted the excuses of those who have cried that they could not afford it, and equally so do we deny the contention of those who declare that they cannot afford a program. But by that we do not mean that every manager can plunge into the expenditure of a hundred dollars or more for each weekly program. There are two choices, either to keep the program simple, like those we illustrated last week, or to give a bigger booklet and make the advertising pay for it.

Just one matter before we go into the question of advertising solicitation. You want to remember here, and every time that you do anything, that your business is that of running a motion picture theatre. More than in nearly any other line of business you need to keep the good will of every person in your community. You need to have everyone a booster. You have enough to do in competing with your legitimate rivals without getting into new trouble. We recently disagreed with a promoter who urged the exhibitor to go into the business of selling motion picture magazines at his box-office through screen announcements, because we believed that aside from the acknowledged good that the wide circulation of these periodicals would do his theatre, he should devote his screen to pictures and he should not put himself up in opposition to the newsdealers, whose co-operation he must often seek.

This same rule applies to program advertising. If you are living in a community where there is a newspaper published, you need every aid of that newspaper. You have got to have it to get the fullest amount of your success. If we were starting a theatre in such a town we would go to the editor and enlist his co-operation, and we would try to so conduct ourselves that we would deserve his help. Our reason for saying this is the immediate temptation that besets the manager when he goes out to solicit advertising for his program. It is the old game of "Ours is the best." Instead of being content to ask for business on the service that the program affords, some managers start in to tell the merchant how much better such advertising is than newspaper advertising. Result: antagonism of the newspaper. You have to remember that the newspaper has two things to sell, circulation and and advertising. And that the one thing that you are aiming at is circulation, i. e., patronage.

We know of the case of a representative of one of the syndicates owning seven houses in a principal city who went to advertisers and immediately started soliciting business on the ground that this sort of advertising was better than that obtainable by the newspapers. It was a sort of uncalled for competition, not the sort of solicitation that brought business, but certainly the sort that tended to estrange the papers, on whose good will the prosperity of the seven houses depended. There isn't the slightest reason for the two classes of advertising to conflict. In the first place, the theatre should strive for the neighborhood advertising, from merchants who cannot afford to pay for the general circulation of a newspaper but want to reach the people of their neighborhoods. Then there is "class" advertising, such as that of restaurants, soda fountains, etc., which will appeal especially to the trade of the patrons while they are down town. There is plenty of good advertising that you can get, but get it on the grounds that the displays will bring the merchants business, and not on the sort of impossible comparisons that will estrange your newspaper. We have gone into this subject at length because the method in soliciting business may far more than offset the good your program does.

Now, there is another warning. Most exhibitors should be content if the advertising pays two-thirds of the cost of the program; certainly they should be willing to rest if it pays entirely for the program. Don't get into the idea of making money from your program advertising, or you will find yourself paying more attention to getting the shekels from the merchants than in bringing patrons to your theatre.

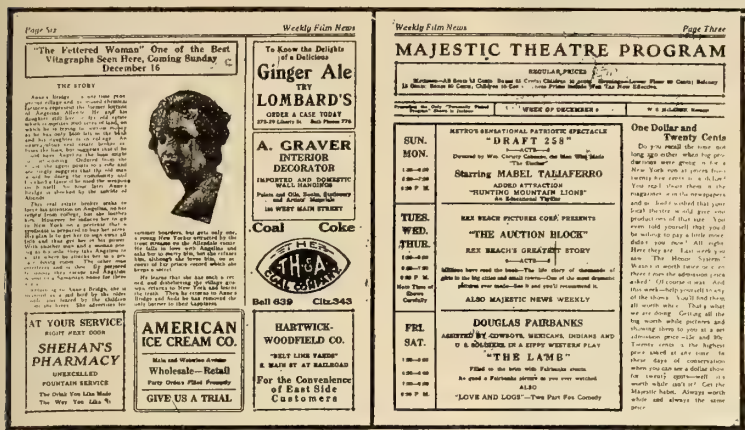
You have got to give your advertisers good positions, but don't ruin the appearance of your house organ by going to the extreme. First, avoid heavy black type in these displays. It would be a good idea to use the style known as De Vinne Open Face, which you will find in nearly every printing office, for the displays. Never let Black Gothic or any of the big, heavy types which will dominate and smother the neat appearance of the rest of your program find their way in. You can meet the argument of the merchants who want this sort of type by explaining to him that you must make your program attractive to have it retained and that by so making it his advertising will be worth much more to him. And it will.

A little later we are going to have something to say about program covers, but for the present we'll pass that by, with this warning: Never sell an advertisement on your front cover. You need the space worse than you need the money.

Where you can do so it is better to devote the right hand pages to reading matter and the left hand pages to advertising. That will give you a much better effect, if you can get away with it, though advertisers are very prone to demand position "next to reading matter." None of the programs that we have illustrated on the opposite page have succeeded in entirely separating reading matter and advertising.

Victoria theatre, Buffalo, one of the largest and best managed neighborhood houses in the country, allows its advertisers to use space alongside the announcement of the bill for the day, as is shown in the lower right hand corner. Of course, Buffalo is a big city and the advertisers there are "wise," and they demand good position before they will come in, but it would have been much better if the Victoria could have devoted the whole page to the program for the day and have added the cast of each production. We refer to the cast matter here, but we shall not attempt to call attention to the various points that we covered in the first article on house organs.

Majestic theatre, Jackson, Mich., four of whose eight program pages are reproduced at the upper left of the cut, combines with the Colonial, under the same management, in issuing its program and devotes only part of a single page to the weekly announcement for each theatre. We don't like that arrangement, for this organ, which is 7¾ x 8¾, should be more of a program that it is, making the bare announcement of the star and the title of the production. Yet it devotes much reading matter to these attractions, but this is something to which we will refer in a little while.



In this program and that of the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, four pages of which are shown just below, keep the advertising well toward the bottom of the page so that they will not hurt the eye, and in most cases use light enough type. The Franklin program is slightly larger than that of the Majestic and also consists of eight pages.

Now, before we enter into the second part of this discussion, let us say that no theatre which simply makes of its program a list

Pages From Programs Which Offer Some Interesting Pointers

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

"DISTINCTLY different" from the feature through to the end of the bill is the best description of the week's offering at the Rialto. Probably every one knows that "I Mary MacLane" is different from all other features, and the same difference has been carried through practically every number. The result is a remarkably well rounded performance of the "pleasing" type.

And that is the sort of bill that all exhibitors should try to have. Don't make good things stand out by contract with poor ones, but synchronize (yes, we mean that word) so that the verdict of the audience will be not that this or that was a splendid picture, but that "it was a great show." The answer is not alone in the care in the selection of the entire bill, but in always having the sort of a presentation that leaves the audience not knowing what to expect. It is by no means only the feature that draws thousands to the Rialto and the Rivoli—but the conviction that every one has that the entire performance will be most satisfying, that there will be no jarring.

And speaking of jars recalls a little lesson from the week's bill. The Animated ended with some Swiss pictures. When Mr. Rothapfel asked our view of the Animated we confessed that we did not care for this particular bit. "But don't you see why it was put in?" he asked. "Just before that were volcano scenes and we could not end it up with a jar and then go into the dainty gavotte number that was to follow." Which was very true, when one thinks of it. The strikingly contrastic things may be used for a purpose at times, but they do not make for a finished presentation unless they exactly fit. He had just come from conducting the orchestra, one of the many things that he does so well, and was full of the music of it—and you know what music means to the Rothapfel houses.

Rialto orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Reisenfeld, never did finer work than in the rendition of Liszt's "Les Preludes," a symphonic poem that brings into action and into definite interpretation every piece in the huge orchestra. It got a storm of applause.

The Animated this week really hasn't a war picture in it. That is most unusual and this was done with the purpose of being different. Yet, to show you how the enthusiasm of the audiences may be brought out, two of the numbers brought actual shouts. The first of these was the launching of the first government-made ship (Mutual), and cheer after cheer came. Then Hearst-Pathe pictures of the former German "Vaterland," now become the "Leviathan," and defying the U-boats got another roar from the audience. With both of these "Honor Thy Nation" march was played. A splendid intimate touch was given with "Bill" Snyder, for years in charge of the animals at the Central Park Zoo, bidding farewell to the various animals. "Auld Lang Syne," softly played, had the whole audience humming and brought a clever touch to this intimate Universal selection. Propaganda for the nation came with the throwing of the screen of the Hoover editorial on wheatless and meatless days, with "This Is the Life" being played and a Hy Mayer cartoon on the same subject had the same music. Hearst-Pathe pictures showed the recent volcanic eruption in Guatemala, shown to "The Tempest," played with special effects and with the red lights from the lava flashing on the screen. This same music was carried through Mutual pictures of the destruction of a church steeple in St. Louis to obtain the copper, and then followed pictures of Switzerland, played with a "shaconne," and leading up to the gavotte, a dainty little number danced by Reilie Dorree and Yvonne Robert to "La Cinquantaine."

Robert C. Bruce's remarkable eye for wonderful scenes and his clever titles that add much to the humanness of his Educational Film pictures was again shown in "From Here to Summerland," a picture with some remarkable views of mountains, water and clouds and leading one up to what appeared to be the most beautiful place in the world.

Mme. Maubourg made a splendid impression with her rendition of "Habanera," from "Carmen." Now there is another thing to note in that the Spanish harmony seemed to run through the performance, for the other big musical number was the march from the same opera played by the orchestra and sung by the full male and female Rialto chorus. Of course, the singers were in costume and they carried out especially well the spirit of the song, for they have come to be not only excellent singers, but under the careful training that they have been they get the finer points and are not merely wooden-like figures on the stage.

Special music was arranged for the feature picture, there being a number of intimate touches like "My Wife's Gone to the Country," which were introduced just at the right moment. While we are not going into detail here to the various numbers played, let us direct your attention to the fact that music has a wonderful thing to do with a picture like this. To a considerable extent it is a recital by Mary MacLane of the way six different men made love to her, and certainly a picture of this sort might grow tiresome if the same music was played all the way through it. But by breaking it up, using different airs that have an evident association with the scenes that are being shown, any possibility of monotony is relieved.

"Five to Five," a clever Christy comedy with Bobbie Vernon and Ethel Lynne, made a big hit. It is of the milder type of comedy, but there are plenty of laughs in it, and the catchy music added to the gaiety of the spirit.

Above everything else, we hate to sit in front of people who are always talking about the pictures, but in a way this is interesting at the Rialto, for the comments that are made on the pictures, the music and the surprise effects are a good index to what the people want. They want things that cause them to say aloud to themselves, "wonderful." And when we saw this bill there were three such persons sitting behind us who said "wonderful" every moment or so, and as a matter of fact there were not wonderful things about the show —except that it is wonderful how a man with care to every detail can weld everything together and leave a smooth entertainment that gives each patron the sense of one thing—"delight."

Of course your pictures have a whole lot to do with it, but there's more in what you do with the picture.

This Week at the Strand

TWO effective settings are employed by Manager Harold Edel at the Strand this week. The first comes during the first part of the overture Luigi's "Egyptian Ballet." Here the setting showed the Sphinx with the pyramids in the background, the moon rising and a caravan passing along. The second was with a duet, "Barcarolle" from "Tales of Hoffman," a duet sung by Rosa Lind and Anita Tagel. There was a Venetian effect for this with boats in the harbor carrying their lights, the singers being shown in costume and reclining on a gondola in the foreground. The number got repeated applause.

There is an unusual combination in the scenic this week, including "Picturesque Huelgohe, Brittany" and "Bonnets of Brittany," both Pathes, and then a Paramount-Bray cartoon, "Goodrich Dirt's Bear Hunt."

This week's scenic opens with pictures of the Guatemala earthquake, and then follow skiing at Cary, Ill., a Paramount-Bray exposing magic tricks, Tommies returning from a German prison camp to Boston, England, and then another Paramount-Bray showing Royal Dixon, nature writer and his birds. An old-fashioned wagon train at San Diego showed that the nation is using every resource to meet the Huns and the similar fashion followed the "Vaterland." "With the Stars and Stripes Abroad" showed some training scenes, and then the weekly ended with remarkable pictures of soldiers at Camp Upton marching in the snow. It brought down the house.

The feature is Pauline Frederick in "Madame Jealousy," and the comedy, Billie Rhodes in "Her Friend Brown." The other musical number is Andre Enrico singing "Lolita."

Fullerton Uses Some Striking Ideas in Making His Newspaper Appeals "Different"

ONE of the reasons that George F. Fullerton (commonly known as "Hundred Per Cent") has attracted so much attention among motion picture advertisers is that he is constantly experimenting, constantly doing things new and things that other advertising managers would hesitate to do.

Within one week he has so successfully used several ideas in two of the three Seattle, Wash., theatres for which he writes the advertising, the Liberty and the Coliseum, that comment on his work is taken out of the "Your Idea and Ours" department this week for special comment here.

During the week of January 13 the same cuts were used in the advertising of the Liberty and the Coliseum, the only changes being in the size of these, in conformity to the different quantities of space used and the regular weekly schedules of advertising. In most cases we prefer the use of different cuts on the different days, but here Fullerton determined to drive one idea home on each of these features and he succeeded so well that both pictures played to remarkably big business.

On looking at the Fairbanks advertisement the first thing that catches one's eye is the fact that the theatre has deliberately changed the name of the Fairbanks picture from "A Modern Musketeer" to "A Kansas Musketeer." There was a very definite reason for doing this in the opinion of Fullerton. The last Fairbanks picture has been largely a costume picture and the Seattle theatres found that the energetic star was not so well liked in this class of productions. So it was feared that the title of "A Modern Musketeer" would leave the same impression and hurt business, so, without using the ordinary line "not a costume picture" that is so frequently seen, he changed the title itself. It's a rather daring thing to do and one that we would not advise the average exhibitor to do unless he is very sure of the ground, and thoroughly familiar with his patrons.

The same thing was done with "Wolves of the Rail," the latest W. S. Hart picture, where the original working title, "Dead or Alive," was used because it was believed to be a more typical Hart title.

As we have mentioned, Fullerton changed the reading matter on the various days. With the Fairbanks picture he used such as:

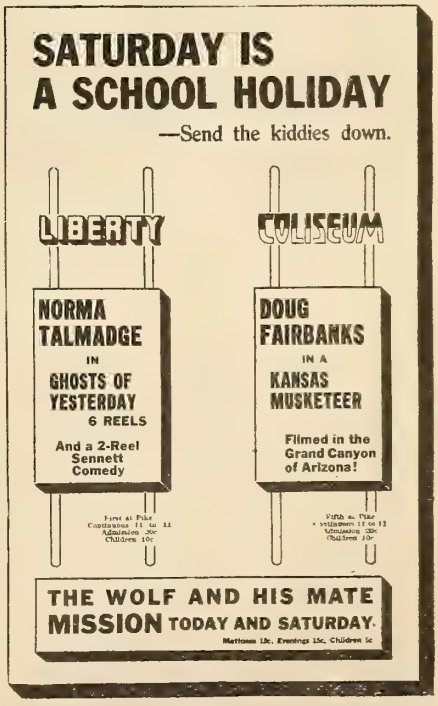
"Like the Kansas cyclone, it moves fast and makes a clean sweep."

"Like the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where it was filmed, it must be seen to be appreciated."

"Scenery and smiles are strewn all over Doug Fairbanks' 'Kansas Musketeer.'"

HOLIDAYS

They Count, but "Regular" Days Count, Too



WE would be very glad to have accounts from exhibitors of special things that they do in the way of advertising, lobby decorations or special settings for Washington's Birthday. Send photographs where possible, as they are more eloquent than long descriptions.

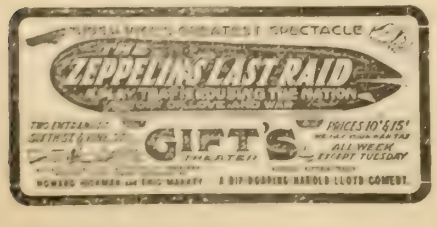
This is a special invitation, but the invitation is always open for you to send what you are doing on the "regular" days as well. Of course a particular holiday makes a particular sort of stunt appropriate, but you ought to keep thinking about things that you can do any old day.

"Kansas cyclones aren't in it with Doug when he gets into action. See it in 'A Kansas Musketeer,' filmed in the Grand Canyon of Arizona."

In the case of "Ghosts of Yesterday," the reading matter was devoted to the Mack Sennett comedy on the same program, "The Kitchen Lady," and attention was directed day after day to the cat comedian and the fish that it "caught."

Fullerton used another good idea in a special advertisement in the Saturday issue the same week, combining the attractions at the three theatres, and making a special appeal for the attendance of the children. It simply called attention to the fact that Saturday was a holiday and gave the title of the pictures. Of course, everyone knew it was Saturday and a holiday, but it's a mighty good idea to call attention to the obvious every once in a while and you are sure to get quick results.

Your Idea---and Ours



IN the last issue of the NEWS we published an account of the opening of the Stratford theatre, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., one of the finest houses in the country in proportion to the population of the city. And the day of the opening a page advertisement in the local paper evidenced the worth while co-operation of Goldwyn pictures. Inasmuch as "The Cinderella Man" was the first feature to be shown at that theatre it was good advertising to take this opportunity of getting the public fully acquainted with the Goldwyn stars. Just at the time that a new house is about to open the public is eager to know all about it and this sort of exploitation will leave an impression that will last many a day.

It's what the reader of your display BELIEVES that brings him to your theatre.

A FEW weeks since we reproduced a page from the Cincinnati Enquirer as an example of about the worst aggregate lot of display matter that we had seen. You will recall that we paid attention to the narrow display strips running across the top of the page. We were mighty glad to pick up last Sunday's issue and find that only one theatre was now following that idea (?). A little later we called your attention to some very poor advertising from Gift's theatre in that city, and now we are glad to even matters up by showing you that the same house with the same space can get attractive display. It cost the management a little something to have this lettering done by an artist, but it is well worth it and the display stands out on the page among a mass of mostly bad advertising because it is different and because it offers some reason why the reader's eye should stop. And the writer has achieved the desirable in keeping the wording down to the limit. He has covered the essentials only.

The manager who works on the old joke motto of "Tell your troubles to the policeman" when his patrons complain, is likely to be soon telling his own to the bankruptcy court.

AS an ordinary propostion we are very violently opposed to the "bargain day" method of advertising. It is this policy that is responsible for some of the theatres in some cities giving twelve and fifteen reels of pictures for ordinary prices, the sort of program that makes people come to the theatre once in a while instead of regularly.

S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, has achieved the "bargain day" effect without any loss of dignity. Here is one of his Sunday displays on "Intolerance." He has played the reduced price against the immensity and cost of the production in something of circus style, but he has achieved the purpose he sought. This is advertising that is an exception to the general rule because he had a picture that comes in the exceptional class. It is good advertising on "Intolerance," but don't try this style unless the film that you are advertising can deliver the goods.

HERE is certainly a novelty in advertising, and it is the work of the Clemmer theatre, Spokane, Wash. It is simply a reproduction of the criticism on "Bab, a Matinee Idol," which appeared in the news columns of the Spokesman-Review the day after the opening of the picture. The manager of the Clemmer figured that some of the public might have missed the review tucked away in the news columns and he wanted to be sure that all saw it Certainly the purchase of space and the use of plenty of white around the type brought it out strong and we will guess that most everyone read it because of the novelty. That's the secret of attracting attention.

Even hot air fills space, but it doesn't make much impression when the balloon bursts. Think of that in connection with your exploitation.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Toledo, O., enters our ranks of interesting advertisers with the display on "Dodging a Million." It is a combination of halftone, line work and type matter and the advertiser has used enough space to avoid the criticism of too much reading matter, though on the ordinary picture we would hold strictly to our warning "Use as few words as possible." Here is a case of a star that has been off the screen for some time, though her wonderful popularity has lasted. Now here is a case where the display could have been improved. We would have used the two paragraphs toward the bottom of the advertisement immediately under the title and then would have followed with the other matter in the smaller type. In other words we believe that the advertiser should have played more on the personality of the star than the character of the picture, though we would have gone into this as the Alhambra did because her last appearances were in two-reel slapstick comedies. But the writer of this advertisement shows he had generally good sense of values, for he know the popularity of Tom Moore in his section and brought his name into the announcement. But it's an ad that attracts attention and one that will be read all the way through—the main thing.

What Live Wires Are Doing

A smile for your patron may bring you a hee-haw over your competitor.

MANAGER E. B. MOORE of the Wayne theatre, Waynetown, Ind., sends some specimens of the advertising that he does in his home paper, an eight-page publication which is issued each Friday. He has been showing three nights a week, but recently cut to two. Naturally having only a weekly paper for his use he has to use his whole week's bill, but he could do very much better than this by getting better display and cutting out so much of the type. Another feature which he uses and which gets very tiresome are the lines "It's a Bluebird," "It's an Essanay." Such lines mean nothing when you keep repeating them with every picture. In this display which occupies a half-page he tries to tell too much about the picture and as the result he has to crowd and the name of the star and the title are lost in the mass of type. We are sure that the editor of the paper would co-operate by giving Mr. Moore some free reading matter and he should devote that space to stories about the plays, short paragraphs about the players, and save his advertising space for real display.

WITH practically every issue we have cited some advertising of Pacific Coast advertising as good work. It is epidemic out that way and it's going to be a mighty good sign for the interior and for the portion of the East that thinks it knows everything when the epidemic gets all over the country. Here is a display taken from the Strand theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., where the people have seen the work of George Fullerton and others of the progressive type. It is another example of the striking use of cuts instead of a mass of type. But the use of cuts can be overdone as well as anything else. At first glimpse this seems to be a single scene picture, but upon analysis it appears that there are four different pictures used and when you come to wonder what it is all about the cut fails to carry any definite punch over. The same characters are repeated and only confusion stands out. We warn against too many words because a mass of language detracts from the interest. Don't use cuts for the reason that they are cuts or you will achieve the same unwanted effect.

Dope for the Movie Fans

WINIFRED ALLEN MAKES BIG HIT WITH SOLDIERS

Winifred Allen star of the Triangle play, "For Valour," at the Cosmo Theater on Wednesday, January 30th, has more swagger sticks than any other girl could possibly use But she's not in the least to blame for the corner in the swagger market.

The scenes in "For Valour" are laid in Canada and a great deal of the filming of the picture was done in and around Toronto. While there Miss Allen's sunny and loving personality made her the idol of the men who are back from the trenches either convalescing from wounds or for the purpose of training raw recruits for service

The swagger sticks she received were all presented to her by the young Canadian officers whom she met.

Carey's Favorite Role.

Harry Carey's screen creation, "Cheyenne Harry," bids fair to become as famous as any of the great characters of literature, even Sherlock Holmes himself Carey has played this role in numerous short pictures, and his Butterfly picture, "Straight Shooting," in which Cheyenne appeared as the hero of a five reel feature, was so tremendously successful that another Butterfly picture with the same winning combination, called "The Secret Man" has been produced and will be seen at the Cosmo Theater on Saturday, January 26th This picture, like "Straight Shooting," was directed by Jack Ford, and is bound to equal the success of that production It tells the story of the outlaw's sacrifice for the sake of a child, in a series of scenes in which feeling is strung up to an intense pitch.

Camera Man Said Things.

An overzealous traffic officer in Westlake Park spoiled a good many feet of film and severely rumpled the cameraman's temper when a thrilling runaway was staged in the Triangle play, "Regenerates," featuring Alma Reubens. This picture will be shown at the Cosmo Theater on Sunday, January 27

The script called for the rescue of Alma Reubens to be accomplished by the hero But the copper hadn't read the script, and when he saw Miss Reubens approaching at break-neck speed, and calling frantically for help, he could not resist the appeal of the beauty in distress.

Launching himself from the bridal path in a flying tackle, which would have done credit to an all-American end, the cop brought the horse to a stop, but the "thanks" he received from the camera man didn't make a pause like a Carnegie medal.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG IN "THE EASIEST WAY"

As fourth in the series of the Cosmo super features, at regular program prices, the management has arranged to present another of the famous Select Features starring beautiful Clara Kimball Young in that great dramatic success which had such sensational successes all over the country, namely, "The Easiest Way."

This wonder picture comes to the Cosmo for two days, showing on Monday and Tuesday, January 28 and 29, and added to the fact that there is to be no advance in prices, the truly greatness of the attraction is founded for the prediction that capacity business will reign during the engagement.

MARVELOUS SET IN PLAY "THE REGENERATES"

One of the largest, most elaborate and richest furnished sets ever built at the Triangle Culver City studio was used for the interior scenes in "Regenerates," the Triangle film play at the Cosmo Theater on Sunday, Jan 20.

The set called for a New York mansion, the home of a proud old family for generations, and an entire stage was covered, the work being a masterpiece of scenic artistry. The vast Triangle property room, housing furniture enough for hundreds of homes, was stripped of its most priceless articles for this interior and an entire first floor of a palace, which any multi-millionaire would be proud to own, was produced.

Hospital Benefit Performance.

By courtesy of the Cosmo theater managements, there will be given in the near future—probably the first week in February—a hospital benefit performance, at which time will be presented one of the most novel and entertaining programs ever offered to the theater-going public of Winner

The program will consist of musical selections, both vocal and instrumental, by popular local artists, as well as orchestra numbers and possibly several short vaudeville specialties, also by local talent, of which we have a plenty, as will be remembered from the one local talent play lately produced here for the Red Cross.

In addition to this, the management has promised to supply one of their excellent feature plays, which will no doubt be a leading feature of the evening's entertainment.

It is an undisputed fact that the people of Winner and territory are "there" wherever it comes to contributing to a good and noble cause, as is evidenced by their splendid Red Cross and other public work, and we are confident that they will come forward nobly in this cause and that it will be a great success financially as we l as from an entertainment standpoint.

Frames from the Reels

Little Elizabeth Janes, one of the cleverest of child actresses, supports Harry Carey in the Butterfly picture, "The Secret Man," which comes to the Cosmo theatre on Saturday, Jan. 26.

Allan (Tilly) Sears, one of the latest additions to the Triangle playing force at Culver City, was cast for the first time in the new Triangle masterpiece, "Regenerates." He acts the role of Paul LaFarge, favored suitor of the proud old house of Van Dyun.

In advertising for Thursday, January 24th, we wish to make a correction Instead of the feature, "Her Life and His," the Pathe Gold Rooster Play, "Her New York," will be presented In this production Gladys Hulette is featured and graphically portrays the adventures of an innocent country girl s experience on her first trip to the distant city of magic.

Covering an entire stage, 50 by 150 feet, a mansion was erected at the Triangle's Culver City studio for the Triangle play, "Regenerates," at the Cosmo theater on Sunday, January 27th, in which Alma Reubens and Walt Whitman are co-starred. The furniture alone, which included some of the finest pieces of antiques in the huge Triangle property storehouse, was valued at more than $30,000, while the costuming for this elaborate picture cost a huge sum more

There will be no picture programs on Friday, January 25th, and Friday, February 1st, owing to the fact these are the lecture course dates

Most of the scenes in the Triangle play, "For Valour," at Cosmo theater on night of Wednesday, Jan 30 were taken in Canada. It is a difficult task these war-days to get permiss on to take motion pictures on Canadian soil, but Mr. Parker, the director, obtained the much desired permit. Most of the scenes were taken in Toronto, but the thrilling acting in the trenches was seen at Camp Borden, 50 miles from Toronto. Here the boys learn the art of warfare before leaving for the front, and the trenches are exact reproductions of those on the other side

FOR SALE OR TRADE—Eight room house two blocks east Lamro Stati Rack Exner R. Grebe, Stock Yards National Bank, south St. Paul Minn

LIKE the case of the Wayne theatre, the Cosmo theatre, Winner, S. D., has to rely on weeklies for its advertising and we have seen two of them which accord the house reading matter in return for the advertising. Here is the display and reading matter from the Winner Journal with the advertising at the top of the page and reading matter filling the three columns under the display. There has been a little bobble made by placing the announcement of the Sunday show ahead of the Saturday. And as we have said where the exhibitor has only a weekly he has to advertise the bill for the entire week, but even in this case we believe that he should try to sell his first show first and that he should have put more emphasis on his announcement for Saturday.

But at any rate this theatre shows that it has grasped the way to advertise in a country weekly and we are glad to be able to print this example of newspaper co-operation.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors

Mr. Rothapfel Will Answer Here any Questions Regarding Problems in Exhibition. The Only Conditions Are That the Questions Must Not Bear on the Merits of Particular Pictures or Services and That They Must Come Through the NEWS. Address Your Inquiries "ROTHAPFEL ADVICE, EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU, MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

XXIX—I read your interesting answers every week, and I must say that your optimism is very inspiring indeed. Ours is a little town of 2,000 and we occupy the Opera House, which is a pretty auditorium with about 300 seating capacity, but which is upstairs. Our patronage now, however, is good and I can see nothing but bright prospects for business here. About 50 per cent of the population are negroes and the other 50 per cent are, as a rule, the higher class of people. We now have a player-piano. I am an organist and am considering installing a $3,000 pipe organ. Would you, with the possibilities so limited by the smallness of the town, do this? The only expense would be the cost of the organ, for after the pictures are on, I have nothing much to do. We have no opposition, nor any danger of it. While I know that business would pick up at first, would people get used to it and take it as a matter of course when the novelty wore off?—ALABAMA.

I WOULD suggest that you do not make any outlay for the instrument you speak of. I would withhold the investment until after the war, but in the meantime try to improve your music a little. Later on you can—if business warrants—make added expenditures. Because you have no competition is the one reason why you have to be careful to live up to what your patrons expect, and a little more. This will insure you against new competitors entering your field. In the end it will have paid you, not because you were compelled to do it, but because you did your very best when sailing was easy.

XXX—Permit me to ask your opinion on one phase of the business that is, to my surprise, never so much as touched upon. That is the necessity for and adoption of some method whereby the exhibitor may determine the moral aspect of a subject, in addition to its other characteristics as now given in the various articles and periodicals under "Screen Opinions." Not one, so far as I have seen, ever alludes to the subject.

My patronage consists mainly of the cultured class, in the majority of instances being children who will not tolerate anything but morally clean plays, shunning vampires, sensuous and suggestive types. Conditions forbid my reviewing my service, so that I am at the mercy of film companies in this respect. Twice recently I have closed down my show on the first reel because of some immoral trend of the subject, at which time scores of patrons began to leave the house. Both subjects happened to be from the best film companies and lauded by various screen opinions in the trade papers.

While I am aware that in the cities and certain neighborhoods this class of pictures goes over all right, yet there are innumerable communities where its elimination is of paramount importance in building up your business. It most certainly applies in my case and has been the means of greater injury to my success than any one factor. Should not trade papers cover this phase of the subject as well as other elements?—L. G. T.

YOUR question is one that I should like to answer personally and in a closed room. I would not dare to put into print what I think of conditions today. The ways are few in which a man may speak the truth as he wishes to speak it. A high ethical standard has not yet been attained. I know exhibitors who will deliberately book a picture just because it is off color. These men should be driven out of the industry. If the exhibitor himself wouldn't take that kind of stuff, the manufacturer wouldn't make it.

A very good way of judging what you ought to give your patrons is to imagine you have a sixteen-year-old girl or boy with eyes and mind wide open—and then ask yourself whether you would let them see the show or the picture. The answer is a good criterion to act on. I can't enter into the merits or demerits of trade papers and screen opinions, because they are so confusing to interpret, and so many different theories can be obtained from them.

After all, the only way is to see them for yourself. Or rely on the director, the producing company, and the story. That is the way I work as a rule.

Another way—if you will pardon my being personal or egotistical—is to watch whatever the Rialto and the Rivoli run. You will not need to bow your head or feel ashamed if you follow these theatres. Time and time again I have turned down films which, if shown, might have packed the theatre to the doors. Time and time again I have turned down films because I did not think them conducive, not alone to the best interests of the theatre, but to the best interests of the industry. I have been offered huge sums of money to show some films, but there is not enough money in the world to make me run any picture which I do not think ought to be run.

The sooner the manufacturer gets away from sensationalism, grewsomeness, bad taste, illiteracy and, above all, vulgarity and obscenity, the better for everybody. A high ethical standard in motion pictures is coming as sure as you are a foot high.

Better minds are coming into the business; men with principles; men who will build a sound and lasting foundation; men who are not striving for the almighty dollar—no matter how obtained; men of high moral attributes; men with ideals; men with an eye to the future.

In the hands of these men lies the real future of the industry, a future which will see the industry surmount all these obstacles and come out on top—clean, wholesome, triumphant.

XXXI—I note that you have been asked several questions about news reels, but I am going to have to disturb you again. I am convinced that these pictures are important, especially since I am in a town not far from one of the larger cities, where the big city papers have a daily circulation of a couple of thousand. These people who take the big city papers are my very best patrons, and I want to appeal to them as much as possible. Now, it is impossible for me to get the various weeklies and cut them up as you do. I am satisfied with the weekly that I am getting, but I know that I have not put the punch in it that I should. I am more impressed with the necessity of music with this news reel and not the ordinary piano playing. I have long considered installing a four or five-piece orchestra, which I can get for $100 a week, but I have got to get further business to justify it. Do you think that it would be worth while going to this expense and at the same time getting the second or third run on my news weekly so as to bring it up to date? I wish you would analyze this question for me, as so much additional expense needs serious consideration and I admit that I am up in the air about it—N. L.

I CERTAINLY cannot in justice advise you to run more than one weekly—it is too expensive. And as for cutting, the manufacturer will not tolerate this from every exhibitor. There has been a great improvement in the way weeklies are assembled today. Make the most of what you can get and you will still have an interesting topical. To do what we are doing will cost you more than you are taking in, which would be silly. The idea of having a weekly with every performance is excellent.

Adding $100 a week for an orchestra is a good investment, and will probably supply a punch to your weekly if you can choose good interpretive music. Try it. But advertise that you are going to do it. And advertise that you are doing it. Results may not be apparent for two or three weeks after you have made the innovation.

XXXII—As a general rule, I never worry about what my competitor is doing, but I am up against it now. I have been running one feature picture and one comedy and two days a week an instalment or a serial, and that has been the prevailing custom here where there are two theatres with 90 per cent working people. Now, my competitor is running two five-reel features. One of these is always old, but because there are only two houses and because many of the pictures have never been shown here he can get these old features at a very low price and the public doesn't know any difference, though all must realize that they show the wear and tear very badly. My competitor has eaten into my business, for the reason that I cannot afford two reasonably new subjects and I am not going to fool the people by giving them old stuff. Would you advise me to stand pat, or what?—L. & N.

STICK to it. Make your show better. Don't worry about the other fellow. Two features is cheap stuff, bad policy, and will never yield anything.

People don't want to sit through two features. They tire of it. Rather get a snappy, varied program—a weekly, a scenic, a comedy, a feature, and so forth, and make these as good as you can.

Then stand pat on your policy. I would like to have you keep in touch with me.

Selling Myself to My Patrons

This is the fifth of our series of articles, "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," by an exhibitor who tells each week what he is doing to develop his house, the lessons that he learns and the errors that he discovers. It is a frank discussion of the pleasures and evils of exhibition in a town of 15,000, and the tips contained here will probably be of value to managers in all sections.

By a Successful Exhibitor

IN my last article I spoke of the fact that some of the exchange managers seemed to be worried that I was not following the policies of some of the other exhibitors. But they appeared to be equally worried because I did not carry out a great many of suggestions from them or from their home offices.

One instance of this was the enormous amount of throw-aways, circular letters, etc., that I was urged to use. If I had followed the advice and had employed all the material that was suggested to me the local post-office receipts would have doubled, I would have had a dozen mail clerks on my payroll—and the gross receipts of the house wouldn't have been enough to pay this expense. Aside from the financial side, your patrons don't want to be flooded with a lot of advertising material, even though they live in a country town.

I regret that my experience showed that the average exchange manager seemed to figure on the basis that the patron in the smaller city and in the rural districts were very ignorant so far as motion pictures were concerned, and that one could "put over" almost anything on them. I think that comes from studying "conditions" from the home office and knowing nothing about the realities of the situation. While my experience has been limited to my home town, I can readily see that conditions might be diametrically opposite in two different towns.

But here is one thing that every exhibitor in a small city or a semi-rural community should remember. What the people read they read thoroughly—and they remember. The city man in his rush for time and seeing scores of papers, etc., may remember that he read a certain thing "somewhere," but it will be pretty hard for him to recall just where. But the patron in a community such as mine will know where, and, believe me, he is going to put the responsibility for the claims you make in your printed matter right up to you and hold YOU responsible. Too much of this matter that is prepared by the producer and distributor appears to have been written largely for the purpose of selling the picture to the exhibitor. It deals in exaggeration and sometimes in distortion. But, let me say, that there has been a marked tendency lately to get away from this sort of matter, and I believe that the improvement will continue.

It is impossible for the exhibitor in the small town to see the pictures before he books them. I know well enough that this would be the ideal way to arrange your program, and that you could give a much better bill if you could reject any film that failed to come up to your standard. But with that impossible, only the next best thing can be done: Don't let any one else say for you things the truth of which you do not know. If you do you will regret it. Of course, you have to become acquainted with the various companies through experience and learn how far you can trust their various statements, but it is always the safe thing to do to avoid superlatives and big promises.

I know this to my regret, for during the early weeks on my management I sent out one of the folders supplied by the producers. In my rush I failed to read it through before the copies were mailed, and when I did I found in it such statements as the old favorite, "Greater than 'The Birth of a Nation,'" and similar matter. When I saw the picture a couple of hours before I was to show it to the public, I found that it was merely an average picture, and there was nothing really great about it. While I had not raised my prices for this picture, I did a daring thing. I printed a small sign announcing the fact that the prices had been lowered for the run of this picture, and after the feature was shown I flashed a slide on the screen stating that this picture had not come up to advance promises, and for that reason I had lowered the admission, but that if any one was still dissatisfied that person could get his money back at the box-office. One person took advantage of the offer during the two days. If I had done this thing deliberately it would not have worked for better results. It inspired confidence in me and my theatre; it convinced the public that I had their interests at heart, and that as soon as I learned that I had made a mistake I was not going to make them pay for it.

I have been told that this was very bad business on my part to ever lower my prices or admit that I had made an error. I was asked whether I intended to do this on other pictures that failed to come up to the highest standard. I replied that of course I did not, but that I never again expected to let slip by me an announcement that any picture was the greatest that the world had ever seen, and that when there went out again any unequivocal statement about a picture that it was going out because I knew that it was true. Now, of course, this is an exception, for most producers avoid this class of statements, but every exhibitor can afford the time to read over carefully any printed matter that he does send out.

But I was referring to my general policy about circular matter. Certainly with a theatre such as mine, changing three times a week, it would be foolish to send out circular matter on each production, for the whole value would be lost. However, I did determine on one policy. Not less than once a month I went to my exchange city, and I made it a point then to see as many of the pictures that I had booked for the next month as possible. Then I would pick out one or possibly two of these for what I called my "special drives." It was not necessarily an unusual picture, but it had to be a good one, one that met the acid test of being thoroughly interesting. Then I sat down and wrote myself a letter about this picture, and sent it under letter postage to every one on my list.

I did not do this because this was a better picture than my standard, but merely for the purpose of calling the attention of all of the people to my theatre. This was not done for the purpose of increasing the business on that particular picture, but to bring back to the habit of coming to my house any persons that were tending to drift away. In the first couple of months on my management I found that there were such drifts, and I could not lay them to bad pictures, to bad weather or business conditions or anything else. The only way that I could define it was that some of the patrons seemed to be "getting out of the habit."

My personal letters, I am sure, saved me hundreds of patrons that might have been lost permanently. I had allowed the drift to continue. Because I hadn't been flooding my patrons with reading matter on every production I found they gave attention to the matter that they did get. An illustration: In one of the special letters that I prepared I started off with the statement, "I haven't seen you at our theatre for quite a few days." I had no less than nine people to come up to me to call my attention to the fact that they had been in my house on specific days during that period. I excused it on the ground that I had failed

HEADS UP

Put Yourself in Your Theatre and Stand for It

THIS week Successful Exhibitor touches on putting his personality into his theatre—on making his guarantee stand for the picture that he is to show.

His attitude is in direct contrast to the man who is trying to bunk the public and to the fellow who tries to argue with his patron that his offering is a good one, when the patron doesn't like it.

It is a policy in direct contrast to the "best ever" system. And there are many others who have tried it. We want to hear from the men who are making successes because they make their houses the CLASS of their communities.

Scores of them are doing things that others ought to know. Let us hear from you about them.

Lobby Display at Midway Theatre, Montreal, on First Episode of "The Mystery Ship."

RIVOLI, on account of a peculiarity in its arrangement, offers a splendid opportunity to study the effect of music and pictures on an audience. And Rothapfel furnishes that combination of music and pictures and lighting that causes the swaying of the audiences almost at will. It is really something that the greater majority of exhibitors could study to good account.

Looking down from the first mezzanine floor there is a large oval well which allows one on the mezzanine an opportunity to look down upon the rear portion of the audience. On the mezzanine one cannot see the screen, but one may hear the music and especially after one has seen the show it is a study to watch an audience, the way it sits in its strain at some serious moment, and then, with the music, is carried into laughter or into cheers. It is a sure sign that Mr. Rothapfel has succeeded in establishing a motif for each of his presentations.

That statement is fully borne out by an effect that is achieved this week with two of the Robert Bruce-Educational Film scenics used as a double number. Of wonderful beauty and worthy of showing in themselves it was the music with them and the coupling up of them with the number that had gone before and the one that followed gave the atmosphere. Watch the effect:

After the overture and the Rivoli Animated, Miss Annie David rendered "Aeolus' Harp" with delightful skill and giving it a dramatic interpretation at the end. Then came the first of the scenics, "Where the Clouds Come From." "Cameno Ostrow" was played with the harp and organ effects through it. It seemed that the soloist's number was echoing back through the wonderful cloud pictures that were being thrown on the screen. This picture was a remarkable study in cloud effects and included some of the most unusual shots that have been recorded. Then came the second of the scenics, "White Water and Windy Willie," an amusing record of outdoor sport, and with this there were played selections from "Princess Pat." They were most appropriate in themselves, but one saw the purpose at the end of the scenic when the curtain parted, revealing Miss Helena Morrill seated in the rose garden and opening with the words of "Love Is the Best of All" from "Princess Pat." Why, of course, no one in the audience could fail to "get it." This musical number was rendered with the Rivoli female chorus. Again the lightings were notable, the central dome of the theatre being in blue and the stage settings in red and gold with the exception of the dome of the stage, which was also in blue.

There was a third big musical number with the full Rialto chorus rendering the "Bell Chorus" from "I Pagliacci."

To the tune of "Dough Boy" the Animated opens with a Universal picture of our boys in France, which got a big hand and the same tune continued through a cartoon of Uncle Sam and Pershing. Universal also furnished pictures of cutting Great Lake steamers in half to bring them to the coast, shown to "Nautical Fantasy," which continued through Pathe pictures of constructing wooden ships. Mutual views of harvesting ice on Lake Hopatcong was shown to "Maid of U. S. A." and then pictures of Rodin and his funeral appeared with "Grave Allegro Funeber." Finley's "Rambles With a Naturalist," a study of young birds. "Flowerette" was played piccolo obligato with the effect of bird calls, delighted the audience. Then came another human touch with an educational picture, "Playmates," showing a parrot and a cat at their fun, for which the music was "I Don't Care If You Never Come Back." The Animated ended with Pathe pictures of Veterans of '61 at Camp Kearney. "Memories of 61" was played and at the opening bars of it the resemblance to the national air caused a number of people to start to rise.

Very effective musical effects were used during the showing of Charles Ray in "The Hired Man," with special descriptive work for the fire scene. There is a delightful patriotic touch to the Drew comedy this week, "Help Wanted," a story of the war knitters. At one point pictures of the Red Cross parade are shown and there "Onward, Christian Soldiers," is used. Opening the comedy was "What Sort of an American Are You," and then a fox trot, closing with "Over There."

Goldmark's "Sakuntala" was the overture.

Volcano Effect in Lobby Display Brings Crowd to Montreal House

WORK of A. J. Laurie, manager of the Midway theatre, Montreal, has been printed in the NEWS from time to time and his lobby displays have attracted much attention because he has kept up the good work that brought M. Kashin to the front as probably the best-known designer of the country today.

Those who read the series of articles printed in this department on the exploitation of serials, will remember that we urged big displays on opening of these chaptered stories. Mr. Laurie followed this policy to the letter on the showing of the initial episode of "The Mystery Ship," a Universal serial.

This part of the display has a volcano as the chief figure in the background and in the front the figures of the two stars, Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber fleeing in a launch from the ship which is in danger of destruction from the volcano. In the center of the crater of this artificial volcano, Mr. Laurie placed a huge red electric globe which kept costantly flashing to give the effect of the eruption, the lobby lights being turned off for a few minutes every half hour so that the entire display would be in a brilliant red effect.

One of the things to recommend this display is that it costs very little and it is one that every exhibitor can make. On every picture you ought to try to create the talk of your community, but especially in the case of opening a serial, you ought to make the display so original that everyone will stop to learn what it is all about. Small lettering explained this without interfering with the display and the Midway did big business.

Jap Lanterns Supply This House Light

Reading electric signs by candle light is one of the odd conditions brought about by the war. When the "lightless night" order issued by the federal fuel administrator went into effect in Cincinnati, O., the manager of a theatre there contracted for a large number of Japanese lanterns, which were hung around the marquee in front of the theatre.

Here are two views of the display of P. E. Noble, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Montana, on W. S. Hart in "The Silent Man." He used the twenty-four sheets supplied by Artcraft and cut out the two dominating figures, mounted them at either side of the lobby and used real rope for the lariat. Another one of his famous sidewalk electric signs, done in red and green, with white lights shining through. These were cut out of one sheet of attractions should take advertising, at least not more than one small display, if it is possible to avoid it, and the small cost of such a program should not make it worth while to worry about the advertising. As we have said, it is better to avoid advertising matter if you can afford to do so, but if you want to have one of the larger and more attractive programs you cannot afford to do it.

Now, once that you have entered into this larger class and have determined that you can get the advertising to pay the expenses, you want to fix in your mind another thing. To justify the increased size, to make it interesting enough for the patron to preserve and read and to keep the advertising patron, you must add something of interest. We don't know of any better way to do this than to run interesting little stories about the players. At the right of the cut we have reproduced two pages from the program of the Orpheum, Terre Haute, Ind. There is an excellent feature in the "Questions and Answers" department and one of great local interest if you have in your employ some one with sufficient information to answer them. The Studio Directory, published by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will afford you most of the information that you need, and you can gather other matter yourself from watching the NEWS and the motion picture magazines and gathering the data on ages, who is married, to whom, and all that sort of a thing. But it is a specially valuable channel for directing readers' attention to coming productions at your theatres by starting them to asking questions about when Mary Pickford or Harold Lockwood, or whoever your stars are, will be seen.

This is a slightly difficult job, though we have no doubt that managers can enlist the assistance of the photoplay editor in their town in helping on this work. Orpheum also runs a page devoted to "Reel News," short paragraphs about the plays and players which can easily be gathered from the producers' press sheets or from the columns of the NEWS. Note that the Majestic theatre uses "Chatter," "Close-Ups" and "Film Notes." It is a good thing to break these paragraphs up under a number of headings, for it relieves the monotony. Franklin theatre runs longer stories about coming productions. It is a good thing to devote space to stories about the plays that are to be seen in the future, but we would not give this to attractions for the current week, except probably to the Saturday bill.

We are great believers in the use of cuts in all advertising matter. Wherever available the Victoria uses a cut with the announcement for the day. It is interesting to the patron of the current bill and it builds patronage for the announcements made for later in the week. It is an added incentive to preserve the programs—this use of cuts. All of the others also use these with some of their announcements, but this could be carried even further and would make a more attractive appearance and save money if small half column cuts were used broken into the matter.

But with these suggestions used, with the changes that we have suggested, you have the basis for an attractive program, and one for which you ought to be able to get advertising enough to pay. With an eight-page program the size of the Franklin's you ought to be able to include all these suggestions that we have made in this article, and the preceding ones, yet there are some other things to be considered in making up the very best possible program and the one that will bring the most business to your house.

Constructive work, increasing the interest for the future, little home things that count, special stunts and a number of other points are worth considering, and these we will take up in a later article.

When you start out to construct a program, keep in mind above everything else that you are issuing the house organ for the benefit of your theatre. Once you lose sight of that, for the purpose of getting advertising, or any other, you weaken your sales argument. In the first place never let any offensive or improper advertisement get into your program. It is just as important as keeping a drunken tramp out of the seat next to women and children. You have to carry out the high tone through these displays as well as through everything else.

But once you have included in your program the announcements for each day that your program covers, the cast for the features, a "lap over" page, and then a little space for announcements, some for gossip of the plays and the players, and you have used skill in placing the advertising you have got a mighty good start.

to see them, but one patron took me up on that, saying: "Why, don't you remember talking to me about Bill Brown selling his farm." Now, I found that these intimate touches brought me close to the people, brought myself into their lives.

I had never forgotten a remark that I had made when I first took my place in the big city. I was speaking of how lucky I had been to get the position through acquaintance with a traveling salesman? "Luck nothing," said my friend, "you sold yourself to him, and he sold you to the firm. There are as many sales made every day in personality as in anything else." I had now begun to realize this and to strive to sell the personality of my theatre.

It is something that has many angles, brings up many difficulties, but it isn't hard when one forces himself to recall that every time he puts out an indorsement of a show he is selling himself to the trusting patron for the ten or fifteen cents.

And you have to be just as careful as if you were selling yourself into slavery—or habit. Don't get accustomed to putting your indorsement behind pictures whether you know anything about them or not. Know first and then don't be afraid to step out and ahead.

Ready Made Ad-Talks

"Madam Jealousy" with Pauline Frederick Presenting the Title Role

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

Pauline Frederick's latest work for the screen, titled "Madam Jealousy," was written by George V. Hobart, author of "Experience" and "Everywife," adapted by Eve Unsell, one of the best-know scenario writers, and produced by Paramount under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Frederick is seen in the role of a vampire. In her supporting cast are: Frank Losee, Thomas Meighan, Charles Wellesley, Isabelle O'Madigan, Elsie McCloud, Ina Bourke, Frances Cappelano, Grace Bartom, Edwin Sturgis, Marcia Harris and J. K. Murray.. "Madam Jealousy" is allegorical photoplay with scenes of Oriental luxury and beautiful exterior scenes as shown in "the garden of delight," an episode of the play. "The house of heavy hours" is another scene which has been reproduced on the screen by Director Vignola with picturesque beauty. The cast is composed of symbical figures representing Charm, Treachery, Jealousy and Valor. Jealousy, the part interpreted by Miss Frederick, attempts to interrupt a love romance between Charm and Valor, and, failing in this, Jealousy brings to her assistance Treachery and Mischief, Rumor and Sorrow, and the combined forces seek to disrupt the happy marriage of Charm and Valor. Charm and Valor withstand the onslaught of these disrupting forces, and Jealousy and her mates are defeated.

"Madam Jealousy," with Pauline Frederick in the title-role, will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. One of Miss Frederick's best works.

Vivian Martin in "A Petticoat Pilot"; Quaint Story of Cape Cod

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

Joseph C. Lincoln, author of the famous Cape Cod stories, such as "Capt'n Eri," "The Depot Master" and "Mr. Pratt," has written "A Petticoat Pilot," and it has been adapted to the screen and presents Vivian Martin in the featured role of Mary 'Gusta. Miss Martin has very many motion picture friends and has a long list of screen successes to her credit. Her latest work is a Paramount production, under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon. Gardner Hunting made the adaptation. It is a romantic love story, with nice bits of comedy scattered throughout the run of the five reels. In the supporting cast are seen Theodore Roberts, one of the best known character men on the screen; James Neill, Harrison Ford, Helen Gillmore, Richard Cummings, Jane Wolff, Bert Hadley, John Burton, Cecil Lionel, Jane Keckley, Antrim Short, Tom Bates, J. O. Pennell, Billy Crary, Clarice Urhe, Elinor Hancock and Jack Lott. Mary 'Gusta is an orphan girl, and is adopted by three quaint old sea captains. Mary is only twelve years of age when the story opens. When she is adopted by the three old sea captains, she takes charge of their affairs and rules them with an iron hand and a winsome smile. Arriving at maturity, Mary falls in love with a young Harvard graduate spending the summer at the little Cape Cod town. He is the son of one of the captains, whose wife hasdeserted him years before. She realizes that she can never marry the young man, because he is the son of her uncle's betrayer. The young man's father writes the captain for forgiveness. Later the young man's father dies, and a reconciliation is effected.

Vivian Martin, in "A Petticoat Pilot," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Madge Kennedy in "Our Little Wife," Adapted from Hapgood's Stage Play

(Goldwyn Five Reel Production)

The late Goldwyn photodrama features Madge Kennedy. It is titled, "Our Little Wife," and tells of an exciting matrimonial adventure. The screen version was adapted from the stage play by Avery Hopwood, author of "Fair and Warmer" and co-author of "Seven Days," both of which plays had successful runs on Broadway. You will remember Miss Kennedy for her fine work in "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married." In support of the star are seen William Davidson, Wray Page, Kempton Greene, Walter Hiers and Marguerite Marsh, sister of Mae Marsh. The picture was produced under the direction of Edward Dillon. Miss Kennedy has the part of Dodo, recently married. In marrying Herb, however, Dodo has left three sweethearts behind, and she is worried to think that she cannot marry all four. Before the wedding guests have left, Dodo announces to her husband that she intends taking on her honeymoon her three disappointed suitors. The party of five start on the unique honeymoon, and the husband, conceiving a plan to leave the three suitors behind, sends a telegram to himself, calling for his return to the city. Dodo learns that the telegram was sent by her husband. He returns to take her with him to the city, and finds her under the care of Dr. Elliott, one of her disappointed suitors. She tells him that his leaving has made her hysterical. This incident is only one of many that occur on the honeymoon of Dodo and Herb. Laughter and thrills follow one after the other in the screen of Miss Kennedy's latest picture.

"Our Little Wife," Madge Kennedy's latest work for the screen, will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Triangle All-Star Cast in "The Captain of His Soul"

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

Triangle has produced a screen drama, entitled "The Captain of His Soul," written by Eleanor T. Kinkade, scenarioized by Lillian Ducey, and produced under the direction of G. P. Hamilton. In the cast are seen Walt Whitman, Jules Friquet, William Desmond, Charles Gunn, Jack Richardson, Mitzi Gould, Eugene Burr, Claire McDowell, Percy Challenger and Lucretia Harris. William Desmond, Jack Richardson, Charles Gunn and Claire McDowell, are well-known screen artists. They all have prominent parts in this late Triangle production. The story tells of a man who is haunted with the thought that his brother has killed the man who had ruined his father. The man goes to the desert, and stops with a hermit, who shares his lodge with him. The hermit reads a poem to his guest, which awakens in the man a sense of duty and recalls his home. He learns that his brother Henry, whom he suspects of the murder, is ill at Palm Beach. He goes there, and Henry recovers, and the two men fall in love with the same woman. In a jealous rage Henry accuses his brother of murdering the girl's husband. He is saved by the confession of Annette De Searcy, who confesses that she is the one who murdered the man, whose life the brother was accused of taking.

"The Captain of His Soul" is adapted from a popular magazine story, and presents a strong, convincing drama. William Desmond, Charles Gunn, Claire McDowell and Jack Richardson are seen in prominent roles. It will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Real Folks," $1,000 Prize Story, with Fritzi Ridgeway and Strong Cast

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

Fritzi Ridgeway, J. Barney Sherry, Francis McDonald, Alberta Lee, Marion Skinner, Betty Pearce and George Pearce are seen in a late Triangle $1,000 prize photoplay, "Real Folks." Kate Corbaley is the lucky author, and she has written a heart-interest story of unusual dramatic power. Jack Cunningham adapted Miss Corbaley's story for screen presentation, and the picture was produced under the direction of Walter Edwards. Francis McDonald is the hero, and Fritzi Ridgeway is the heroine. Jimmie insists upon marrying Joyce Clifton, a dancing teacher, and his father is equally as insistent that he will not. Jimmie had been expelled from college for a quarrel with three school chums, and his father had never forgiven him for the disgrace which he said the son brought upon the Dugan family. Now that Jimmie wanted to marry a dancing teacher, the father rose in opposition and threatens to disinherit Jimmie if he carries out his plans. But Joyce was the niece of Lady Blessington, the Dugan's next-door neighbor, and when this fact is discovered and father meets the charming little girl whom he had ridiculed just because she was a dancing teacher, he changes his opinion of her, and when he learns that his son and Joyce had been married, he welcomes them both to his home.

"Real Folks" is the story that won the $1,000 prize offered by Triangle for the best scenario. "Real Folks" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. J. Barney Sherry, Fritzi Ridgeway and Francis McDonald are seen in the principal roles.

Earle Williams and Miriam Miles in "A Mother's Sin"—Strong Support

(Vitagraph Five Reel Production)

Vitagraph presents Earle Williams in "A Mother Sin," his latest work for the screen. Miriam Miles, Ernest Maupin, Denton Vane, Fred Peters, Charles Horton, Louise De Pre and Eleanor Lawson are in support. The story was written by Hilda Sharpe, and the picture was produced by Vitagraph under the direction of Tom Mills. This photodrama will hold your attention from the announcement of the title to the final flash on the screen, and you will see Mr. Williams in one of his best portrayals—that of a young man who is made to suffer for his mother's wrong. Mr. Williams has the role of Patrick Yardley, who has expended his fortune, and goes to his father's home to ask for money. His father who has purposely allowed him to go the pace that kills, refuses him because he resembles his mother, who had left his father years before. He bequeaths his estate and money to Vincent, a nephew. Patrick loves Celia Graham, and when her mother learns that Patrick has been cut off from the will of his father she persuades her daughter to discontinue her associations with Patrick and win the affections of Vincent. Patrick goes abroad to start anew. Before Patrick's father had died he learned of the betrayal of a young girl. He suspects Vincent, but Vincent tells him that Patrick is the betrayer. It develops that Vincent has been masquerading under the name of Patrick. This the old man learns before his death and makes a new will, which he conceals in a book. Patrick returns from abroad. Patrick's former valet who knew of Vincent's affair with the girl, goes to Vincent and demands money. The will is found, and Patrick's lawyer friend proves Patrick's right to the estate. Patrick and Celia are untied.

Earle Williams and Miriam Miles in "A Mother's Sin" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Broken Ties" Solves Strange Murder; Montagu Love, June Elvidge Featured

June Elvidge, Montagu Love, Arthur Ashley and Pinna Nesbit present the principal roles in World Pictures late rate release, "Broken Ties," produced under the direction of Arthur Ashley. The story was written by Woodbridge Clapp. Others in the cast are: Kate Lester, Alec B. Francis, Arthur Matthews and Frances Miller. The story tells of the predicament in which a conscientious attorney finds himself when he attempts to solve the the mystery of the murder of a prominent citizen. The murdered man's nephew is accused of the murder, and John Fleming (Montagu Love), a noted attorney, is engaged to defend him. The murdered man's nephew is engaged to Corinne Curtis (Pinna Nesbit), who has negro blood in her veins. His nephew knows nothing of this, but Corinne overheard her father tell the story of her birth before he died. She loves the nephew, and when she discovers the uncle writing his nephew, informing him of her parentage, she stabs him to death. The attorney's wife and mother are drawn into the murder, and this situation John Fleming has to face when he attempts to show the court that the nephew is innocent.

"Broken Ties" is a mystery drama, and one of the best. It is presented by artists of the screen. The drama holds from start to finish and presents entertainment for all, old and young. "Broken Ties" will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. June Elvidge, Montagu Love, Arthur Ashley and Pinna Nesbit present the leading roles.

Clara Kimball Young in French Play, "The Marionettes"—Society Drama

"The Marionettes," Clara Kimball Young's late picture by her own company, released through Select Pictures, is one that patrons of the ——— theatre should not miss if they desire to see Miss Young in a typical Clara Kimball Young production. "The Marionettes" is an adaptation of Pierre Wolff's French drama of the same title. The scenes are laid in France, and the social life of Paris is set forth in its most dazzling raiment. Miss Young is first seen as a convent girl, who later marries a titled Frenchman, and becomes one of the most popular and attractive women of Paris society. As the wife of Roger de Monclars, Miss Young presents a picture that will not be forgotten soon, and as the demure little convent girl she typifies the type. The story deals with social life in Paris, and has been transferred to the screen by Emile Chautard with every detail worked out with a degree of skill and lavishness that will appeal to the finer senses, and leave a lasting impression. Fernande de Ferney (Clara Kimball Young) is taken from the quiet of a convent and made the mistress of Roger de Monclars's home. Roger has married her because he wishes to obtain money from his mother, and she promises him an allowance on conditions that he will marry Fernande. She is a demure, unsophisticated little girl, and he considers her his wife in name only. He leaves for Monte Carlo, and on his return his wife has blossomed forth as one of the most beautiful women of Paris society. He realizes then that he has made a mistake, and that he loves her.

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

Dorothy Dalton returns to the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in one of J. G. Hawks' stories of Western life, "Flare-Up Sal." It tells of the days of the "forty-niners," and a more actionable Western drama would be hard to find than this late Paramount production under the direction of R. William Neil, and supervised by Thomas H. Ince. In the supporting cast with Miss Dalton are seen Thurston Hall, William Conklin, J. P. Lockney, considered by critics to be one of the best character men on the screen, and Milton Ross. "Flare-Up Sal" is a typical Western picture, and it has been given a regular wild and woolly production by Director Neil. He has taken his company into giant redwood section of California for the exterior scenes, and the interior scenes including the dance hall and gambling scenes are marvels for their exactness in duplicating similar scenes during the days of the gold rush to California. Miss Dalton has the title-role. She becomes the queen of a dance hall. The Red Rider, a notorious outlaw, hears of her, and his curiosity gets the better of him, so he arrays himself in the garb of a minister, and visits the town and meets Sal. He has imprisoned the minister on his way to take charge of the parish of the mining town, and he is welcomed as the new minister. Sal plans to run him out of town, but falls in love with him instead, and they both leave and are married. The above is but a running outline of the story. There is action every minute, and Miss Dalton's characterization of Flare-Up Sal is one of her best.

"Jilted Janet," a Rippling Comedy-Drama with Margarita Fischer Featured

(Mutual Five Reel Production)

Margarita Fischer's late comedy-drama is titled "Jilted Janet," and it is a corker. The management of the ———— theatre recommends it as satisfying to the highest degree, and requests every patron of the ———— theatre to see it when it is shown on the screen ———— of ———— week. Miss Fischer is supported by Jack Mower, David Howard, Golda Madden, Edward Peil, Jean Robbins and Fred Smith. The story was written by Elizabeth Mahoney, who has contributed many successes to the list of screen dramas. It was produced by the American Film Company, under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. It is in five reels. Janet Barnes is the role interpreted by Miss Fischer. Janet is not wealthy, but she is pretty. Her sweetheart, Ernest Morgan, jilts her in favor of Suzette Sparks. She sends a postcard to Morgan, showing a beautiful residence owned by Jules Graham, a wealthy resident. She asks Morgan how he likes her new home. Morgan writes in reply that he and his wife will visit her on their honeymoon. Janet persuades the caretakers to lend her the house for a few days, the owner being away. When the Morgans arrive she entertains them in the height of fashion. She leads Morgan to believve that she is the owner, and he forgets his wife and pays all attention to Janet. Graham arrives unexpectedly, and, learning from the caretakers the joke, enters into the spirit of the occasion, and disguises himself as the butler. She is dumfounded when she learns that her butler is the owner of the house. She dismisses the newlyweds, and Graham proposes and is accepted, and Janet becomes mistress of the home.

KNOW FIRST

These Ad Talks Will Tell You About Your Picture

IN this week's instalment of the Diary of a Successful Exhibitor, the writer tells of his experiences in mistakenly using exaggeration in exploiting one picture and impresses upon his fellow exhibitors the importance of never telling the public something about a picture which you don't know is true.

Aside from the danger of exaggeration, no man can advertise a picture unless he has an outline of it before him. These Ad Talks are of immense value even if they were used for no other purpose than to inform the exhibitor himself. But they may be used bodily for your reading notices in the newspapers. They are written for the man who is either too busy to write his own material or who fails to get any or satisfactory men from the producer's publicity department.

On another page you will see an account of what one country exhibitor is doing through a weekly. These will help you do the same. The man to whom reference is made is prospering; you will prosper if you take advantage of all your opportunities.

"Naulahka," Kipling's Best Known Work Presented by Pathe

(Pathe Six Reel Production)

Rudyard Kipling's "Nulahka" has been adapted to the screen and produced by Pathe under the direction of George Fitzmaurice. In the cast are seen Doraldina, the famous dancer, Antonio Moreno, Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick, Mary Alden and J. H. Gilmour. It is a story of Romance and Adventure dealing with American energy and ambition. It is one of the biggest special features that has ever been produced by Pathe. The millions have read Rudyard Kipling's works and among them none have been enjoyed more than his "Naulahka." Doraldina, who is known throughout the world for her dancing, has the role of the gypsy queen about whose machinations to place her son on the throne revolves the exciting story in which two young Americans find themselves playing such important parts. Antonio Moreno has the role of Nick Tarvin, a wide-awake energetic young American from the West. His dream is to build his home town in Colorado into a big metropolis. His ambitions are carried out. Warner Oland, prominent in some of Pathe's biggest serials has an important role in this production.

It will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

"Bud's Recruit," a Judge Willis Brown Story in Pictures

"Bud's Recruit," written by Judge Willis Brown, of the Chicago juvenile court and noted throughout the country for his work in this connection, has been adapted to the screen and will be presented on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. The production is in two reels. In the cast are Wallis Brennan, Robert Gordon and Ruth Hampton. Reggie learns that his number is so far down the draft list that there is little danger of his being called into service. His fiancee is delighted. Bud, his kid brother, feels the disgrace of having a brother as a slacker and shows his contempt for Reggie in several ways. Finally Bud can stand the disgrace no longer, so he impersonates Reggie and enlists in his name. Reggie is at once congratulated on all sides and is bewildered until he sees his name among the list of those enlisted. The realization that the part he is playing is not a manly one, dawns upon him and he hurries to the recruiting booth and arrives just in time to answer to his name. Bud still in the role of Reggie takes off his disguise and congratulates his brother. A Judge Willis Brown story, "Bud's Recruit" will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Edna Goodrich, the famous stage and screen star next appears at the ———— theatre in "Who Loved Him Best," a five-reel drama produced by Mutual Film Corporation under the direction of Dell Henderson. In the supporting cast are seen Herbert Evans, Frank Otto, Charles Martin, Mirial Folger, Burt Busby, Nadia Cary, Thomas Wallace, Francois Du Barry and Talulah Bankhead. Miss Goodrich has the role of Doria Dane, a motion picture star who meets George Steele, a sculptor of Greenwich Village, the artist section of New York, and the two become strangely attached to each other. Doria is persuaded to pose for the sculptor. Mrs. Schuyler, a wealthy widow who maintains a Bohemian salon, is interested in the sculptor and becomes jealous of his attentions to Doria. Henry North whose studio adjoins that of Steele's is in turn jealous of the widow's attentions to Steele. Doria gives up her work before the camera to pose for Steele and under her influence, Steele becomes a famous sculptor. At the Greenwich Village Ball, the artist's "Bacchanale," Steele's attentions to the widow convinces Doria that he has tired of her. She leaves and returns to the studio where she discovers North copying Steele's model for a statue, which he considers his masterpiece. Later when friends are gathered in the studio to view the statue, Doria rushes in and smashes the whole with a hammer. Later when she and Steele are reconciled, she explains that the statue which she had smashed was the copy made by North.

"The Moment of Victory," an O. Henry Picture with a Laugh a Minute

"The Moment of Victory," an O. Henry subject, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. In the cast are Chet Ryan, Patricia Palmer, Jack Wetherby and W. L. Rogers. The picture is in two reels. Willie Robbins is afraid of girls; still you can't keep him from them. And Willie loses his heart to Myra Allison, the prettiest and liveliest girl in San Augustine. Willie is rejected by Myra and to forget it all he enlists in the army. Myra marries Joe Cranberry, but when Willie hears of this he seems quite indifferent. The war is over and Willie returns to San Augustine and is met by the Mayor and a brass band and schoolgirls. He is the hero of the occasion. After the welcome Willie makes for the little white cottage of Joe Cranberry. Myra was on the porch, untidy and unattractive. Willie waltzes up to her and the joke is on Myra.

"The Moment of Victory," an O. Henry subject, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This O. Henry story is a bit different from his others, but just as entertaining and more funny.

Manitoba Censor Condemns Many Reels

In fourteen days the Manitoba Censor Board, consisting of Mrs. Valence Patriarche, Mrs. Wm. F. Osborne and James Willoughby, have condemned outright forty-eight reels of pictures, including all comedies but one or two. On account of this latter fact the exchange men, who bring in all pictures for Manitoba and Saskatchewan, have announced that they will bring in no comedies after March 1. Every one of the Sennett-Paramount comedies which have thus far been seen in Winnipeg have been so mutilated by the censors that they have appeared really inane and silly.

Included in the forty-eight reels were the first eight episodes of "Vengeance and the Woman," Vitagraph's latest serial. The present board has taken a stand against the serial picture. They condemned several episodes of "The Gray Ghost" in toto, some little time ago, and butchered up the rest so badly that all theatres which were running the Universal picture cancelled their contracts.

Live News from the Producers

"Hysteria Worst," Says Pathe

Berst Declares Industry's Most Serious Situation Is Yelp Put up by Calamity Howlers — Says Business Not Normal

"THE most serious situation that the industry confronts today," said J. A. Berst, of Pathe, this week to a representative of Motion Picture News, "is the inclination toward hysteria that is apparent in some quarters.

"It was inevitable," continued Mr. Berst, "that in times of national stress the effects of the great world war would be felt in all quarters. The minute normal conditions of things are disturbed, calamity howlers begin to yelp and whine. Unfortunately they seldom, if ever, represent the true spirit of the industry, but their cries nevertheless are bound to have their evil results.

"Sit steady in the boat. Be an optimist if you can. I have been asked many times for a statement as to my opinion as to the present and the future of the motion picture industry. Up to now, I have refrained because I feared that my statement would be misconstrued if I failed to state we were doing the greatest business in our history and that conditions were wonderful.

"This is not so. My recent trip to the West, during which I visited a number of branches, has convinced me that business, so far as the exhibitor is concerned, is not normal. There has been a falling off in attendance, but this has been offset to a great extent by increased admission prices.

"The greatest trouble, as Tom Moore of Washington and a number of other prominent exhibitors have pointed out, is that the exhibitors have been paying inflated prices that did not give them a chance to make a profit. Before the war, when business was good, they were able to do this and still be on the right side of the ledger.

"One company that apparently was over-stocked with pictures that had no extensive showing, has announced that to help the exhibitors, they will give one picture free. This announcement has been received in some quarters as a step toward the [illegible] of the problem.

"In my opinion it is a mistake because it is not based on sound business principles. Pictures cost money to produce and distribute and no concern, no matter how prosperous, can afford to give away its merchandise. One of the champions of this plan is the editor of a trade paper magazine. I doubt very much if that same editor would consider giving away any free advertising to some of the producing and distributing companies that are losing money.

"Pathe in my opinion has a much better solution of the problem of decreased box-office revenue. We believe that our Pathe plays will make money for every exhibitor who shows them, and we are proud to point to the list of releases in the first group which is as follows: 'Innocent,' with Fannie Ward; 'Loaded Dice,' with Frank Keenan; 'The Naulahka,' with Antonio Moreno and Doraldina; 'How Could You Bessie,' with Bessie Love; 'Twenty-One,' with Bryant Washburn; 'The First Law,' with Irene Castle."

Nilde Babette Engaged for One Year

The Jester Comedy Company has signed up for one year with Nilde Babette to play opposite Twede-Dan. Miss Babette appears in the first two releases, "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance," and her work proved so satisfactory that she was contracted for, for the first series of twelve Jester Comedies.

Philadelphia Savoy Books Chaplin

The Savoy theatre of downtown Philadelphia, has booked the Essanay-Chaplin new edition of "A Woman" for a five-day run, according to word received by General Film Company. This is the fifth of a series of new prints of Charlie Chaplin's earlier pictures being distributed once a month by General Film Company.

Billie Rhodes is Mutual-Strand star in "Their Little Kid"

Lois Weber Begins New Production

After spending more than a month in carefully working out the details of the production, Lois Weber started last week on the staging of a new six reel photoplay. The story is being filmed under the tentative title, "For Husbands Only."

Mildred Harris is the star of "For Husbands Only." Lewis J. Cody has the principal male role. Other players who enact prominent parts are Kathleen Kirkham, who lately has been working at the Paralta studio with Douglas Fairbanks, and Fred Goodwins, who has just completed a principal part in Mary Pickford's latest picture. A feature of Miss Weber's new production will be the appearance in many of the scenes of the Denishawn dancers, the advanced pupils of Ruth St. Denis and Ten Shawn.

Arbuckle Starts New Comedy Feature

After closeting himself with his scenario editor, Herbert Warren, for the past week, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has now commenced production on his new comedy for Paramount release, following "Out West."

In the new picture "Fatty" appears as night clerk and head barber in a rube hotel. Al. St. John plays the part of a lazy bellboy and Buster Keaton portrays the village pest and one of the barbers who talks his patrons into insensibility. Alice Lake presents her conception of a manicurist opposite "Fatty," and Joe Keaton pictures a "hick" character, known to all small towns.

Mutual Issues New Style Photos

Effective with the release of Edna Goodrich in "Who Loved Him Best"? released on February 4, Mutual is issuing a new style of both 11 x 14's and 22 x 28's hand-colored photographs made in the gelatine process and printed on expensive stock. They will be issued on each of the Mutual star productions in sets of eight, six 11 by 14 inches and two 22 by 28 inches, one of the latter to be a star portrait.

Barclay Makes Comedy for Essanay

Don Barclay, comedian, is now at work in the Essanay studios on a comedy for release through General Film.

Mr. Barclay imitates no one in his characterizations, as in his career he has evolved a number of rare get-ups all his own.

Select Directors Get Assignments

Charles Giblyn Will Direct Alice Brady in "Ruthless Russia," and William D. Taylor Makes Constance Talmadge Feature —Vignola Directs Miss Young

VARIOUS changes within the directorial circles of the companies producing motion pictures for release through Select Pictures Corporation have been brought about within the past week, or are being worked out now. Announcements from Select imply that at least three out of four feminine Select stars will change directors for forthcoming pictures.

Norma Talmadge, the fourth of the stars, is planning to rest for a month, following the completion of "By Right of Purchase." Her goal for the hibernating period is understood to be Palm Beach.

Vignola Directs Young

Clara Kimball Young has chosen Robert G. Vignola to direct "The Reason Why," the next picture she is planning to make for Select. Mr. Vignola has but recently completed Alice Brady's latest Select offering, "The Knife," and for a number of productions was Pauline Frederick's director. He is one of the best known men in the field.

Miss Young is at present looking over plans for interiors, choosing players for the cast and selecting her gowns, which are scheduled to be exceedingly beautiful. The story is one of high social life and deals with the marital entanglements of a fascinating widow and a typical Elinor Glyn hero. Endless complications mark the unfolding of the tale and Miss Young has a role dramatic and romantic as well.

Filming on "The Reason Why" will be started almost immediately and will follow "The House of Glass," which the star after several weeks of strenuous work completed a few days ago.

In Manhattan Studio

Charles Giblyn has been chosen to direct Alice Brady in her next Select production, at present called "Ruthless Russia." Mr. Giblyn has just completed a picture with Ann Pennington and prior to that launched Constance Talmadge on her flight to stardom when he directed her three Select Pictures, "Scandal," "The Honeymoon," and "The Studio Girl."

Production on the new play was started this week at the Fifty-sixth street studios. Its theme and setting take the star back to familiar stamping grounds, for it was as an exponent of Russian stories that Miss Brady achieved her early success on the screen and her characterization of Russian heroines has become a byword in the profession.

The picture deals with scenes in Russian modern life, its action taking place shortly before and during the Russian revolution. Miss Brady plays the part of an army surgeon's daughter who becomes the victim of and later marries one of the Czar's bodyguard. The role is said to be tensely dramatic and affords her numberless opportunities for emotional acting.

She is again supported by Frank Morgan, who played opposite her in her recent Select production, "The Knife," While the cast is not as yet complete, Charles Francis, Harry Southard and Russell Bassett have been assigned to important roles, and the remainder of the players will be chosen during the coming week.

On the West Coast

At Hollywood, California, in the Pallas Morosco Studios, Constance Talmadge has started work on her latest Select production, "Up the Road With Sallie." The story is a picturization of the novel by Frances Sterrett, the scenario having been prepared by Julia Crawford Ivors.

Miss Talmadge, who has just finished making a film version of Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "The Shuttle," for Select, has a new director in this, the second of her Select Pictures to be made in the West. "Up the Road with Sallie" will be directed by William D. Taylor, who directed Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer," "Huck and Tom," and "His Majesty Bunker Bean." As Mr. Taylor's forte is comedy, backed by dramatic incident—just the type of material with which Constance Talmadge scored in "Scandal"—and, as "Up the Road with Sallie" combines humor with drama in brilliant style, both Mr. Taylor and his star stand to boost their previous reputations with this production.

Supporting Miss Talmadge will be Norman Kerry, who has recently played lead in the support of Mary Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley."

Norma Talmadge Rests

With the completion last week of "By Right of Purchase," Norma Talmadge's next Select production, in which she will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck, the star is planning to abandon the picture world for a month's rest and will leave the latter part of this week for Palm Beach.

In "By Right of Purchase" Miss Talmadge enacts the role of a dainty butterfly forced by circumstances into a wealthy marriage with a man whom she does not love. Her gradual awakening to the nobility of her husband's character, and the complications that arise out of the belief that she has lost his love make for an appealing drama of marital life. In it the star is supported by Eugene O'Brien. The picture was directed by Charles Miller, who also directed "The Secret of the Storm Country" and "Ghosts of Yesterday," Miss Talmadge's two previous offerings.

Badger Comes East to Direct Normand

Clarence G. Badger, journalist, magazine writer and director, has been brought from the Pacific Coast by Goldwyn to direct Mabel Normand in her second Goldwyn production. The new play, as yet unnamed, gives Miss Normand the role of a newspaper "copy girl."

Screen players who will be seen in Miss Normand's support are Charlotte Granville, Helen Dahl, Willard Dashiell, Lincoln Plumer, Wallace McCutcheon and Louis R. Grisel.

Lee Children Complete Fox Feature

A new Standard picture in which Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox stars, are presented, has been completed. Its release date has not been announced.

The new picture is a comedy drama written by Kenean Buel, who also directed the picture, and is said to provide the little Lees with an excellent vehicle in which to display their talents as fun-makers.

Special Music for "Lest We Forget"

"Lest We Forget," Metro's screen spectacle, based on the sinking of the Lusitania, starring Rita Jolivet, has a musical setting especially arranged by George William Beynon. Mr. Beynon conducts the orchestra of thirty pieces, which is adding to the effectiveness of the New York run of "Lest We Forget" at the Lyric theatre.

"La Tosca" Feature Completed

Pauline Frederick Has Star Role, and Plans to Make Another Similar Picture—Famous Players Active

THE last scenes of "La Tosca" were taken in the Fifty-sixth street studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week, and the big settings have been dismantled. This spectacular starring vehicle for Pauline Frederick was finished in good time, no serious circumstances having caused a delay, the exteriors being taken in southern Florida during favorable weather.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is said to be so pleased over the results attained that arrangements have been made to follow this picture with another extraordinary subject with Miss Frederick as the star, to be directed by Edward Jose, the producer of "La Tosca."

Among the cast supporting Miss Frederick are Frank Losee as Scarpia, Jules Raucourt as Mario, Henry Herbert as Angelotti and W. S. Forestelle as Spoletti. The Paramount release date has not yet been set.

An exodus of players took place when a number of actors from the East coast studios shook the snow and ice from their feet and joyfully departed for the sunny clime of California. Among those who returned to Hollywood were Wallace Reid and Ann Little, who were filming exteriors for a production being made out West. Donald Crisp, Wallace Reid's director; Tom Meighan, who has been transferred to California, and Jack Pickford, who took advantage of a two weeks' vacation to make a flying trip to the western metropolis, completed the party.

The interiors of "Sunshine Nan," Miss Pennington's next Paramount Picture, were completed last week, and she starts on the exterior this week.

Billie Burke's next Paramount Picture will be a comedy satire on incompatibility, entitled "Let's Get a Divorce." Additional interest is given this photoplay by reason of the fact that the story was written by Anita Loos and John Emerson expressly for Miss Burke. Miss Loos and Mr. Emerson were interested spectators during the filming of the noted star's last picture, "Eve's Daughter," which has just been completed, and in which unfolded a vein of comedy which has been used as the basis of the new story. Joseph Kaufman, who directed Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs," will have charge of the production.

At the Fifty-fourth street studio Elsie Ferguson is starting on a new production for Artcraft release, from a scenario by Charles Maigne in which Betty Howe has been engaged to play the chief supporting role to the popular star.

At the Fort Lee studios Maurice Tourneur is directing Marguerite Clark in "Prunella." This is a fanciful production, with idealized characters, and Tourneur is adopting some novel methods in producing it which it is claimed is a decided advancement of the art. Jules Raucourt, who has just finished with Pauline Frederick in "La Tosca," plays the leading male role.

Clarence Brown, who has been Tourneur's assistant for some time, has enlisted in the aviation corps and dons his uniform next week. Winthrop Kelly succeeds him and has already entered upon his duties.

Pathe Activities Gain Speed

Washburn Works on Coast, While Keenan Prepares to Begin—Bessie Love Is on the Way —Fannie Ward Soon

GREAT activity, according to a Pathe announcement this week, prevails at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, where, in keeping with the recently announced arrangement for the production of Pathe Plays, work is already moving along in full swing.

Bryant Washburn is appearing in another story by George Randolph Chester, and from advance accounts of all who have seen it, it will prove an ideal vehicle for him.

So successful was the combination of Frank Keenan and Ernest C. Warde, as star and director on the first picture they did together, that it is announced that they have already gone West, arriving at the Paralta Studio this week ready to begin work on a picture, the announcement of which in the near future is expected to create something of a sensation.

Bessie Love returned to New York from a trip South and has left for Los Angeles, where she will begin work in a picture by the Magazine writer, William Addison Lathrop. Fannie Ward will soon be on her way across the continent.

Further interest centers in the announcement that William Duncan, fresh from recent successes and engaged by Pathe for the production of something new in Pathe serials will also shortly start work at the Paralta Studio.

Reports from the Coast are that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, carefully investigated every plant in the vicinity of Los Angeles before deciding upon Paralta as that in which he wanted Pathe's Western activities to center.

The announcement that Jack Cunningham has been appointed to handle Pathe's Western interests serves to mark the rise of a very clever man who in a few years has attained this position after experiencing in practically every line of the business preceded by long contract with big city newspapers. Cunningham was in the old Triangle line-up and big results are expected from his administration of Pathe's Western affairs under the supervision of Mr. Berst at the Eastern Executive offices.

Rose Tapley, Special Representative for Paramount

Rose Tapley Begins Paramount Journey

MISS ROSE TAPLEY, who was recently engaged as special Paramount representative to make a tour in connection with the Benjamin Chapin series, "The Son of Democracy," last week started on her itinerary making Boston her first stop. Miss Tapley is now spending a week in the New England territory, working in conjunction with Mr. Harry Asher, New England District Manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The first address by Paramount's traveling representative was before the members of the Film Club in Boston, at a tea given in her honor. Miss Tapley received a warm reception here and later addressed the Dorchester Woman's Clubs in Dorchester, the Exhibitors' Banquet held recently at the Quincy House and a number of theatres including the Modern, Beacon, Shawmut, Fenway, Allston and Dudley.

In her speaking tour, Miss Tapley will work hand in hand with local exhibitors. She will address women and children clubs, schools and theatre audiences, thus creating wide interest in Mr. Chapin's series of films which have already received great prominence throughout the country. In addition to Miss Tapley's activities, a big advertising campaign is being conducted covering the entire country.

Miss Tapley has been identified with motion pictures in various capacities for ten years and few women know its problems more intimately than she. A ready and convincing speaker, she has addressed numerous audiences with signal success upon her pet topics, chief among these being her desire to present concisely, sincerely and honestly to her hearers, the truism that the faults of the average motion pictures are due rather to the public than to those that contribute to their making.

"Blue Bird" Gets Finishing Touches

The finishing touches are being placed on "The Blue Bird," the big Maeterlinck spectacle produced by Maurice Tourneur for Artcraft release. The cutting of the negative for this picture has been a delicate undertaking, owing to the numerous multiple exposures. Considerable attention has also been given to the titles, which have been drawn to harmonize with the artistic character of the subject.

It is stated that this picture will be seven or eight reels in length when released. Through the use of multiple exposures the film production is claimed to be more elaborate than on the speaking stage, though consuming less time in the presentation.

Red Cross in Petrova New Picture

The exterior scenes for the third production in which Madame Olga Petrova will shortly appear, "The Life Mask," introduces the entire Red Cross Chapter of Florida as a background during a major part of the story. These scenes were filmed under the direction of Frank Crane at Miami. Shortly after the Polish star's arrival in the southern town she immediately interested herself in the important work which the Red Cross Chapter of Southeast Florida is doing for the Medical Division of the Government. In return for this assistance Mrs. Henry R. Naylor, president of the Chapter, offered the services of her entire force of workers for use by Mr. Crane in the Petrova film.

National Engages Gibson for Scripts

With the starting of production of comedies at the new Denver plant of the National Film Company, comes the announcement that Tom Gibson has been engaged to take charge of the comedy scripts for that organization. His first story, "From Caterpillar to Butterfly," is now under production by Allen Curtis. Bud Duncan, Dot Farley and Kewpie Morgan play the leading roles.

Marie Walcamp Serial Changed

"The Lion's Claws" Is Chosen as Title of Universal Continued Story—Laemmle Personally Selected the Cast

CONTRARY to previous reports which have been issued by Universal's West Coast organization, the newest serial featuring Marie Walcamp will not be known as "The Leopard's Claws." Instead, this serial has been renamed "The Lion's Claws."

Two reasons are given by the Universal for its decesion to change the name of the latest serial. The first is because of the greater significance possessed by "The Lion's Claws." The action of the story is laid in the region of the Upper Nile, where Briton and Teuton pit wits for mastery of the country. The second reason is a zoological one—the utter lack of leopards in Africa. Of lions there are aplenty and since wild animals figure importantly throughout the story, it was determined to name the serial after the king of beasts.

In preparing its plans for "The Lion's Claws," the Universal went to great length to surround Miss Walcamp with the strongest cast that has supported her in any serial in which she has yet appeared.

Carl Laemmle, president and general director, is said to have personally selected the players who are to appear in the production with Miss Walcamp. When the first tentative cast was drawn, it was wired to Mr. Laemmle for his O. K. The latter made several changes with the view to strengthening the line up, placing in it several players who have made reputations for themselves with both Universal and other prominent film organizations.

As now constituted, the cast for "The Lion's Claws" includes Marie Walcamp, Gertrude Aster, Thomas Lingham, Alfred Allen, Edwin August, Leonard Clapham, Harry von Meter, Frank Lanning, Rex Roselli, Ray Hanford and several others.

The serial is being directed by Jacques Jaccard, who already has a long list of serials, among them "Liberty" and "The Red Ace," to his credit. As has been stated, the action of "The Lion's Claws" is laid in Africa. There a peculiar tribe calling themselves "The Moon People," and concerning whom but little or nothing is known, are awaiting the coming of a feminine Messiah, who is to reign over them and make them rulers of the entire region. This person is to be made known to them in a miraculous way. Identification, according to the tribe prophets, is to be made absolutely certain by means of a scar, shaped after the manner of a new moon, on one of her shoulders.

The release date for "The Lion's Claws" has not yet been definitely decided upon. It is likely, however, that this serial will follow "The Mystery Ship." It is proposed to hold special trade showings in all exchange cities, in advance of the release date.

Universal Gets Results from Campaign

The prize-awarding plan as an aid toward spurring the interest of photoplay patrons in serials is again demonstrating its value. Two of them are now being conducted by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and, according to Carl Laemmle, president and director general of that organization, results obtained so far have far exceeded expectations.

Participants in "The Bull's Eye" campaign are striving for $1,000 in Liberty Bonds, War Saving Certificates and various other prizes. Although the starting date for this business promotion campaign did not start until February 1, the clerk specially engaged by Universal to handle the correspondence pertaining to it, already finds herself swamped.

Empey Films Arouse Interest

Vitagraph Announces Exhibitors Are Already Bidding for "Over the Top"—Irwin Gets Requests for Publicity Matter

EXHIBITORS by the score are already bidding for "Over the Top," the Vitagraph special in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey is to be featured, Vitagraph anounced this week.

According to a statement by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, first run requests are reaching the home office of the company from all the important cities of the United States and Canada, New York City theatre men being in the lead.

As an illustration of the "news value" which the press of the country places on Empey, Mr. Irwin says that scores of newspapers have written to his organization asking that they be placed on the mailing list for all matter relating to Empey, which means that there will be a continuous fire of publicity for "Over the Top" before and after the picture is released.

Empey's lectures also have been a big factor in bringing him into favor with the public, the "American who went," having addressed big audiences in many of the leading cities, including New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago. His future lecture dates, which he will fill immediately upon completion of his work in "Over the Top," will take him into the West, South, Northwest, New England and Pacific coast territory, so that he will cover practically every section of the country. His bookings now are sufficient to keep him on the platform for more than a year, so that in many cases he will appear in cities simultaneously with the presentation of the Vitagraph picture. This is certain to have a powerful effect in creating interest in the picture, for wherever Empey has appeared in person he has stirred the multitudes to heights of patriotic fervor.

Within the last fortnight, Empey has added several thousand dollars to the soldiers' and sailors' smoke funds, more than three thousand of the amount having been raised by him for the "Boys in France Tobacco Fund" of the New York Morning Telegraph. Although he is working night and day, Empey overlooks no opportunity to work for the funds which are providing our soldiers with "fags," which Empey describes in his book as the thing which makes it possible for the men in the trenches to endure the rigors of warfare.

Elisabeth Risdon, whose interpretation of the title part in the General Enterprises, Inc., feature, "Mother," is appearing in the established Broadway success, "Seven Days Leave," is now playing at the Park theatre as Lady Mary Heather in the striking war drama which created a sensation in England. In the same play, "Seven Days Leave," also appears Edwin Fosberg, who is one of the featured players in the latest state right feature now being distributed by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, namely "The Crucible of Life." In the same film appears Winifred Harriss, who has an important character part in the stage success, "Cheating Cheaters."

Elisabeth Risdon will be remembered also for her success in the William Faversham stage production of George Bernard Shaw's play, "Misalliance."

Director Walsh Returns from a "Trip"

THE mystery surrounding the whereabouts of R. A. Walsh, William Fox director, has been partially cleared up by his re-appearance recently in New York City. He reports that he has been working on a new dramatic production based on a recent famous murder case and has been so engaged, practically uninterruptedly, since the completion, early in December, of "The Pride of New York," in which he directed his brother, George.

Most of the scenes in the new production are said to have been taken on "foreign soil," the understanding being that the director has been in Central or South America. Announcement of details, however, has been withheld by Mr. Walsh and no definite information was obtainable at the offices of the Fox Film Corporation.

"Yes," said Mr. Walsh, "I am working on a story which is based on a famous murder case. It is to be released about the middle of March, I understand, and I hear it is to be called "Woman and the Law," although the title has not been definitely determined.

Asked where he had been, Mr. Walsh was non-communicative. "I've been away," he said, "and I've been having all sorts of trouble, too. My leading man was taken sick, delaying work for several days at a most critical time. Then my leading woman got left at a station in a territory with which she was wholly unfamiliar and it looked for several anxious days as if we would not get trace of her again. I was decidedly worried, not only on her account, but because we had used her in numerous scenes at the time and could do nothing toward completing the work in hand until she re-appeared. But, having rid myself of these drawbacks, everything is now running smoothly."

Vitagraph Keeps Ahead of Schedule

The Vitagraph company was one of the motion picture producing organizations which suffered little or no ill effects from "heatless Monday," Albert E. Smith, president of the company, declares. By the addition of many new stars, the preparation of stories sufficient to keep these stars busy for months to come and a general program of preparedness, the company was in a position to acquiesce in Administrator Garfield's orders without any trouble, Mr. Smith says.

"For more than a year," Mr. Smith's announcement reads, "we have maintained a production policy at both our eastern and western studios which has kept product at least two months in advance of release date, and just a few weeks before the fuel conservation measures were instituted we were able, by adding to our company of artists and our directorial staff, to increase this lead further. Our Scenario Department now is four months in advance of production. This means that we have in scenario form plays which have been made ready for all of our leading artists so that they may start work on them just as soon as their casts are selected."

"Pair of Sixes" Reaches Interiors

Work on George K. Spoor's "A Pair of Sixes" is said to be running merrily along—as merrily as a cast of comedy stars can make it. Taylor Holmes, supported by several members of the original stage company of Edward Peple's comedy, worked right up to the minute Uncle Sam would permit him before the five-day close down due to coal conditions.

The company is busy on interiors at present.

Christie Comedy Named

"Mum's the Word" is the title given the second Christie Comedy featuring Bobby Vernon. The many exchangemen and exhibitors who praised "Five to Five" so highly, are anxious to see if he can do it again. Al Christie says "Yes."

Triangle Starts New Features

Two Pictures are Also Completed While three Additional Ones are Prepared for Shipment—Directors Await Stories

DIRECTOR WALTER EDWARDS has started work on a new Triangle subject, the working title of which is "Another Foolish Virgin," making four new subjects which have been started at the Triangle Culver City studios within the past ten days. Two pictures have been completed in the past week, making a total of five pictures now being put in readiness for shipping in the editing department, and five directors of feature companies are waiting for stories.

Director E. Mason Hopper has completed "The Answer," a socialistic drama starring Alma Rubens. The cast also includes Claire Anderson, former Triangle-Keystone ingenue, Joe King, Francis McDonald, recently seen in "The Gun Woman" with Texas Guinan, Jean Hersholt, Wilbur Higbee and Betty Pearce.

"Faith Endurin'," the other picture which has just been completed, is a Western subject, directed by Cliff Smith, in which Roy Stewart, the Triangle cowboy star, is featured. This play, declared to be the strongest vehicle for a two-gun hero in which Stewart has been cast, is a screen adaptation of a magazine story by Kenneth B. Clarke.

Other subjects now in the editing department, which will be shipped within a few days, are "The Sea Panther," also written by Kenneth B. Clarke, in which William Desmond, Jack Richardson and Mary Warren have the leading roles, "The Hard Rock Breed," directed by Raymond Wells, a screen adaptation of Frederic Bechdolt's Saturday Evening Post story by the same name, and in which Jack Curtis, Jack Livingston, Margery Wilson and J. Barney Sherry are seen in the principal parts, and "A Soul in Trust," directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton, with Belle Bennett, Lillian West, Darrell Foss, J. Barney Sherry and Lee Hill in the most important roles.

The new feature picture on which Director Walter Edwards has commenced work is from the magazine story by the same name, "Another Foolish Virgin," written by W. Carey Wonderly. The continuity is the work of Charles J. Wilson. Included in the cast are Margery Wilson, Texas Guinan, last seen in "The Gun Woman," Mildred Deffino, Francis McDonald, Lee Hill and George Pearce.

Director Jack Dillon, who handled the megaphone on Olive Thomas' features, is putting the finishing touches on a five-reel comedy drama, in which Myrtle Lind, formerly of Keystone comedies, has the featured role. The working title of this picture is "Betty Comes Home."

Triangle feature director, Jack Conway, is making rapid progress on his latest picture, started last week, the working title of which is "Smoke." The exterior of one of the most palatial yacht club houses in America has been reproduced at the Culver City studio for use in the production of this picture.

Among the many costumes designed by Peggy Hamilton for this picture is a novel and attractive bathing suit which is worn by Gloria Swanson.

Five directors, Cliff Smith, E. Mason Hopper, Gilbert P. Hamilton, Thomas Heffron and Raymond Wells are waiting for new subjects, and all expect to have companies at work on stories within a short time.

Morosco Borrows Belle Bennett

Belle Bennett, Triangle favorite, has been borrowed by Oliver Morosco, for his coming production of Ashton Stevens' new play, "Mary's Way Out," which will soon be given its premier in Los Angeles. Miss Bennett, who has just completed her latest Triangle release, "A Soul in Trust," is now rehearsing for the part of the second woman.

"The Claim" Is Put Under Way

Edith Storey Is the Star of This Newest Metro Feature, which Frank Reicher Directs—Being Made on the Coast

EDITH STOREY, who recently made her bow as a Metro star in "The Eyes of Mystery," has begun work in a picturization of "The Claim," the Broadway play written by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare. June Mathis and Leighton Osmun adapted the play for the screen and it is being directed by Frank Reicher at the Metro West Coast studio at Hollywood, California.

Miss Storey plays the role of Belle Jones, a dance hall singer and dancer, in this comedy drama with Western mining camp and dance hall atmosphere. In contrast to her previous Western roles, this part is a straight dramatic one, affording the Metro star opportunities for strong emotional acting but no riding or athletic stunts. "The Claim" is the star's second "Western" under the Metro trade-mark, her first one of this type being "Revenge," a picturization of Edward Moffat's story, "Hearts Steadfast," recently completed under the direction of Tod Browning.

Frank Reicher, who is directing Edith Storey in "The Claim," went West especially to produce this Metro picture. If present plans are carried out, he will remain in California just long enough to complete this picture and then come East to direct another star. He has previously produced for Metro two pictures, starring Ethel Barrymore, "The Eternal Mother" and "An American Widow."

The players who have been engaged to support Miss Storey in this picture and the parts they play are Wheeler Oakman as John MacDonald, Mignon Anderson as Kate MacDonald, Marion Skinner as Pansy Bryan, Paul Wiegel as Mike Bryan, and Fred Malatesta as Ted Jerome. William C. Thompson is photographing the picture.

"The Claim" is scheduled to be released as a Metro "Edith Storey All Star Series" picture.

Mutual Claims Chaplin Record

Announces That Twelve of Star's Pictures Have Played One Chicago House 175 Times—Boston House Second

CHARLES CHAPLIN'S twelve Mutual specials, the two-reel comedies which the screen comedian produced under his $670,000 contract with the Mutual Film Corporation, have set new records for repeat bookings in the history of the motion picture industry, Mutual asserts.

The record is held by the Gem theatre in Chicago, which has played the twelve pictures a total of 175 times, an average of nearly fifteen times each. The high mark is held by "The Vagabond," which has been shown on the screen at the Gem twenty-one times. "The Floorwalker" has been run nineteen times, "The Fireman," "The Pawnshop" and "Easy Street," eighteen times each; "Behind the Screen," seventeen; "The Rink," sixteen; "The Count," fifteen; "The Immigrant," ten; "The Cure," nine; "The Adventurer," eight, and "One A. M.," seven.

The Star theatre at Boston claims second place. It has run sixty-one two-day showings from the twelve releases, a total of 122, an average of better than five two-day showings for each release. The Star theatre, a downtown house in Chicago, has almost reached the same mark.

The Royal theatre at Virginia, Minn., played all of the Chaplins for three days on first run, and the Bijou, an opposition house, repeated them all for second run on a one-day schedule and has just commenced a third run of three days each, booking the twelve solid.

Reuben and Finkelstein's houses in Minneapolis have repeated all of the series at their first run houses, and in spite of this, the Garden theatre, a downtown house, has booked the series of twelve for four days each. This booking makes virtually third run for the Chaplins in downtown Minneapolis and a four-day run at that.

Records of the Mutual show that nearly all of the suburban and neighborhood houses which played th Chaplins at first run for one, two and three days has begun a second run before the release of "The Adventurer," the twelfth of the series, and that scores of houses which played the series for first and second run are rebooking, under the new booking plan, for the third run.

Special Designs for Jester Advertising

Jester Comedy Company in connection with the distribution of their two-reel comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, has put out lithographs of special design, one, three and six sheets, together with photograph displays and other exhibitor helps. These will be furnished those exhibitors who have booked the first Jester comedy, "The Recruit," released this month. John Ranck, artist, made the designs for the posters. Every effort is being made, it is announced, to co-operate with the exchanges and exhibitors in the way of advertising these comedies.

How Gaumont Service Covers World

How the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, through the Gaumont news service, covers the world is said to be shown in No. 6 of the Weekly, released February 3.

In the thousand feet of film which make up this news reel fourteen news subjects from both hemispheres are illustrated with hundreds of scenes. Among the most important of the subjects shown in this number are: The capture of Jerusalem, with scenes of the French troops commanded by Colonel Piepape entering the "Holy City"; the work of the Italian army and the Alpine Chasseurs, who are beating back the Hun invaders in Northern Italy; the manœuvres of the Mikado's fleet, which is now co-operating with other warcraft of the Allies in destroying the German submarines; the launching of one of our new steel ships, built in the record time of sixty days; the opening to traffic after many long delays and costly disasters of the famous Quebec bridge, and the adoption of the latest methods in removing some of the heavy snowfall which has blanketed a great part of the United States during the past six weeks.

Pathe Gets Letters on Scenes

The many scenes of General Pershing's boys in France in the Hearst-Pathe News have attracted much attention from theatre audiences, Pathe says, and letters and newspaper clippings received at the Pathe offices show that a large number of persons with friends and relatives now on foreign service are following the weekly regularly in the hope that they may catch glimpses of the loved ones. That this hope is sometimes realized is said to have been proven by an article published in a Huntington (W. Va.) newspaper.

Two Points Loom in "House of Glass"

"The fact that Clara Kimball Young's father appears with her in 'The House of Glass,' and that Norman Selby, better known as the prize fighter, 'Kid McCoy,' takes a part of a policeman in that picture—the first in which he ever appeared—is helping me get bookings for it," said Manager C. W. Taylor of the Select exchange in Omaha.

"The exhibitors know these points are good for advertising. I have had calls from sporting editors who have wanted to mention the picture in connection with Kid McCoy's appearance in it."

Hart Donates Hat to the Red Cross

That a hat may have other uses than merely that of resting upon the head of its owner is said by Artcraft to be proved in the case of the Stetson sombrero belonging to Wm. S. Hart, which has been worn by the Artcraft star for thirteen years. Bill has surrendered his hat for the benefit of the American Red Cross. He has autographed it and sent it on its travels to have the signatures of prominent officials in America, England, France and Italy attached, when it will be returned to this country to be raffled off and the proceeds given to the Red Cross.

Ralph Ince Petrova Director

Has Been Engaged to Produce "The Great Star," Fourth Production by Polish Artiste — Is a Pioneer in Industry

FOLLOWING the completion last week of "The Life Mask,' the third production in which Madame Olga Petrova will appear as the star of her own organization, announcement was made that a director for the fourth Petrova picture had been selected. The man who will hold the directorial reins over the fourth production on Madame Petrova's special release calendar is Ralph Ince, for many years a star of the production unit of the Vitagraph forces.

The story which this director will stage for Madame Petrova is from the pen of George Middleton. The working title is "The Great Star," the scenario being understood to give extraordinary scope for the display of her peculiar screen talents.

Ralph Ince has been termed one of the pioneers of the film-producing art, having started his career twelve years ago with the original Vitagraph organization. For many seasons he was one of the leading film stars of the Flatbush forces and is still remembered by thousands of exhibitors and picture patrons for his film characterization of the immortal Abraham Lincoln. Ince is responsible for the screen debut of Anita Stewart, having produced many of the starring vehicles in which she appeared for several years. He also directed many of the Vitagraph box-office successes during the days of Florence Turner,

Madame Olga Petrova's Second Production Is Called "The Light Within"

John Bunny, Edith Storey, Maurice Costello and other stars. Leaving the Vitagraph Company two years ago, Ince made several feature films, presenting Lucille Lee Stewart in the leading roles.

Propaganda Film for Fairbanks

Government Requests Athletic Star to Make Picture for Distribution Among Men of Army and Navy—Patriotic Move

BENNIE ZEIDMAN, personal press representative of Douglas Fairbanks, announced from his Hollywood quarters last week that the United States Government has requested Fairbanks to prepare a propaganda film for distribution among the men of the army and navy, in their camps and stations, here and abroad.

Major William F. Snow, of the Surgeon General's office, War Department, in his letter to Mr. Fairbanks, said it was their desire to have Mr. Fairbanks prepare, under the auspices of the Surgeon General of the U. S. Army, a motion picture designed for educational work among the military forces of the United States.

"The concensus of opinion," continued Major Snow in his letter, "among a number of the Surgeon General's staff is that it is most desirable to have you, as the prototype of the doctrine, as the protagonist of the drama. Will you do this for the United States Government, as a patriotic contribution? This form of educational work constitutes an important part of the Surgeon General's office and of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. Your participation, therefore, would be a valuable and far reaching service.

"What we want to put across to the men is the idea that clean living and physical fitness are, after loyalty and obedience, the prime requisites of the soldier. This picture to be most effective in presenting its propaganda must be intermixed and sugar-coated with unalloyed and educational entertainment."

Immediately upon receipt of Major Snow's letter, Douglas wired Washington that he is prepared to undertake suggested film and requested further details. In the meantime Fairbanks, with his director, Allan Dwan, is at work on a scenario, which they will submit in the near future to the office of the Surgeon General.

Ollie Cooper Makes Her Metro Debut

Ollie Cooper, a stage ingenue, will make her screen debut with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in Metro's forthcoming All Star Series production, "The Brass Check." She has the part of Norma Glanor in "The Brass Check," which has been picturized from George Allan England's story in the All-Story Weekly.

Tucker Devises New Sub-Title

Goldwyn Calls It a "Moving, Story-Telling Caption"—Will Be Used in Mae Marsh Picture, "The Beloved Traitor"

AN announcement from the offices of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation this week said: "George Loane Tucker's desire for unusual effects in motion pictures finds play in an unusual sub-title he has devised for Mae Marsh's new Goldwyn Picture, 'The Beloved Traitor,' made from the novel of that name by Frank L. Packard. The leader, which might be described as a moving, story-telling caption, is intended to picture psychologically to those who see the film the subtle forces at work in undermining the life of the hero, first a young fisherman with an undeveloped talent for sculpture and then a successful artist in the city, facing all the distractions of a gay life.

"As the preceding scene is irised out, there appears in the upper left hand corner of the screen a sub-title reading, 'Two years—and money and influence——make many changes.' At the same moment a soft iris opens at the upper right hand corner, circling in on an old derby hat, which changes into a silk hat as the iris is held just large enough to encompass it. Below this another soft iris immediately opens showing the rough left hand of a fisherman holding a string of fish, which fades into a gloved hand and a fashionable cane.

"Finally an iris at the bottom circles on rubber boots, which disappear and leave a silk-socked foot which slides into a pump held by a valet's hand. Each previous object fades out slowly as the next comes in below, the last dissolving into a completely new title reading, 'Mud dolls may change to marble' in the upper right hand corner and a mud figure, typifying the sculptor's work in the crude elements of his birthplace, becomes a marble head of Mae Marsh, the heroine. As the head fades out these lines are added to the title: 'But even a millionaire cannot safely strip away the rough, protecting husk given by life to lives that need it.'

"At the same moment there is faded into the lower right of the picture a receipt for studio rent made out to the hero's benefactor, one Bliss, then across it slantwise Bliss's check for tuition in a school of art for his protege, Judd Minot.

"As the check and the rent receipt fade out there fades in a page torn from a catalogue of an art exhibition with this at the top: An unsteady hand holding a half filled wine glass is thrust across the papers and an ugly blot of wine is spilled over Minot's name. There the leader ends.

"All of this requires about fifty feet of film. To photograph it was a task of four hours enlisting the services of a director and his assistant, a cameraman and his assistant and four supernumerary actors."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Metro Announces Cast with Dana

Viola Dana, the star of the forthcoming Metro picturization of Myrtle Reed's novel, "Weaver of Dreams," is supported by a capable cast, Metro announces, in this All-Star Series production, which is being produced at the Metro West Coast studio at Hollywood, California, under the direction of John H. Collins.

Clifford Bruce appears opposite the star as Dr. Carter Keith.

Russell Simpson plays Martin Chandler. Vera Lewis, who plays "Aunt" Hattie Taylor, has appeared in "Intolerance," "Hypocrites," and "Jack, the Giant Killer." Cora Drew, who is seen as Cynthia Bancroft, appeared recently in support of Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer." Miss Drew first entered motion pictures as a scenario writer. In 1915 she became an actress and has since become a favorite player with the West Coast studios. Mildred Davis is cast as Margery Gordon, the young girl who comes between Judith and Carter and wins him for herself.

Moore Finds Foursquare Pictures Popular

Tom Moore, Washington, D. C., exhibitor and prominent theatre owner, writes Manager Abrams of the Washington branch of the Foursquare Pictures as follows:

"If you have any more pictures that would rank with 'One Hour' we would be only too glad to play them. Mr. Abrams advises us that you expect more such high class features, and we will be pleased to have you consider us for bookings on them."

C. R. Black, managing director of the Campbell Theatre, of Hazleton, Pa., writes the Philadelphia office as follows:

"I wish to state that 'The Bar Sinister,' and the other features you control, are not only well worth playing, but are causing considerable comment among the people of Hazleton."

World Prepares Drive for March Film

As part of a unique promotion drive on "The Cross Bearer" the World superpicture scheduled for release on the program in March, a broadside has been prepared and distributed to every exhibitor in the country. The broadside is printed in red and blue on special book paper measuring 23½ by 36 inches and is of sufficient artistic excellence as to deserve a good location in any lobby. Dominating the page is a splendid full-length portrait of Montagu Love garbed in his pontifical robes, putting forth a protecting arm before a group of pleading fugitives. Surmounting this is the caption "The First 1918 Gift from the Service That Gave You 'Mothers of France' and 'Rasputin.'" Three scenes from "The Cross Bearer," together with the words "World-Pictures, World Service, World Policies, Yours for Success Every Day in the Year," comprise the base of the sheet.

"His Royal Highness" Stars Blackwell

The next Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley picture has been named "His Royal Highness" and will probably be released at the end of February. The story relates the adventures of an American collegian who has the throne of a European monarchy thrust upon him and is confronted with the necessity of relinquishing the hand of an attractive young heiress. Evelyn Greeley, who has been the recipient of much praise because of her work in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," makes her third appearance as co-star of Mr. Blackwell in this picture.

Metro Pictures Engages Ray Smallwood

Metro's camera chief began at the beginning of the industry, first going into the laboratory of the Melies company. Next he tackled a camera.

Pickford Anniversary Is Here

St. Valentine's Day Marks the Star's First Year at Lasky Studio on Coast—Has Made Six Features for Artcraft

ST. VALENTINE'S Day will mark the completion of Mary Pickford's first "solid" year at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal. She arrived in California from New York on February 14, 1917, after finishing "The Poor Little Rich Girl," and in the Hollywood year just ending has done six photoplays for Artcraft release at the Lasky studios.

The first picture made in southern California was "A Romance of the Redwoods," directed by Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This was followed by "The Little American," also directed by Mr. De Mille and ranking as the greatest of all photoplays dealing with the world war.

After this, Miss Pickford devoted a month to comedy under Marshall Neilan's direction, and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was evolved. Frances Marion did the script for this picture, coming from New York after her adaptation of Eleanor Gates' play, "The Poor Little Rich Girl." She has since become a permanent fixture, and one of importance, in the Pickford organization. "Rebecca" was followed by "The Little Princess" from Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, "Sara Crewe" and this in turn made way for "Stella Maris" adapted from Wm. J. Locke's novel of that name.

The last of the half dozen screen subjects is "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," directed by Marshall Neilan, adapted from Belle K. Maniates' book by Frances Marion.

In speaking of Miss Pickford's year at the Hollywood studio, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation said: "At the threshold of her new year in Artcraft pictures, Mary Pickford stands upon an eminence to which few may attain in histrionics either for the stage or screen. She has proved that she need not adhere to curls or demure roles, but that she is so great an artist that even without the employment of her beauty as an asset—as in the role of the unfortunate little slavey in "Stella Maris" she may still hold her audience spellbound. She has risen to greater heights than ever before and won thousands of new admirers as well as retaining the old."

Wharton Films Chief Flynn Revelation

IN the sixth episode of "The Eagle's Eye," the new Wharton secret service serial, Chief Flynn makes a very important revelation, according to the announcements concerning the serial issued this week. The revelation shows how Dr. Heinrich Albert, fiscal attache of the Imperial German Embassy at Washington, lost his brown portfolio containing secrets of alien propaganda in this country.

The real story, according to the Wharton announcement, is that Dr. Albert lost his portfolio in the simplest way on a Sixth Avenue elevated train. On Wednesday of last week Leopold Wharton, assisted by D. H. Turner, photographed every incident connected with its loss by the Imperial German plotter.

The management of the elevated system gave Mr. Wharton every facility and placed a train of five cars at his disposal, running it as he requested from Rector to 155th Street. During the run several stops were made. The train was under the direction of Walter J. Howe, trainmaster, and C. A. Woods, station inspector.

Dr. Albert came to this country as an Imperial German promoter of proganda. Very soon after the beginning of the war in Europe he made his presence apparent. His hand was seen in a mysterious campaign to create public opinion against England and France, and adverse to America entering into the war.

The sixth episode of "The Eagle's Eye" will be called "The Brown Portfolio."

Yorke-Metro Goes to Jacksonville

The Yorke Film Corporation, which produces the Harold Lockwood features for the Metro, has abandoned New York as its producing headquarters, and has moved to Jacksonville, Florida, where the company will remain for the rest of the winter season. The move was made because the next-to-be-produced Lockwood vehicles require backgrounds which can be better obtained in Florida than anywhere else.

Arrangements have been concluded whereby the Yorke-Metro Company will occupy the Klutho studio for the making of interior scenes during its stay in Jacksonville.

Kolker and Kilgour Are Together Again

Henry Kolker and Joseph Kilgour, who play Lawrence Gray and Silk Wilkins, respectively, in support of Emmy Wehlen in Metro's picturization of George Allan England's Saturday Evening Post story, "Good Will and Almond Shells," first played together twenty years ago, and have not been associated professionally since then until now, Metro announced this week.

The picture will be released as a Metro "Emmy Wehlen All-Star Series" picture.

McGrath Edits Mutual Screen Telegram

The appointment of Blaine McGrath to the editorship of the Screen Telegram is announced by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. McGrath goes to the Screen Telegram department of the Mutual from the office of managing editor of Motography. He was previously connected with the International News Service and with various Hearst news picture enterprises.

The Screen Telegram, the new Mutual news releaser, will be issued twice a week, supplanting the Mutual Weekly, the present news reel release.

Fifty O. Henry's for General

Filming of the Series Was Begun Last March, and One-fifth of Author's Stories Have Been Used—New Record

A NEW record is being established for the Broadway Star Feature O. Henry stories, according to General Film Company in announcing the approach of the first anniversary of their production. Stories now completed or under way at the Brooklyn and Los Angeles studios will increase the total number of O. Henry pictures released to fifty, or about one-fifth of the number of short stories written by the humorist during his eight-year-stay in New York City. Inasmuch as present production plans call for many more of these screen stories, this record of production of one author's works in picture form is not likely to be overtaken, says General. The O. Henry books have proved a real treasure house of screen plots, in the opinion of the company.

The filming of the O. Henry classics was begun last March. The first anniversary will be observed by the release of several of the best known stories in which such O. Henry stars as Patsy Deforrest and Adele de Garde will be featured. During the twelve month period which will close soon seven of the O. Henry stories have been released in four-reel form and the others as two-reel subjects.

These subjects have set a new standard for clean, wholesome and entertaining pictures, according to General. They constitute the one series of screen features upon whose merits critics and reviewers have seldom disagreed. Their popularity with exhibitors and fans alike is indicated by the fact that many of the stories released in picture form eleven months ago are even more popular today than they were at first. Their popularity has been continuous, due to their availability for every kind of program, and many of them are being featured today in first class houses in all parts of the country, the General announcement makes known.

Vitagraph Announces February Comedies

SIX of the eight comedies to be released by Vitagraph during the month of February on its dual comedy unit basis are announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, as follows: Big V Comedies, February 4, "Telephones and Troubles," featuring Montgomery and Rock; February 11, "Babes and Boobs," featuring Lawrence Semon; February 18, "Courts and Convicts," featuring Montgomery and Rock; February 25, "Rooms and Rumors," featuring Lawrence Semon.

Vitagraph Comedies: February 4, "Surprising Husband"; February 11, "Coals for the Fire." Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres are featured in these one-reelers, working under the direction of Graham Baker.

All of the Vitagraph comedy stars, it is learned, have turned authors lately. Semon is the author and director of the comedies in which he is featured, while Montgomery and Rock, who assist Director J. A. Howe in the making of their subjects, also are the authors of many of them.

Mr. Earle and Director Baker are now collaborating on the Vitagraph comedies. The stories are said to be real life incidents transferred to the screen and find most of their appeal in the fact that they are close to the hearts and home of every man—and every woman. This unit of Vitagraph service has only been out for about two months, but in this short space of time it is reported that they have covered much ground in a producing way.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

ANOTHER Paramount comedy is nearing completion at the Roscoe Arbuckle producing quarters at Long Beach. This one will be known as "The Bell Boy." The title, of course, refers to a "hop" of more than three hundred pounds. Arbuckle is said to serve as barber, hotel clerk, elevator boy and waiter as well in Pedunk Center's Metropolitan hotel. Al St. John is the night clerk, Buster Keaton the village pest, and Joe Keaton takes the role of the village barber, while Alice Lake, last seen as a Salvation Nell, is doing a vampire role impersonating the city manicurist who breaks hearts and finger nails in the village.

Barker Directs Novel

Reginald Barker has been selected to direct the first Mastercraft Film to be made at the Paralta Studios from the Thomas Dixon novel, "The One Woman," and the working script is now being prepared by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. The Mastercraft representative, F. Eugene Fransworth, is now working with Production Manager Robert Brunton of the Paralta Studios, where the photoplay will be made in assembling the cast. The first scenes will not be made for another week.

Wallace Worsley and Eliot Howe will serve as directors for the first Louise Glaum Paralta play. The original story and photoplay, which will serve as Miss Glaum's first vehicle, was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, who says it concerns the "insidious kulture as forced upon liberty loving people by the wolf nation of the world." The play is now known under the working title of "Intelligence," and gives Miss Glaum a highly emotional role.

Raymond B. West and Paralta Company have been spending the past week making scenes along the Pacific Ocean beyond Santa Monica, where there are many locations similar to those found on the Scottish shores. Miss Barriscale in this picture play takes the role of a daughter of Scottish fishermen.

Vitagraph "Shoots" Desert

The Nell Shipman Vitagraph Company last week concluded the filming of the desert scenes, which work was abandoned several weeks ago because of traffic Santa Ana's, or wind storms, and these contain all necessary scenes for "The Home Trail." In this, Nell Shipman for the first time in her screen or speaking stage career, takes the part of a vampire. The play has an atmosphere of 1812, and is of a semi-costume nature. The Shipman Company will next take up the filming of "A Texas Romance," from the story of the same name by Cyrus Townsend Brady. This is now in rehearsal, with Alfred Whitman in the leading man part.

"The Woman in the Web" serial company directed by Dave Smith, is at work on the second episode, and Hedda Nova is daily astonishing the many western riders who are appearing in this Russian serial, with her equestrian stunts. Frank Glendon, Otto Lederer and Ronald Bradbury are the others of this company.

Larry Seaman and the Big V Company have filmed "Meddlers and Moonshiners," and are now working on a comedy which has been titled "Rummies and Razors." The second Vitagraph comedy company headed by Montgomery and Rock are this week working on a two-reel subject to be known as "Tramps and Traitors." It has a Hooverizing plot, and for the farm and backyard scenes, a sixteen-acre ranch, the home of Blueblood chickens and pedigreed cattle has been leased. About fifty people will take part in many of the farm scenes.

Pathe Increases Force

West Coast producing forces for Pathe were increased last week by the arrival of Frank Keenan, and his director, Ernest Ward, who reached Los Angeles on January 25, and the following day made arrangements at the Paralta studio for beginning work on the next production on January 28. Cast for the first western made Keenan subject will be selected by Manager of Production Robert Brunton within the next day or two, and there will be no loss of time in beginning the filming of the photoplay.

The Bryant Washburn Company, directed by William Worthington, and which has Gertrude Selby as leading woman, will within the next week complete the filming of all scenes for "Twenty-One," Bryant Washburn's second vehicle for Pathe Plays.

At the Glendale studios, the Diando Company is finishing up the Baby Marie Osborne subject, "A Daughter of the West," which opens with Eastern scenes, and has the frontier of the West for most of the last four reels, Frank Whitson appears as the father, Marion Warner the mother, and Morris Foster takes the heavy role in this melodrama.

Because of the threatened scarcity of film and the increasing price, the Diando Film Corporation has purchased a large quantity and caused the erection of a fire and burglarproof safe at the Glendale studio. The capacity of this is a million feet of film. The walls are made up of layers of chilled steel reinforced with concrete.

Young to Direct

The Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood promises to be a very busy place during the coming few months, as plans are now being made to provide for quite a number of additional companies. These will in all probability prepare productions starring actors who formerly worked at the eastern studio of this corporation.

James Young, who formerly directed the production of Lasky subjects, was this week engaged to make one or more pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa, and will begin work on this as soon as the scenario is prepared. Mr. Hayakawa has just completed work on a subject made under the direction of William C. De Mille. It will be remembered that Mr. Young produced "Oliver Twist," "The Lash," and others.

Donald Crisp, who went east on his honeymoon trip with the intention of directing the production of the Wallace Reid-Ann Little subject at the eastern studios, last week arrived in Los Angeles with his bride, and a day later Wallace Reid and Tom Meighan came from the East. Miss Little arrived a few days previous. The subject began in New York with Reid and Little, will be completed here, and Meighan will play opposite Mary Pickford in her next Artcraft production.

Jack Pickford and wife, Olive Thomas, are expected to return to Los Angeles within the next two or three days from a holiday vacation spent in New York and Pittsburgh. Preparations have already been made for the filming of a subject in which Pickford and Louise Huff will be co-starred under the direction of George Melford.

Ince Plans More Speed

All of the Thomas H. Ince producing units will take up the production of new photoplays within the next few days. Stories have been provided for all stars, including William S. Hart, who will next produce an original story written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Hart's subject, just completed, has been titled "The Tiger Man," and will be shipped for release within a few days.

Little Thelma Salter, who will be remembered for her work in "The Crab," "The Sign of the Rose" and other Ince made pictures, is to return to the screen in the Enid Bennett photoplay just completed by Director Jerome Storm. This has been titled "Naughty! Naughty!" and is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan. An important part is also being written for Thelma in the coming Hart subject.

Announcement of the engagement of Enid Bennett to Fred Niblo, the well-known actor, was recently given out, and among intimate friends it is expected the marriage will occur shortly. Mr. Niblo has been in Los Angeles for the past several weeks.

"Tyrant Fear," the Dorothy Dalton subject portraying life in the far north, has been completed so far as filming is concerned by R. William Neill.

Irvin Willat, who has been working on special subjects for Thos. H. Ince, is next to direct Charles Ray, succeeding Victor Schertzinger, who is taking a vacation. This will be a northern subject.

One Triangle Drama

In the dramatic section of Triangle, but one new production was started prior to the "vacation" season. This is to be made by Walter Edwards, and is titled "Another Foolish Virgin," being an adaptation from the W. Carey Wonderly magazine story, prepared for the screen by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. This is a society drama in which a hardened woman, taken by Texas Guinan, attempts to better her positoin by acting as a guardian for an innocent young girl, taken by Margery Wilson. Of course, right triumphs in the end. Francis McDonald, Lee Hill and George Pearce are in the cast.

Other Triangle subjects being finished are "Betty Comes Home," with Myrtle Lind and Jack Gilbert, directed by Jack Dillon; "Innocent's Progress," which features Pauline Starke, with Jack Livingston and others, and "Smoke," which is being made by Jack Conway with a cast that includes Gloria Swanson, Edward Peil and George Hernandez.

During the week E. Mason Hopper completed the filming of "The Answer," which will probably consist of seven reels. Alma Rubens is the featured player.

"Faith Endurin'," Roy Stewart, western subject, directed by Cliff Smith, is in the cutting rooms, as is also "The Sea Panther," starring William Desmond; "The Hard Rock Breed," made by Director Raymond Wells, and "A Soul in Trust," filmed under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton.

No new subjects were taken up by the comedy department at the Triangle, all five companies having been busy with the completion of subjects started a few days previously.

Comedy at Universal

The only new work taken up at Universal City last week was that of the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran Comedy Company, who are filming one-reel comedies on contract basis. Capt. Leslie Peacocke has written a special subject for "the boys," which will be known as "Black and White." Edith Roberts will play the leading woman part. Lyons and Moran have now completed eight one-reel comedies under their new contract.

The subjects in production are "The Mortgaged Wife," starring Dorothy Phillips, under the direction of Allen J. Holubar; "Forgive Me," starring Mae Murray, directed by Robert Leonard, and an unnamed subject being directed by Rupert Julian, together with the three serials, "The Mystery Ship," "The Bull's Eye" and "The Moon Child."

D. W. Griffith continues in the work of shrinking 263,000 feet of negative to within ten thousand-foot reels, which, when completed, with constitute his western front war spectacle, produced under the auspices of the British and French war offices. Every effort is being made at the plant to keep secret the plot of this photoplay, this being guarded even more zealously than was the plot for "Intolerance." Griffith is now said to be giving eighteen hours a day to the work of editing the film.

New Concrete Building

The second of the new concrete buildings to be built at the entrance to the Vitagraph Western studios, in Hollywood, has been completed and is to be used for the scenario department and consultation rooms for the Big V. Comedies being produced at that studio. James Davis and Larry Kernan, both directors and writers, have been added to the Vitagraph forces, and will cooperate with Larry Semon and J. A. Howe, directors of the comedies.

William Russell, starred for two years in Mutual-American photoplays, is on his way to the coast to begin production of additional Mutual releases. Mr. Russell, it is reported, has formed his own company and secured a release through Mutual. It was first arranged he should make one or two subjects in New York, but owing to unfavorable filming conditions, these plans have now been changed.

After virtually completing the Fairbanks subject, "Headin' South," several changes were made in the script which showed scenes taken in the village in Southern Arizona, and so the street scene of the border town was duplicated at the studio in Hollywood.

It is very probable that Fairbanks will next take up the filming of a photoplay for the U. S. Army, designed partially for educational work among the military forces of the nation. The Fairbanks Company has received letters from officers of the War Department asking Fairbanks to make such a film.

Hart as Bad Man

The next Artcraft production to be made by William S. Hart will have an atmosphere of the great Southwest, in which Hart takes the role of a bad man of the cattle country. Much of the action will be laid in scenes representing the adobe country and along the Apache trail. The first work was done last week, when desert scenes were filmed near Playa Del Rey. This subject, having a Southwestern atmosphere and speedy action of such a country, will make it quite different from the last Hart film, "Blue Blazes Rawden," which was laid in the Canadian Northwest. Cast for the new picture is now being selected. The only scene taken to this time has Hart and a number of cowboys taking part.

William S. Hart, on the suggestion of Thomas H. Ince, promised Manager Emil Kehrline, Jr., of the new Kinema theatre, to make a personal appearance at this 2,500-seat house when the first Hart Artcraft, "The Narrow Trail," was given its initial Los Angeles showing. This, it is stated by the Ince publicity department, was a combined farewell appearance of Hart and "Fritz," the Pinto pony, on any stage.

Lasky Rests Up

This is between picture time at the Lasky Studio, and but two companies are working at the plant. One is that under the direction of C. B. deMille, which is making its second Artcraft subject, "The Whispering Chorus," with Kathleen Williams, Elliot Dexter and Raymond Hatton in the leading roles, and the other is being directed by George Melford and supervised by J. Stuart Blackton. The film in production is "Wild Youth." Very satisfactory progress is being made on this story, which has Theodore Roberts, Jack Mulhall and Louise Huff as principals.

The Pickford-Artcraft company has finished Miss Pickford's coming release, "Stella Maris," and the subject was shown at the Iris theatre, Hollywood, Friday evening, December 28, following the regular program, to members of the producing staff of the Lasky Studio and a few invited guests. It was the unanimous opinion at this showing that this is Miss Pickford's best subject up to this time,

Victor Moore's Newest Klever Komedy Is "He Got His," Released by Paramount

Seven Paramounts Are Ready

Releases of Famous Players for February Completed with Exception of One Scheduled for Last of the Month

WITH the appearance of a new month on the calendar, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation finds its Paramount releases for February completed well in advance. All offerings for this month under this trade-mark have been finished, excepting the last release, production of which is now rapidly drawing to a close.

Seven attractions will be released in February, exclusive of the short reel films, representing an output of four subjects from the Famous Players-Lasky western studios, two from the Thomas H. Ince organization and one from the Famous Players-Lasky eastern studio.

The initial releases for the month are three productions on February 4, viz.: Dorothy Dalton in a new Thos. H. Ince subject, "Flare-Up Sal," by J. G. Hawks; Pauline Frederick in "Madame Jealousy," by George V. Hobart and staged by Robert Vignola from the scenario by Eve Unsell; Vivian Martin in "A Peticotat Pilot," from the novel, "Mary 'Gusta," by Joseph C. Lincoln, staged by Rollin Sturgeon from the scenario by Gardner Hunting.

On February 11 one Paramount picture will be released, namely, Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams in "The Thing We Love," by Harvey Thew, founded upon the story by H. B. and M. G. Daniel and directed by Lou Tellegen. Two subjects are now ready for February 18th release. They are Enid Bennett in a Thomas H. Ince production, "The Keys of the Righteous," by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Jerome Storm, and Sessue Hayakawa in "Hidden Pearls," by Beulah Marie Dix, directed by George H. Melford.

The productions are now all finished and ready for release. The last offering of the month is the new George Beban vehicle, "One More American." This picture is taken from Wm. C. DeMille's well known stage piece and is now being produced by him from the scenario by Olga Printzlau. Scheduled for release on the 25th, the film is expected to be finished well in advance of this date.

In addition to the above, Paramount short releases for February are now, ready including two Klever Komedies, four Bray Pictographs, four Burton Holmes Travalogues, two Mack Sennett comedies, the final installment of the serial, "Who is Number One"? and the three initial installments of Benjamin Chapin's "The Son of Democracy."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Mack Sennett Comedy February 24

The Paramount Mack Sennett Comedy, "It Pays to Exercise," will be released February 24, following "Watch Your Neighbor." It is said to be a typical Mack Sennett comedy, with a cast including Chester Conklin, Alice Maison, Harry Booker, Eva Thatcher and Slim Summerville.

Richard Jones directed the production under the supervision of Mack Sennett.

Essanay Announces New Releases

Essanay's General Film comedy release for February 2 was "A Tough Knight," depicting the difficulties of an artist's model in armour, pursuing the girl he loves. The release for February 9 is "Our Little Nell," said to be something original in western burlesque comedy.

Essanay's scenic release for February 2 was "The Grand Canyon of Arizona and Canyon de Chelly."

"Out West" Expected to Be Hummer

That "Out West," soon to be released by Paramount will outdistance all previous Paramount-Arbuckle comedies in point of novelty and general interest, besides its rollicking humor, is the claim of Paramount folk who have watched the film from its inception during its making at the Arbuckle studio in Long Beach, California. The picture is described as a travesty on the Western thriller and in fact is said to be one of the most thrilling of all drams of the mountains and plains and the gambling dens of the frontier, that has ever been devised.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle is supported by Al St. John, Buster Keaton and Alice Lake.

Pathe Claims Costly Program Film

Pathe maintains that in Kipling's "The Naulahka" it offers to exhibitors the costliest picture ever placed upon a program by any concern. Over $100,000 was spent in the production of this picture, Pathe says.

Originally produced as an eight-reel feature and so announced, it has been decided to put it out in six parts, this decision having been made because it is recognized that six reels is a better size for the exhibitor than the longer length.

As a box-office attraction Pathe expects "The Naulahka" to rank high. First in importance, of course, comes the name of Rudyard Kipling, the author.

William Fox Announces New Releases

Producer Will Give "Les Miserables" to Exhibitors February 10, and First Peggy Hyland Feature Comes in March— Lee Kiddies on February 24

THE William Fox Film Corporation looks upon its releases to be issued in the near future as the best, probably, that have been produced by that organization in some time. The picture, "Les Miserables," which is sceduled for February 10, is declared to tbe the greatest drama William Fox has ever produced.

In addition to this picture, which, it seems agreed, has been awaited with unusual interest by both exhibitor and public, William Fox plans to bring out Peggy Hyland's first Fox feature on March 10. The Lee children have a production slated for February 24.

"Les Miserables" a Standard

"LES MISERABLES," the William Farnum de luxe production which was shown for five weeks at the Lyric theatre, New York, and which is said to have done capacity business there, afternoons and evenings throughout the run, will be released by William Fox as a Standard Picture. It is in nine short reels and exactly follows the Jean Valjean story as written by Victor Hugo, it is said.

The production was staged in America and done under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The cast, besides Mr. Farnum in the role of Jean Valjean, includes George Moss as the bishop, Hardee Kirkland as Javert, Madame Sonia Markova as Fantine, Kittens Reichert and Jewel Carmen as Cosette, Harry Spingler as Marius, Dorothy Bernard as Eponine, Anthony Phillips as Gavroche, Edward Elkas as Thenardier and Mina Ross as Mme. Thenardier.

"This production," said William Fox, "is in every respect the greatest drama we ever have offered to exhibitors. It is in our opinion the biggest money-making film that has been put on the market. There can be no doubt about this because we have demonstrated its possibilities in New York. It has not only been shown at the Lyric theatre at prices ranging up to $1, breaking all house records, but it has been put on for a week at every one of my nearly thirty houses in New York and vicinity. Everywhere it has done a tremendous business and I know it will do the same sort of business wherever it is shown. 'Les Miserables' heads the list of Standard Pictures."

Irving Cummings as Lead

William Fox announces that exhibitors may expect the first production Peggy Hyland has made since joining the Fox forces recently, early in March. The picture bears the tentative title of "The Debt of Honor" and will be released as one of the special features, probably for the week of March 10.

Irving Cummings, one of the best known leading men in films, will be seen opposite Miss Hyland. Mr. Cummings returns to the Fox fold after several months' absence. He will be recalled particularly for his work in the chief male roles in "Sister Against Sister," "Royal Romance" and "Wrath of Love." Virginia Pearson was starred in all of these features.

The other members of Miss Hyland's company, which is under the direction of

William Farnum as Jean Valjean in William Fox's "Les Miserables"

O. A. C. Lund, who will appear in important roles include Frank Goldsmith, Eric Mayne and Hazel Adams. Joseph Ruttenberg is in charge of the photography. The picture is being screened in the Fort Lee studios.

Frank Goldsmith played in "Love's Law," "The New York Peacock" and "A Heart's Revenge." Eric Mayne has also had prominent parts in several Fox productions, notably "The Slave," "Wife Number Two," "The New York Peacock" and "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

Lee's Feature Named

The next production in which Jane and Katherine Lee will be seen has just been titled "American Buds." As in the case of "Troublemakers," it will be released as one of the Standard Pictures, the date set being February 24. Announcement also was made from the William Fox offices during the week of the dates of release of three other Standard Pictures

The new releases announced were for March 10 and April 7 and 21 The first of these will be a production directed by Frank Lloyd, presented by an all-star cast and of which present-day divorce system evils are the subject The release of March 24, as previously announced, is to be "Rough and Ready," a William Farnum de luxe production

The April Standard Pictures, so far as determined, include "The Soul of Buddha," a Theda Bara super-production, and one entitled "Queen of the Sea," featuring Annette Kellermann. The Bara picture is based on a story written by the actress and deals with mysticism of the East. Miss Bara has the role of a sacred dancing girl of the temple.

"Queen of the Sea" is said to have a considerably stronger plot than any of the previous Kellermann productions. It deals with the attempts of Thonor, god of storm and destruction, to prey upon humans through the wrecking of ships, and with the efforts of the Queen of the Sea to overcome his influence. A prince and princess of "the world of humans" also are factors in the production, being rescued by the queen and the prince reciprocating by saving the queen when she falls into Thonor's hands.

Tom Mix in March

Announcement of a tentative March schedule for special features shows Peggy Hyland, Virginia Pearson, George Walsh and Tom Mix as the stars to be featured. In addition, there will be one picture by an all-star cast.

"Six-Shooter Andy," in which, of course, Mix is the star, will open the month's releases, this production having been crowded over from February in consequence of the five-day closing of studios and laboratories required under the order of the Fuel Administrator. The star is supported by a cast which includes Enid Markey, Georgie Stone, Virginia Corbin, Buddie Messinger, Violet Radcliffe and others who either have appeared as Fox stars or had leading roles in his productions. March 3 is the date when "Six-Shooter Andy" will be available.

A production which is titled "Woman and the Law," and which was made under the direction of R. A. Walsh, is to be released March 17. It has an all-star cast, and, it is announced, will be strongly featured.

Virginia Pearson, who has been resting for several weeks, now is working on a production called "A Daughter of France" and is scheduled to be at the disposal of exhibitors on March 24. A director new to the Fox organization, Edmund Lawrence, is in charge of making the picture, which, it is said, deals with a situation developing in the present war on the Franco-Belgian front.

The contriblution of George Walsh to the March releases will be made on the 31st, under the title, "The Kid Is Clever." Mr. Walsh was severely injured just following the completion of "Jack Spurlock —Prodigal" and was a hospital patient until the latter part of last week, when he resumed work under the direction of Carl Harbaugh.

Sullivan Story Released February 18

C. Gardner Sullivan has provided the vehicle in which Enid Bennett will appear for Paramount following "The Keys of the Righteous," which goes to the public February 18.

"Naughty, Naughty!" is the title, and is directed by Jerome Storm, under personal supervision of Mr. Ince.

Sandy Stretches of Florida Beach Supplied the Background for Desert Scenes in Goldwyn's "Thais," in Which Mary Garden Has Made Her Debut as a Motion Picture Star

Pittsburgh Sees Goldwyn Stars

Harry Davis In Smoky City Signs Pictures for the Lyric Theatre—Other Exhibitors There Use Same Brand

GOLDWYN PICTURES, the company announced this week, have taken another stride forward in Pittsburgh with the announcement that Harry Davis has contracted for the Goldwyn productions to be shown at his Lyric theatre.

"Dodging a Million," starring Mabel Normand, will be the opening Goldwyn production at the Lyric.

"I had intended contracting for the Goldwyn program right from the start," Mr. Davis told a Goldwyn representative, "but a surplus of productions booked ahead in 1917 set awry all my well laid plans. No enterprising exhibitor, however, can long resist a program containing such box-office and artistic successes as 'The Cinderella Man,' 'The Auction Block' and 'Thais,' not forgetting beautiful 'Polly of the Circus' and "Spreading Dawn.'"

Another cause for Goldwyn elation is the report of big business from a number of Goldwyn exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory. Particularly enthusiastic is H. B. Kester, of the Cameraphone, East Liberty, Pittsburgh's suburb. "'The Cinderella Man' proved a big winner despite the heavy snowfall," said Mr. Kester. "'The Auction Block' is another Goldwyn production that made me feel that a good picture will draw crowds even in these war times. The only regret I have is that I didn't contract to show 'The Auction Block' for a week instead of my usual three-day policy. But I hope to repeat on it shortly. As for 'Thais,' it has more than come up to expectations, though I had always felt that Mary Garden's debut in pictures would be a big event for me."

Among other contract customers around Pittsburgh who report big profits from Goldwyns is James Vela, manager of the Liberty theatre, Wheeling, W. Va. "'The Cinderella Man' is a thing of beauty and a joy forever," was Mr. Vela's comment.

Genuine Characters in Walsh Feature

"Mike" Donlon, formerly a member of the New York Giants, and Jack Goodman, at one time a leading lightweight boxer, are members of the cast of "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," the Fox Special Feature which is to be released February 10. It is this George Walsh picture which William Fox has advertised as having been made exclusively for exhibitors under contract to show his 52-a-year productions.

The story is that of the son of a millionaire who is expelled from college and who thereafter, as a result of trying to be a business man, keeps his father in hot water. Finally, however, he stumbles onto an opportunity to unload a large quantity of onions which the head of the family has accumulated. There is, of course, a love story involved—also a bear, the latter proving to be a real villain in that it upsets Jack's matrimonial prospects.

Pathe Says "Round Up" Is Popular

Pathe this week announced that its picture, "The Round Up," is going big, playing to exceptional business in many cities. The Strand theatre, Pasadena, Cal., and the Plaza theatre, San Diego, report good business, according to Pathe.

"Forbidden Path" Release Changed

Laboratory congestion, due to the coal saving order of the Fuel Administrator, was responsible for the announcement by William Fox last week of a change in the release date of "The Forbidden Path," a Theda Bara super-picture. The production was to have been released January 27, but has been set a week further down the calendar, at February 3.

Studio work had all been completed and Director J. Gordon Edwards had departed for Hollywood, Cal., when the order affecting laboratory work was issued. The film at that time was nearly ready for printing, and it was figured that a difference of a comparatively few days in putting the fuel order into effect would have made it possible to issue the production according to schedule.

"Pay Day" Expected to Be Winner

Metro's screen version of "Pay Day," the first five-act production starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, creators of Metro-Drew comedies, will show some especially interesting scenes, the company declares. Mr. and Mrs. Drew were able to secure "locations" not ordinarily seen in motion pictures, it is said, owing to the vital interest in their work and personality taken by people not as a rule in touch with motion picture life.

Many of the most important scenes in "Pay Day" were taken in the home of State Senator T. Douglas Robinson, who, although obliged to be out of the city at the time, had his caretakers show Mr. and Mrs. Drew and their company every courtesy.

"His College Proxy" Comes Next

"His College Proxy," the fourth Selburn comedy in which Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby are starred, is the forthcoming release in the series of comedies being distributed by General Film Company. Highly amusing complications are said to ensue when Neal persuades the chauffeur to take his place in college while he accepts a position as butler in order that he may be near Gertrude. Neal's proxy proves too good a spender and both masqueraders are exposed.

Contrast Said to Be Petrova Feature

Petrova Picture Company this week announced that "The Light Within," the second production in which Madame Olga Petrova will be seen as the bright particular star of her own production organization offers a striking contrast to "Daughter of Destiny," her initial release. Released on February first and distributed via the various branches of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, "The Light Within" presents the Polish star in a role entirely dissimilar to any heretofore assayed by any of our leading feminine screen artistes.

May Allison Scans Field for a Subject

MANUSCRIPTS for May Allison are said to be pouring in at the Metro studio, 3 West 61st street, New York, and from among them Miss Allison hopes to find one suitable for her first Metro offering as a distinct and individual star.

Rumors have been persistent that Miss Allison would go back to Metro as the co-star of Harold Lockwood, with whom she was formerly starred in Metro productions, but instead the "little blonde lady" of the screen will return as a star on her own account. She will appear in productions supervised by Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro studio.

Miss Allison has been "vacationing" for several months, following the production of a series of Metro pictures on the Pacific Coast with Harold Lockwood as co-star. Several offers have been made her to return to musical comedy, in which she first attracted public attention, and comedy drama was also considered, but the offer to return to her old firm, among her old associates, was too attractive to be refused.

Miss Allison in accordance with her new contract signed with Metro Pictures Corporation, will be a screen star in her own right. She starred with Lockwood both in Metro pictures and in pictures made by American-Mutual. Now she will hold the centre of the stage alone, so to speak. The new Metro contract is an opportunity of which Miss Allison expects to take full advantage, and the best work of the best writers will be utilized for the Allison productions.

Metro Acquires "The Landloper" Rights

The photoplay rights to Holman Day's widely read novel, "The Landloper," have been acquired by Metro, it is announced, and the story will be utilized in the making of a new Metro All-Star Series Production, with Harold Lockwood as the star.

The production will be made in Florida, where Mr. Lockwood and his staff have moved for the winter months. George Irving, who has just joined the Lockwood Company as alternate director with Fred J. Balshofer, will direct it.

Hoover Trailers on Paralta Plays

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has ordered all the prints of Paralta Plays which are sent out by exchanges to carry trailers, reproducing one of the slogans requested by Herbert Hoover, United States Food Commissioner. These will be attached to all films, both the new pictures and those already issued.

The telegram sent out by Mr. Hoover to the motion picture distributors requested the use of one of several slogans in this way. The Hodkinson Corporation selected one which reads: "Hoarding food in your household is both selfish and unnecessary. The Government is protecting the food supply of its people."

Mozukin in New Pathe Program

"The Inner Voice" Is Title of Russian Picture for February 17—Doris Kenyon in New "Hidden Hand" Episode

THE Pathe program for the week of February 17, in the opinion of the Pathe organization, is interesting because it contains Ivan Mozukin, the Russian star; Doris Kenyon in a serial chapter; Ruth Roland in a two-reel series drama; Harold Lloyd in a one-reel comedy; Toto in a two-reel comedy and various short reel features of current interest, including the Hearst-Pathe News.

Ivan Mozukin appears in "The Inner Voice," a Russian Art Film in five reels produced by the Russian Art Film Corporation.

Doris Kenyon stars in the thirteenth episode of "The Hidden Hand" with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, a two-reel serial episode produced by Pathe.

Ruth Roland stars in the fifth drama of the series known as the general title, "The Price of Folly." This one is called "Sold for Gold," with Frank Mayo. A woman's desire for social standing and a man's greed for wealth form the interesting theme about which has been woven this strong two-reel drama. In it an ambitious mother marries her daughter to the son of an equally ambitious man. The boy is a scoundrel. The result after a series of dramatic incidents is the violent death of the husband and the suicide of the wife.

Harold Lloyd is seen in "Hit Him Again," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. This is a comedy in which Child Harold is matched with Boiler-Nose Bill, the heavyweight champion, in a finish fight, straight Marquis of Gooseberry rules, no fighting or shooting. Object matrimony with a daughter of a wealthy gentleman who wants a fighter in the family.

Toto stars in a two-reel comedy called "The Junk Man," the second of his remarkable bombshells of joy, produced by Rolin. In this picture Toto is introduced in a unique role. He officiates as general helper on a junk wagon, driven by our old friend Bud Jamison, the fierce-looking black mustached heavyweight who was formerly in the "Luke" comedies.

"Along the Riviera, Italy," a Pathe colored travel, and "Watching Flowers Bloom," Pathe colored, form a split reel. There is also an International Cartoon and split-reel, and Hearst-Pathe News No. 16 and No. 17 on this program.

Margarita Fischer Tops List

"Jilted Janet" Is Title of Mutual's Chief Feature of February 11—Billie Rhodes Comedy Is Also Included

MARGARITA FISCHER in "Jilted Janet" tops the Mutual schedule releases for the week of February 11. The production was made by the American Film Company, Inc., under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, from the scenario by Elizabeth Mahoney, the author of "Molly-Go-Get-'Em."

"Jilted Janet" is a comedy regarding a young girl in moderate circumstances, Janet Barnes, who has been jilted by a "candidly mercenary" young man who frankly confesses that love in a cottage is not his forte. In a spirit of mischief, Janet sends him a postal of a magnificent mansion belonging to her neighbor, asking him how he liked her new home. When he writes that he and his wife will visit her on their honeymoon, she borrows the house from the caretakers during the real owner's absence and entertains her former suitor and his wife in regal fashion.

"Three Times and Out" is the title of the Strand comedy, starring Billie Rhodes, which is released February 12.

Billie and her sweetheart have a lovers' quarrel, and he refuses to take her home from a dance when she flirts with other men, and she is compelled to accept the escort of the butler. On the way she is insulted by a drunken man and is saved by a chivalrous mechanic, who beats up the drunk and escorts her home. When her sweetheart attempts a reconciliation, the mechanic beats him up, under the impression that he is a stranger. Billie forgives her battered lover and heals his bruised body and affections.

The Mutual Weekly, released February 11, is said to be replete with interesting topics. War pictures, pictures showing the effects of the blizzard which recently swept the country, and the results of the fuel conservation orders, are in this issue.

William Fox Rearranges His Schedule

Owing to the recent order of the United States Fuel Administrator it was necessary to rearrange the schedule of releases of the 52-a-year Fox specials as follows; January 20, Sonia Markova in "A Heart's Revenge"; January 27, "Treasure Island" or, "Troublemakers"; February 3, June Caprice in "The Heart of Romance"; February 17, Gladys Brockwell in "The Moral Law"; February 24, Jewel Carmen in "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes"; March 3, Tom Mix in "Six Shooter Andy."

Mutual Says Exhibitors Like Russell

Mutual this week declared that the last three Russell pictures, "Snap Judgment," "New York Luck" and "In Bad," have been pronounced by exhibitors to be the best drawing cards they have ever booked. Advance bookings on "In Bad," released January 1, indicated that it would break all previous records established by this star, Mutual insists.

World Names Features to May

Release Dates Are Not Announced, as Order of Issue Is Not Determined —Kitty Gordon Heads the List

THE WORLD FILM CORPORATION announced this week that it is able to give exhibitors the titles of all the World-Pictures Brady-Made completed and scheduled for release up to the middle of May. Inasmuch as the chronological order of the pictures is not determined, no release dates are given, and the following order is only approximate:

Kitty Gordon in the "Divine Sacrifice" leads the list. Associated with Miss Gordon in this picture is Jean Angelo.

Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley follow with "Broken Ties," which is directed by Mr. Ashley. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are co-starred in "His Royal Highness," in which picture Mr. Blackwell performs athletic dexterity. Alice Brady reappears on the World program in "The Spurs of Sybil," a comedy-drama. In this picture Miss Brady portrays a very ambitious girl who surmounts all kinds of obstacles, both serious and ludicrous, in order to win her spurs.

Kitty Gordon's next picture is called "The Wasp" and contains a number of mob scenes and episodes which indicate some deviation from her previous roles.

"The Cross Bearer," in seven reels, with Montagu Love and Jeanne Eagels, is prepared for release. This is the World-Picture picturizing the conditions in Belgium at the opening of the war. Montagu Love portrays Cardinal Mercier in his role of protector of the oppressed Belgians.

Madge Evans is co-starred with George MacQuarrie in a picture with the thought-provoking title, "Wanted, a Mother." The story revolves about the vicissitudes of little Madge as the motherless child of an ambitious surgeon who endeavors to renew the affections of her father and at the same time find a suitable mother.

Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge appear in "The Way Out," Ethel Clayton in "The Witch Woman," and Kitty Gordon in "Devil's Dice," all of which titles are not permanently decided upon. Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell appear together in "Leap to Fame" and Ethel Clayton plays an unusual role in "A Soul Without Windows," which has the Shaker life as a portion of its background. "Journey's End," which is also an Ethel Clayton picture, has John Bowers as leading man.

The release sheet also contains an "Announcement Extraordinary." Inasmuch as such pictures—previous to their being permanently titled—as "Mothers of France," "Rasputin" and "The Cross Bearer" were unveiled to the public under this impersonal caption, the natural implication is that another superpicture is to be released on the World program. Rumor hath it that the cast contains the entire roster of the English histrionic profession.

Ethel Clayton is scheduled to appear in "A Modern Girl," and another all-star production entitled "Helene" is about completed. Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Montagu Love, George MacQuarrie and John Bowers are among the cast.

Favorite Films in February

Vitagraph Announces Those for Four Weeks Ending March 4—Many Stars Noted in Line-up of Eight Subjects

FAVORITE FILM FEATURES for four weeks, the first of which are scheduled for release on February 11, are announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as follows: February 11—"The Sacrifice of Kathleen," two-reel drama, with Norma Talmadge, Leo Delaney, Josie Sadler and Van Dyke Brooks; "Art for a Heart," one-reel comedy, with Lillian Walker and Wally Van.

February 18—"The Mischief Maker," two-reel drama, with Earle Williams, Edith Storey, Rita Bori and Darwin Karr; "Sunny Jim in Search of a Mother," Bobby Connelly, Tefft Johnson, Dorothy Kelly, Rose Tapley and William Shea.

February 25—"Old Reliable," two-reel drama, with Norma Talmadge, Julia Swayne Gordon, Leo Delaney, Van Dyke Brooks and Anders Randolf; "Stenographer Troubles," one-reel comedy, with Anita Stewart, Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Lillian Walker, Dorothy Kelly, Flora Finch, Florence Turner, John Bunny, James Morrison, George Cooper and Dick Leslie.

March 4—"An Officer and a Gentleman," a two-reel drama, with Arthur Ashley, Naomi Childers, Jane Fearnley, Charles Wellesley, Donald Hall, Darwin Karr, Marie Wierman and Bobby Connelly; "Unlucky Louie," one-reel comedy, featuring Sidney Drew.

The stars alone who are listed in these several programs indicate that the pictures are up to the high standard which has been maintained in the Favorite Film Features since these selected reissue subjects were first put on the market, about seven months ago. It is declared by Vitagraph that the popularity of the pictures is as great as when they were first released.

The appearance in two of the programs listed of little Bobby Connelly calls attention to the series of one-reel stories in which the boy star is featured, the pictures being known as the Bobby Connelly Series. Seventeen of these pictures were produced by Vitagraph, in most of which little Aida Morton, the baby lead of the Vitagraph forces, appeared as Bobby's leading woman. The pictures, which received indorsement from the National Board of Review, are numbered among the most successful of the Vitagraph units, and reports from all exchanges accredit them as some of the best, as viewed from box-office standards, and their appeal to patrons.

Serial Episode for Each Week of Year

The policy of "a serial episode for each week in the year," recently announced by Vitagraph, has met with hearty response from exhibitors of the country, states Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. He made this declaration apropos of the receipt at the company's office for a number of weeks past of a steady flow of contracts for "The Woman in the Web." Merely on the announcement that the serial to follow "Vengeance—and the Woman" was in preparation, exhibitors all over the country have taken the initiative to secure an early run, with the result that while the early episodes of "Vengeance" are just now being released, its successor, "The Woman in the Web," is already being heavily booked.

Winter Carnival in Flynn Serial

Lake Cayuga at Ithaca, New York, on the shore of which The Whartons have their studios, where they are producing Chief Flynn's exposure of the Imperial German Government's spy system in this country, is covered with ice two feet or more thick on which snow lies fully eighteen inches deep.

In the seventh episode of "The Eagle's Eye," a winter carnival will be made an important incident.

March Screen Magazine Announced

Contents of the Universal Screen Magazine No. 60, which is scheduled for release March 1, include the following:

"Preparedness," being a day with our future admirals, taken at Annapolis, Md.; "Nature Studies, Fish Frolics De Luxe," "Eight Hundred Years of Coal," "Animal Friends" and "Miracles in Mud."

Marguerite Courtot Is Star of Thomas A. Edison's "The Unbeliever" in Seven Reels

Ince Stars Make New Feature Pictures

ACTIVITIES under the Thomas H. Ince banner on the West Coast have been unusually noticeable during the past week. William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray are busy on new features, and Enid Bennett is nearing the completion of a story in which she is appearing.

The William S. Hart players returned to the Los Angeles studios last week from Chatsworth Park, where exteriors for the new Ince production for Artcraft, following "Blue Blazes Rawden" were filmed. During the stay at the Park, the company camped out in the mountain fastness where several exciting experiences occurred. Besides Jane Novak, others appearing in the picture, as yet unnamed, are Milton Ross, Charles K. French and John P. Lockney.

A new Dorothy Dalton vehicle to follow "Love Me" has just been commenced at the studio. In the production of the early scenes of this film several days ago, Miss Dalton had an opportunity at trying her hand at directing. While R. William Noil, who directs her Paramount pictures under the supervision of Mr. Ince, is perhaps one of the most finished experts in his work in the industry, he is never averse to taking suggestions.

Activities on Charles Ray's sixth Paramount picture, which will follow "His Own Home Town" and "Let's Go," have just been commenced. The new picture is as yet unnamed but it is announced that Doris Lee, who supported Mr. Ray in "His Mother's Boy," is again playing opposite him in this production. The cast includes Melbourne MacDowell, Billy Elmer and other well known Ince players. Victor Schertzinger is directing the film under Mr. Ince's personal supervision.

Enid Bennett's newest vehicle, "Naughty, Naughty!" produced by Thomas H. Ince, directed by Jerome Storm, and scheduled for release after "The Keys of the Righteous," her first Paramount offering, is rapidly progressing and will be finished in the near future. Marjorie Bennett, the charming younger sister of the star, last week made her debut as one of the supporting players to her sister. Earl Rodney again plays opposite the star, others in the cast including Gloria Hope and Andrew Arbuckle.

Vic Moore Surrounded by Dainty Girls

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this week announced that Victor Moore has an enviable role in the Klever comedy released by Paramount on February 11. It is entitled "Adam and Some Eves," and Moore is the only male appearing in the production, which includes in the cast Peggy Adams, Agnes Neilsen and a bevy of other pretty girls.

William Russell Picture Renamed

The latest Russell picture released as an American-Mutual production, has been changed from "Polo Jack" to "The Midnight Trail."

"Real Folks" for February 10

Triangle Announces for Same Week a William Desmond Story and Keystone Comedy Called "Wronged by Mistake"

AFTER weeks of waiting, Director Walter Edwards succeeded in filming the bringing in of an oil gusher for Mrs. Kate Corbaley's story, "Real Folks," released by Triangle for the week of February 10. The story deals with the discovery of oil on a California farm, and Edwards resolved to wait until the desired opportunity should arrive.

In this comedy-drama, "Real Folks," the characters are plain people in an unnatural environment which they have created for themselves to "keep up with the Joneses." The story depicts the tribulations of the newly rich, the rebellious younger generation that refuses to be governed by conventions, and the final triumph of love over all social prejudices.

William Desmond has the title role in "The Captain of His Soul," also on the Triangle program for the week of February 10. This play is a screen adaptation, by Lillian Ducey, of Eleanoret Talbot Kinkaid's magazine story, "Shackles," which had its inspiration in William Ernest Henley's poem, "Out of the Night." The central theme of the plot is a mysterious death, and the belief of two brothers that the other is the perpetrator of the crime.

William Desmond and Charles Gunn portray the two brothers. Jack Richardson, Triangle "heavy," has the role of the villainous Martin. Walt Whitman, recently seen in "The Hopper," has a characterization part as Ebenezer Boyce. Mitzi Gould is seen to advantage as Myra, and Claire McDowell is Annette DeSearcy. The cast also includes Jules Friquet, Eugene Burr, Percy Challenger, and Lucretia Harris. Gilbert P. Hamilton was the director.

"Wronged by Mistake," the Keystone comedy released for February 10, is described as "a cyclone on roller skates." Dora, the maid, loses the family bank roll and is sent out into the cold, cruel world. Then tickets to the skating rink go astray and Harry Gribbon does a glide on the glassy floor into a party of ladies. When love's old, sweet song sneaks into the hearts of several married couples, a matrimonial chase ensues, followed by love's cruel entanglements. The missing wad turns up, and the story proceeds to a grand holocaustic climax.

"His Nine Lives," and "A Game Gambler" are the Triangle Komedies released for the week of January 10.

"Son of Democracy" This Month

First Feature of Chapin Series Released February 11, Followed by Additional Chapters Weekly for Ten Weeks

THE first three installments of "The Son of Democracy," written and produced by Benjamin Chapin, in which the delineator of Lincoln roles plays the part of the martyred president, will be released by Paramount during the month of February. The series consists of ten two-reel features.

The first feature of the series is entitled "My Mother," and will be released February 11th. It deals with the log cabin birth of Abraham Lincoln and with the humorous and pathetic events in his early boyhood.

"My Father," the release of February 18, tells the story of Lincoln's early boyhood after the death of his mother. Abe's strong character, even as a boy, is demonstrated when, in obedience to the promise made to his mother, he refuses to fight with his youthful enemy though the provocation is great and the fighting blood courses tumultously through his veins.

"The Call to Arms," released February 25, introduces the President in the White House in the spring of 1861, and sheds sidelights upon the domestic life of Abraham Lincoln, revealing the greatness of his character. Confronted by world problems, Lincoln found time for his wife and two little sons, Willie and Tad, and very human touches are developed. The baiting of the President by militant delegations clamoring for war is strikingly shown, and the earnest endeavors of Lincoln to avert bloodshed bring out his strong determination. The fall of Ft. Sumter, the call to arms and the enthusiastic response of the nation present scenes of stirring patriotism, in which are appropriately interpolated pictures of our soldiers in the present day going to the battle fronts of the great world war.

Vitagraph Serial Is Now Completed

Last week Edward J. Montagne and Garfield Thompson completed the picturization of "The Woman in the Web," another Vitagraph serial, from the pen of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. It is Mr. Smith's intention to have two serial companies at work in the West all the time. William Duncan is at present completing "Vengeance and the Woman."

Success Reported for Sunshine Comedies

It is said that the Sunshine Comedies which Henry Lehrman has made for William Fox are going big all over the country. A small fortune is said to have been spent in the production of each of these fun makers.

Powerful Story Promised by Goldwyn

The story appeal of Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" is surpassed, Goldwyn declares, in his newest production, "Heart of the Sunset," made from the author's novel of that name for distribution by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation as a Rex Beach special.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

Bray Studios Add Novelty to Topics

THE public is willing enough to absorb information. But it wants sugar on the pill, if the latter is administered between the feature and the comedy. If the sugar takes the form of amusement or novelty, it will swallow the dose gladly. And ask for more.

Of this fact the Bray Studios, issuing the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, are fully aware, and while adhering to their aim of adding to the public's store of information on topics of vital and current interest, are offering it in a form which is primarily entertaining, as well as novel and pleasing to the eye.

"We try, of course," said Mr. Bray, "to obtain subjects which in themselves possess these qualities, such as our recent release, 'The New Art of Dress.' But sometimes the subject, while interesting and valuable, lacks just that something which gets and holds the attention of an audience. In such cases we supply it in the titles or edit the scenario in such a way as to bring out its possible dramatic value. 'Mobilizing the Twenty Million Woman Power of the United States,' to be shortly released, is of great importance, but in the form in which it was submitted to us it had no screen value. However, by giving it snappy titles and choosing material that has good screen possibilities we are able to present the subject in a manner that will interest and hold any audience. Everyone talks 'camouflage' and everyone has seen pictures of strangely daubed boats and guns. In our treatment of this subject in a forthcoming issue of the Pictograph we are not content to show merely the result, but we indicate by titles and pictures the reason why we show how nature herself camouflages, and we make clear by illustration exactly how a big gun escapes the attention of the airman flying directly overhead. In short, we believe that education is no less valuable for being pleasant, and our experience indicates that being so it is for all concerned profitable."

A RECIPE FOR SUCCESS

MESSRS. BRANDON & BRADBURY, owners of the Majestic and Bunny Theatres in Manhattan, are successful.

Mr. Brandon told us so himself, and knowing the Bunny Theatre even better than we know Mr. Brandon, we have every reason to believe him.

After much experiment and observation Mr. Brandon evolved what he considered the ideal program for his first house, the Bunny. Box office reports justified his introducing it with slight modification to meet a different type of audience at his second house.

BEATING THE CROOK AND THE TOOTHACHE

The widespread commendation accorded to the X-ray pictures in motion shown in a recent release of the Universal Screen Magazine will be extended to a similar series which forms part of the 58th issue of the Magazine, released February 15. Here the wonderful instrument is turned on suspicious molars and brings to light deep-seated troubles that would elude the most careful external examination. The man or woman lucky enough not to need the dentist is a museum exhibit for rarity. The unnumbered army who experience both torture and relief at his hands will gaze at this illuminating screen textbook with keen interest.

"A crook ain't got a fair chance in New York now!" We quote from the Screen Magazine, which makes clear, in pictures showing the training given New York policemen, just why there's no longer a 50-50 bet on the husky evil-doer in a bout with an agile and expert guardian of the law.

"Harvsting Pineapples in Hawaii" indicates the extent to which this valuable industry has grown, necessitating modern tractors and intricate machinery, while under the title of "Preparedness" comely women show in how many ways they can release a man for the front, from making munitions to moving scenery.

GUNS PAST AND PRESENT

In its International split reel of the present week the Pathe Exchange goes back into our history of the past one hundred and fifty years and shows the evolution of the firearm (American Firearms) from the flintlock of the pioneer to the rifle in the hands of our army to-day. Each type of gun is handled and demonstrated by a man dressed in the army uniform of the period to which it belongs. Close-ups show the various methods of breech and muzzle loading.

Happy Hooligan, rebuking two youngsters who are "making ink" by dipping a small black person into a bucket of water, tells a wonderful tale, "All for the Ladies," of a border raid, a lady with a swastika and a band of slithery snakes.

TO RAINIER'S SUMMIT

With distant Rainier, whose majestic glittering peak always dominates the horizon, as our objective, Robert Bruce takes us over "The Trail of the Sky" (Educational Films Corporation) in his usual debonair and sprightly fashion. Leaving Mountain Inn, perched at an altitude of 16,000 feet in Rainier National Park, the pack train makes its zigzag way up the heights which lead toward Rainier's summit. The going in the region of Nisqually Glacier is no easy task, but "fresh grass and ice water" are "served in the Blue Room," and a cascade seemingly descending from the heavens offers aesthetic refreshments to the foot-weary.

CLIMBING THE SKY LINE

Two adventurous young men, who are satisfied with nothing less than the High Spots, are the heroes of the Educational Film release "The Ridge Roamers." Also we might mention The Dog. When it is announced that Robert T. Bruce is one of the adventurers aforesaid, it is needless to state that the "high spots" lie amid the eternal snows of the Olympics and the adventures are such as leave soul and body cleaner and stronger, and nearer the Great Spirit that dwells in the silences.

Which sounds solemn, but isn't so meant. And the film itself is brimful of the wit and gayety that give a delightful individuality to all of this series of scenic pictures.

BEAUTY IN COLOR

Eternally associated with roses and romance is that strip of sun-drenched shore that stretches from Nice in France to the towns that lie on the northwestern edge of Italy. The latest Pathe scenic, "Along the Riviera," includes a series of beautiful views in colors of this picturesque region with its strongly indented shore, whose rocky ridges stretch out like great fingers into the turquoise waters. Most of the coast is high and rugged, and at the base of the dark cliffs nestle little towns and groups of summer villas. Some wonderful sunset views in gorgeous and startling coloring close the film.

The second half of the reel consists of the ever-fascinating subject, "Watching Flowers Bloom." Particularly fine is the growth and blossoming of a richly tinted petunia.

UNTURNING THE TRICK

You remember, don't you, how the magician used to "show" just how he did a favorite trick? And how, after he got through the demonstration, you knew just exactly as much as you did before, or less? Not so in Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 104. The young gentleman, Hereward Carrington in fact, who takes rabbits from hats and changes white handkerchiefs into colored bandanas gives away the trick so that the most naive can grasp it.

This is one of four pleasing subjects in this attractive number. The first pictures Mrs. Susanna Bell, one of the women in unusual professions whom the Bray Studios are presenting to the public via the screen. Mrs. Bell raises Persian cats and introduces us to a half dozen or so of these furry aristocrats.

Young America demonstrates its ability to withstand winter by coasting, ice-boating, playing hockey and indulging in other forms of sport on snow and ice.

Leighton Budd, in one of his artistic cartoons, indicates the final fate that awaits "Fritz," despite His Master's Voice in Berlin and the Made in Germany Big Stick.

"ANOTHER LUMP, PLEASE"

That is what Mother Bear said, and when it wasn't forthcoming she followed the sugar man right up the tree in which he had taken refuge. But that was last summer, when we had the run of the bowl and not a minute dose served up in a white envelope like a doctor's prescription. Also the interesting event took place in Yellowstone Park, where bears are the spoiled darlings of residents and visitors alike, and where Mr. Finley, of the Oregon Game and Fish Commission, found material for a delightfully funny film entitled "The Bears of the Yellowstone" (Universal).

With an instinct for the dramatic, Mr. Finley opens his film with a picture of the park refuse wagon visited by a bear or two, but as the film unwinds the bears increase in number till a goodly herd of the big fellows occupies the screen. The fact of their friendliness being established, Mr. Finley concentrates on the performances of a mother bear with a pair of twins. The cubs want to look at the camera, but object to the reserve process. However, Mother Bear has no false modesty and obliges the camera man with a fine likeness of herself. For reward, a few lumps of sugar. But an inordinate liking for sweets overcomes her polite reserve, with consequences described above. The youngsters, given the screen to themselves, have a fine boxing match, biffing each other till both roll off their platform. But like good children they kiss and make up, and then they lie down side by side for "a beauty sleep."

An unusually attractive, entertaining reel.

BACKYARD HOSPITALITY

"The little cuss wrastled with me!" exclaimed the big man at Roaring Camp, when the little new baby, Luck, grasped his huge finger. Much the same sort of pride animates the boy and girl who, in the second of the Finley nature studies, "Taming Wild Birls" (Universal), make friend with the tiny feathered creatures who haunt our orchards and gardens, needing only a guarantee of shelter, food and freedom from molestation to become our trusting intimates. A first hint of how it is done is given by the pictures of young lads building bird houses, which we later see occupied by wrens and bluebirds. When the cat, dire enemy of our useful insect-eating birds, catches and kills mother bluebird, the children adopt the orphans, filling the gaping mouths with pinches of food till the youngsters are strong enough to eat from outstretched plate or hand. In the friendliest confidence they fly around their foster parents, alighting on shoulder and head.

Direct Sales Plan Launched in New York

At a meeting of the New York Local, No. 1, of the M. P. E. L., held Tuesday afternoon, January 29, at the headquarters in New York City, the manufacturer-to-exhibitor-direct plan, which was approved by the Allied Exhibitors' Convention in Washington in December, was presented.

I. M. Chadwick, Joseph A. Golden, Harry Rapf, Louis L. Levine and Charles C. Pettijohn presented the details of the plan, for the consideration of the approximately seventy-five exhibitors present.

A motion was made and unanimously carried to put this direct sales plan into immediate effect in New York City, and a committee was appointed by President Manheimer to secure signatures necessary to guarantee New York City's minimum quota. Quotas have now been guaranteed under this new plan for sixteen states and quotas are now organizing to adopt the plan in sixteen other states, New York City and Brooklyn.

Exhibitors booking units are springing up in all parts of the United States for the purpose of marketing film under this direct sales plan. The seven independent producers engaged in this enterprise are receiving many inquiries and great encouragement from exhibitors in every mail.

"The Belgian" to Show for Belgian Relief

Arrangements have been completed for the screening of Sidney Olcott's production, "The Belgian," at a benefit entertainment to be given on Friday, February 8, in St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, in behalf of the war orphaned children of Belgium and France.

This marks the second time the production, which is the third special release of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has been shown at a Belgian benefit. It was shown first under the joint auspices of Sidney Olcott and Frank G. Hall at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York. An admission fee of $3 was charged and a considerable sum was raised for the Belgian fund.

Messrs. Sheehan and Lourie, owners of the Rialto theatre of San Francisco, at which the Olcott production will be screened following its presentation at the St. Francis, will co-operate to make the entertainment a big success. The theatre proprietors have agreed to install two machines in the Colonial Ball Room of the hotel and to furnish an expert operator, so that the projection will be as near perfect as possible.

The entertainment is being arranged by a committee of prominent San Francisco society workers, among them Mrs. Harriet Fay Richards, who is head of the committee on arrangements.

"Calamity, Blessing in Disguise"

So Says P. V. R. Key in Commenting Upon the Effect of the Fuel Administrator's Order as Affecting Industry

P. V. R. KEY, director of sales and advertising for Foursquare Pictures in commenting upon the effect which the Fuel Administrator's order has had upon the industry, quotes M. H. Hoffman as saying before he left last week for a tour of inspection of the Foursquare exchanges that while it must hurt the weak exhibitors, the one-day-a-week closing rule will only make the strong exhibitors stronger.

Mr. Key elaborates upon this the statement made by Mr. Hoffman in the following interview:

"Sometimes, as many of us know, a seeming calamity is a blessing in disguise. This closing-order may be one of these elements for improving matters. It is likely to hurt a little, but the exhibitor least of all. For he may make up, in patronage, on the Mondays and other nights what he loses on Tuesdays.

"The distributors are the ones entitled to sympathy—if it is deemed necessary to pass any around. Because taking one day out of each week for several weeks means a loss of possible play-dates and they are gone, irretrievably. Exhibitors should bear this in mind, and a great many already are so doing. Only a few days ago one Foursquare Exchange manager wrote in saying that every theatre manager he had seen in his territory agreed that exhibitors were far less hard hit than either distributors or producers.

"It would be useless to deny that seemingly there has been a succession of hard knocks for the industry—beginning with the effects caused by the placing of war taxation upon film raw stock, positive prints and theatre admission tickets. But all these hardships have been righting themselves. The far-sighted people in the industry are not agitated by this latest disturbing element. As Mr. Hoffman recently said:

"'The industry is in for some hard knocks, but they will be constructive ones which are to bring it benefits.

"What is required, principally, is for the leading exhibitors to show the way to others less fortunate. For the trade, without a question of doubt, is approaching an unprecedented era of prosperity. Underlying proof is clear to those smart enough to look for it; and it is these men who are getting ready to take the fullest advantage of the upturn, which is nearer at hand than many pessimists think.

"It would occasion no surprise among the well informed if by March 1 the Federal Fuel Administration were to vacate the order for Tuesday closings. By that time winter will be nearly, if not fully over, and the freight congestion will have become materially relieved, and shipping conditions vastly improved.

"Then, without doubt, will the desire for entertainment and diversion become more pronounced. Likewise will the people have acquired the habit of paying war tax on admissions. So, it would seem exhibitors may reasonably anticipate the business pendulum to swing toward instead of away from them. And on that account existing troubles should be met smilingly because of absolute knowledge that they are but temporary. There never was a time when adversity did not depart leaving matters primed for subsequent betterment over their original condition, and it will be so in this instance.

"The speed with which the improvement is made, however, will rest in a measure with the exhibitors themselves. Wry faces and hard-luck tales are not good medicine for the quick recovery of the ailing patient, and nothing will have a better effect on the public than a generous amount of good advertising, a sunny frame of mind and the showing of the best pictures in the most up-to-date manner possible.

Mabel Normand, Star of "Mickey," Distributed by Western Import Company

Schlaifer's Feature Having Good Runs

"Where Cowboy Is King," distributed throughout the world by the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions of Seattle, Washington, has had successful engagements at the Burbank Theatre, Los Angeles; the Star Theatre, Pocatello, Idaho; Irene Theatre, American Falls; Baker Theatre, Baker, Oregon; Gem Theatre, Filer, Idaho, and the Majestic Theatre, Boise, Idaho, it is announced. Negotiations are pnding for its exhibition throughout Alaska.

Bessie Barriscale Appears as Star of "The Cast-Off," Which Is Being Distributed by Foursquare Pictures Corporation

Piedmont Flourishes in Foreign Fields

PIEDMONT PICTURES CORPORATION, through their export department, announces the successful operation of their efficiency distribution plan in the United Kingdom. The London office just closed for "Babbling Tongues," Ivan Film Productions' seven-reel feature.

"One Law for Both," another of Ivan's big hits, has had its censor troubles completely adjusted, and the feature will be released in the United Kingdom within the next few weeks. Two of the serials controlled by Piedmont Pictures Corporation have been closed for the above-mentioned territories by the London office, and distribution of same will commence immediately.

Piedmont has also succeeded in having Hanover Films' feature, "Should a Baby Die," pass the United Kingdom's censor and the reports as to the booking of the picture come up to all expectations.

The Buenos Ayres office and its various connections report the sale of all of Ivan's products for the following Latin American countries: Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia. Ivan Productions are among the strongest showing in South America. Piedmont has taken over the exclusive handling of Speer Carbons from Inter-Ocean, for the territories controlled by Krishnadas Bros. of Bombay and the various connections. The sole agency covers India, Burma, Ceylon and the Straits.

Battle Scenes "Shot" for Gerard's Picture

JAMES W. GERARD, former Ambassador to Germany and author of "My Four Years in Germany," accompanied by Director William Nigh and his assistants, visited Camp Upton, Long Island, last week for the purpose of photographing the final scenes of "My Four Years in Germany" as adapted from his book. Permission was obtained from General Johnson.

Battle scenes were filmed, in which the boys went through special review and duplicated the western battle front scenes in France, and the boys are shown going "over the top" as America's answer to Germany's challenge.

"Without co-operation of the officials of the Government and the heads of the camps, such scenes would be impossible to take," said William Nigh. "Money alone could not duplicate them, could never reproduce the stern reality, the tremendous enthusiasm, the realism in the scenes that will stir even the most blasé audience to frenzied enthusiasm.

"It comes as a fitting finale to a picture that is not only timely, but is of vital interest and importance to every American everywhere."

Ambassador Gerard expressed his surprise and pleasure at the fitness of the camp and the men in it. Mr. Gerard was the guest of honor at the review of the 305th Infantry. In the temporary absence of General Johnson, the division commander, the troops were reviewed by Brig. Gen. Edmund Wittenmyer, commander of the 153d Infantry Brigade. General Wittenmyer was formerly military attache at Havana and received Ambassador Gerard when he visited there. Following an inspection of the camp, Mr. Gerard made this statement.

"During the Spanish-American War, I was in Camp Black, Long Island, and for the last two and one-half years in Germany I spent considerable time in visiting military camps and prison camps, and therefore learned by experience how to look at a camp, and in Camp Upton I went through it just as I would a camp in Germany, for the purpose of seeing how the men were treated. I examined the sleeping quarters to-day and found them clean, well-aired and warm."

In the 105th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "the magazine on the screen," the first of a series illustrating the tricks that magicians perform will be shown.

Wharton Takes Scenes in New York

Leopold D. Wharton, supervising director, and George A. Lessey, director for The Whartons, who are producing Chief Flynn's secret service expose of the Imperial German Government's spy system, "The Eagle's Eye," began last week the filming in New York City of incidents in an episode treating of one of Imperial Germany's most desperate plots—the crippling of American shipping by creating a longshoreman's strike. Several days were occupied in this work.

Mr. Wharton brought the larger part of the "Eagle's Eye" company to New York for the filming of these incidents, including King Baggot, Marguerite Snow, Paul Everton, John P. Wade, Frederick Jones, William N. Bailey, William H. Cavanaugh, W. H. Sisson, W. F. Stewart, B. Potar, John J. Sullivan, Jr., P. Hennessey, L. F. Baker, mechanical engineer at the Wharton Studios in Ithaca, and L. T. Bacon, camera man.

Anna Luther Lends Aid to "Smokes"

Anna Luther has arrived in New York after a little more than two years in California, where she recently completed a seven-reel feature now being exploited under the title of "Who's to Blame?"

Bert Ennis, publicity director of "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," gives Miss Luther credit for doing good work in connection with the fund, declaring that her personality and persistency have worked remarkably well in augmenting its resources.

May Charge Theatres for Signs

The Board of Control of Montreal, Quebec, has taken up the suggestion that a license fee of $5 per year be charged for the privilege of using desired spaces for all permanent or temporary signs. It is then proposed to charge an additional fee of five cents per square foot per annum for the continued privilege.

Westerners Like Foursquare Releases

Ben S. Cohen, vice-president and general manager of the Foursquare Pictures branch, operating the territory of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico, writes the New York office that Foursquare releases are having the best of success in this territory. He says:

"'The Bar Sinister' is regarded hereabouts as one of the finest productions, from every standpoint, which has ever been shown. Story, cast, direction and all else that go to make a great picture have been combined in this Edgar Lewis production. 'One Hour,' a feature of unique elements, is exciting a deal of comment from experts who know good pictures and the public which does not stop to analyze them, but usually guesses right.

"I find 'The Fringe of Society' is well liked. It is a picture of distinguished atmosphere, well produced and acted by a fine cast. Ruth Roland, Milton Sills, J. Herbert Frank and Leah Baird have done work in this picture justifying their reputations. 'The Great White Trail' and the other features we have to offer are all finding ready acceptance."

"Demand for Big Features Increasing"

The increasing popularity of the special production, as reflected by the recent decision of important distributing concerns to specialize in that type of attraction, is becoming daily more manifest among the exhibitors, according to Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

Reports recently received by Mr. Card from the firm's representative in the Virginia district, B. R. Tolmas, indicate that the demand for special productions is not confined to any special class of exhibitor, but that large and small alike are showing a marked preference for productions that lend themselves to extraordinary exploitation.

"I am convinced that the special production is the film attraction of the future," said Mr. Card. "Daily I receive reports from representatives of the U. S. Corporation scattered throughout the country which show an ever increasing demand for specials.

"As a rule I have found that exhibitors want special attractions because they can put behind them a maximum of advertising and usually reap a fair profit.

Gaumont Is Optimistic

The recent announcement that the news service of the Gaumont Company will shortly be released under a new arrangement which will make it more valuable than ever to exhibitors and to the public has caused considerable comment in film circles. In the midst of the pessimism caused by the war and the shortage of coal comes the rumor that this pioneer company will soon increase its activities in this country. Gaumont officials refuse to confirm this rumor, but admit that they will soon have an interesting statement to make public.

Eugene O'Brien and Catherine Calvert Are Appearing in Features Made by Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation

Keeney's First Production Under Way

WORK on the production of the first picture to be produced by the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation began last week in the Biograph Studios, which have been leased by Mr. Keeney pending the erection of his own studio. The title of the new picture is "A Romance of the Underworld." The scenario, by Mildred Considine, is an adaptation of the play of the same name by Paul Armstrong, which scored such a success with the late playwright's wife, Catherine Calvert, who is featured in the photoplay.

When he organized his new enterprise Mr. Keeney declared that no expense would be spared in turning out artistic productions. That his promise will be kept is evidenced by the cast he has selected to support Miss Calvert and the other arrangements which have been made under the careful supervision of his director, James Kirkwood. Among the players who have been engaged to support Miss Calvert are Eugene O'Brien, leading man, who has played opposite Norma Talmadge in her most important productions, and David Powell, who has played opposite Mary Pickford, Edna Goodrich and Ann Murdock. Recently he has played opposite Olive Tell in Empire All-Star picture plays.

Edwin Forsberg, who has appeared in principal parts in "Madame X" and other important screen productions and is now in one of the chief roles in "Seven Days' Leave," has an important role, and Sybil Carmen, the "Moon Girl" in Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolics," is casted for a part.

Miss Considine, who wrote the scenario, made the screen adaptation for "Ghosts of Yesterday," Norma Talmadge's latest picture, from the play "Two Women," by Rupert Hughes. She has finished recently an adaptation of "Common Clay" for the Pathe Company, in which Fannie Ward will be starred, and has done an original scenario, "All Wrong," for Bryant Washburn, of the same company. "Damnation of Doubt," another original scenario by Miss Considine, is to be the first release of the Harry McRae Webster Company.

"Calamity Howlers Wrong," Says Adams

JO. L. ADAMS, Deseret Film Company, Salt Lake City, Utah, who is in New York on business with headquarters at the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, says that conditions in his part of the country are good, generally speaking.

"War has had very little effect on picture houses in my section," said Mr. Adams, "and as a matter of fact, the majority of them are making more money than ever before. There never was a better time than the present for road-show picture attractions which is a pretty good indication that conditions might be worse.

"We have been listening to the calamity howlers and their predictions that because of economic conditions the entire motion picture industry would be severely crimped, but we haven't paid any attention to them, and I haven't seen any of the predictions verified as yet.

"Some of the prophets warned me especially against handling road attractions while the war lasted and told me if I did I would lose everything I owned. I immediately turned around and booked W. H. Clune's big super-feature, "The Eyes of the World," which up to the present time has made three rounds of the inter-mountain states as a road attraction, and is still going strong. This is not only a splendid tribute to the picture itself, but will serve as an illustration of picture conditions out in our part of the country.

Novel Titles for "The Crucible of Life"

A special series of animated and symbolic titles have been prepared by Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sales representatives, of General Enterprises, Inc., for the seven-reel feature, "The Crucible of Life," adapted from the stage melodrama, "Fairfax," by Bartley Campbell, and featuring Grace Darmond, Jack Sherrill and Frank O'Connor.

The main title itself constitutes a novelty in that the lighted exterior of a motion picture house is shown with a line of patrons steadily moving at the box-office. As the electric display sign flashes in and out the title of the picture is clearly illuminated, followed in rapid succession by the names of Darmond, Sherrill, O'Connor and other leading members of the cast. The picture closes with a tableau, the central figure of which is the Goddess of Liberty surrounded by the fighting representatives of the Allied nations.

Foursquare Distributing "The Cast-Off"

"The Cast Off," a Thomas H. Ince production, featuring Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman, and distributed by the Foursquare Picture, is starting bookings with a rush, it is announced by the New York office. The Newark Theatre, New Jersey, has booked this feature for a week and this action was taken in advance of a trade showing. A trade showing will be given in the future. The production is in six reels. M. H. Hoffman in speaking of the merits of the production, said:

"I rarely believe in speaking highly of my own product, yet here is an instance that warrants making an exception. I can recommend 'The Cast Off' as a picture which will get money, and a lot of it. Nothing Mr. Thomas H. Ince has produced excels. 'The Cast Off' in those essentials that the public loves, and never has Miss Barriscale had a role more sympathetic than in this picture."

Jack Cohn Celebrates Anniversary

Jack Cohn, manager of the Universal Screen Magazine, announces that plans are complete to celebrate this week the anniversary of the magazine. From its inception the reel has proved popular and as a crowning achievement a contract was signed last week with the Rivoli and Rialto.

E. H. Culbertson, a magazine writer and editor, has been in direct charge of the task of selecting material submitted, although most of the features during the year have been suggested by Mr. Culbertson and prepared for the magazine under his direct personal supervision.

Olcott to Start Second Production

Sydney Olcott announces that he will commence soon on his second production for the independent market. The title for the production is not announced. Work will be commenced about the first of the month.

King-Bee Branch Opens Heavy Bookings

Nat. H. Spitzer announces that the Jersey office of the Bee-Hive exchange, which was recently opened in the Strand Theatre building, Newark, N. J., is doing a rushing business.

Milton J. Schwartz has been appointed resident manager of the Newark office and is rounding up all the "live wire" theatres in New Jersey on Billy West-King Bee comedies.

The following is a list of some of the representative theatres that have booked these comedies: Wm. Fox's Terminal theatre, for a seven-day run of each Billy West release; Lyric theatre, Paterson, three-day run every other week; Keeney's theatre, Newark, for two-day run every other week; Colonial theatre, Orange, two-day run every week; Spring theatre, West Hoboken, two-day run every other week; Regent theatre, Jersey City, two-day run every other week; Danforth theatre, Jersey City, two-day run every other week; and the Fox's Carlton, Newark; Strand, Jersey City; Comedy, Jersey City; Regent, Jersey City; Liberty, Irvington; Gaiety, Elizabeth; Franklin, Franklin Furnace; Palace, Newark; Playhause, Newark; Criterion, Newark; Ampere, Ampere, N. J.; Plaza, Newark; Auditorium, Jersey City; Hippodrome, Jersey City; Princess, Jersey City; Bishop's, Hoboken; Cortland, West Hoboken; Keystone, West Hoboken; Palace, Passaic; Palace, Union Hill; Grand Palace, Newark; Lyons Park, Morristown.

Ernest Shipman Confined by Sickness

Ernest Shipman, representative sales agent, although confined to his bed by threatened pneumonia, writes from his home that he is still doing business, and certifies to the fact by stating that last week he signed contracts which disposed of a considerable territory for the Shorty Hamilton Comedies, which he is exploiting on the independent market. The sales included the territories of New York, eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Minensota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Oklahoma. Mr. Shipman stated that he hoped to be back at his office next week.

Billy West's Latest Ready for Release

Billy West, in the latest King-Bee Comedy, titled "The Rogue," has arrived from the King-Bee studio at Hollywood, Cal., and is said to be one of Billy's best. The title-role is played by Billy West, and tells the story of a tramp who finds himself in high-brow society, through the fact that he is knocked down by a debutante's automobile. In this picture Miss Rosemary Theby, who appeared in the early releases of the King-Bee comedies, makes her reappearance. Babe Hardy and Leo White have important roles.

"The Rogue" will be released on February 15.

Harry Reichenbach's Banner Across Broadway Speaks for Itself, and William Parson's Feature Production Is Doing Likewise

"Tarzan of Apes" Stands 'Em Up

National Film Company of America's Jungle Picture Has Auspicious Opening at "Broadway" May Remain

THE opening of "Tarzan of the Apes," the National Film Company of America's special production, at the Broadway theatre, January 27, was one of the biggest and most successful openings ever attributed to a picture on Broadway. With about 50 per cent of the house given to the trade, it is estimated that thousands of people were turned away on the opening night. The day following the opening night, a double line extended from the box-office up Broadway for nearly a block, at the evening performance.

The press and the public were unanimous in the opinion that "Tarzan of the Apes" is one of the best and most entertaining pictures that have been shown on Broadway. Harry Reichenbach, who is handling the publicity and directing the run at the Broadway theatre had a novel display in the lobby of the Broadway theatre and he had the stage banked with tropical foliage, the whole resembling a jungle scene. Across Broadway from the theatre to the Continental Hotel, he had a large banner strung, presenting the title and announcement in huge letters. An orchestra of thirty pieces rendered special music.

The criticisms in the New York papers were unanimous in the opinion that "Tarzan of the Apes" is a daring spectacle and an unusually entertaining picture. The Evening Telegram referred to the picture as the most thrilling ever shown, and the New York World said it is nothing short of marvelous and the greatest film of the age.

It is announced by Mr. Reichenbach that the picture will remain at the Broadway until warm weather.

Mabel Normand Speaks Highly of "Mickey"

Mabel Normand, star of "Mickey," says that she does not remember a production in which she has worked which offered the opportunities for real comedy situations and human-interest touches as was offered by "Mickey." "I had one of the most wonderful times of my life," she said, "during the making of this picture, and I honestly believe that every one of the cast, including Mr. Sennett himself, who helped produce "Mickey," forgot about the outside world and put their whole heart and soul into this picture."

Sterling Gets Keen Kartoons

Sterling Pictures Corporation announces that it has purchased the world's rights to Keen Kartoons, a series of animated comedy subjects. The cartoons will be released in series, the first offering consisting of twelve in number, averaging a half reel in length. They will be disposed of on the independent market.

Leah Baird, James Morrison, Viola Palmer, Ed Mackay, Ben Hendrick and Harry Burkhart Are Presented in Ivan's "Life or Honor"

Ivan Announces Big Sale to Kohn

Practically Every Ivan Feature, Including Fourteen in Number Sold for Northwest Territory to Marion Kohn

IVAN FILM PRODUCTIONS, INC., closed last week, one of the biggest single sales recorded in some time in the Independent field. Marion Kohn, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco, one of the largest and most prominent film distributors in the Northwest, closed with Ivan Productions, Inc., for the territory covered by Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana for the following special features: "A Mother's Confession," "Faded Flower," "The Immortal Flame," "His Wives," "City of Illusion," "Concealed Truth," "Her Surrender," "The Girl Who Did Not Care," "Two Men and a Woman," "One Law for Both," "Babbling Tongues," "Married in Name Only." "Human Clay" and "Sins of Ambition."

The territory covered by the deal is practically new to Ivan product. Mr. Kohn said that he had watched the success which the M. and R. Feature Film Exchange had had and are having with Ivan product in California, Nevada and Arizona, and felt sure that he would have the same success in the new territory which he has just acquired.

In addition to an effective advertising campaign which Mr. Kohn will launch in connection with the exploitation of these features in his territory, the Ivan Productions announces that it will start a country-wide national campaign in the interest of all their productions. Dr. O. I. Lamberger, director of publicity for Ivan, said that close co-operation with the distributor-exhibitor would be carried out.

Dr. Lamberger announces that within the next few weeks he will start on a country-wide trip to be known as "the Ivan publicity trip," and that he will visit every large city and town from here to the Coast.

Branch Office for W. H. Hart Features

The Specialty Film Company of San Antonio, Texas, who have secured the rights to the two W. H. Productions Company Hart superfeature productions, "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska" and the twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett comedies, for Texas and Arkansas, have established a branch office at Dallas for the purpose of exploiting these productions.

W. G. Underwood, who will be in charge of the exchange, is one of the pioneer film men of the Southwest, having located in Texas about ten years ago. For the past three years Mr. Underwood has been manager of the Pathe exchange branch office at Dallas, which position he was obliged to give up last April on account of ill-health. He states that he sees vast possibilities and earning powers in these W. H. Productions Hart features, and though the pictures have not been released as yet, up to this time, they have over $10,000 worth of bona fide contracts on same.

L. C. Baxley, who is also associated with this enterprise, was also connected with the Pathe exchange at Dallas for a period of about two years, and is considered one of the best salesmen in this territory.

They have chosen the Matinee Bar of Dallas as a branch office, because it is one of the old landmarks, which is well known to film men and exhibitors who have visited Dallas in the last five years. It has been estimated by the various exchange managers of Dallas that during this period over $8,000,000 worth of film business has been transacted over this bar.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Sales Announced for "Public Defender"

Harry Raver's production of Mayer C. Goldman's story, "The Public Defender," with Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and Alma Hanlon featured, exploited on the independent market by the Renowned Pictures Corporation, has been sold for the major portion of the United States territory and Canada, according to the announcement of the Renowned Pictures.

Walter E. Greene bought New York State for his Modern Feature Film Company, Hiram Abrams secured the New England territory for the Boston Photoplay Company, Turner & Dahnken, franchise holders in the First National Exhibitors' circuit, San Francisco, have purchased California, Arizona and Nevada, the Doll-Van Company has secured Illinois and Indiana, Thomas Hamlin Associated Theatres, Minnesota, control Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and the Independent Film and Theatre Supply Company of Montreal have Canada.

Broadway Theatre Uses Acetylene

Broadway theatre, New York, is the one theatre on the one "White Way" that is living true to the name of the old street on these "Lightless Nights."

The Broadway theatre, of which Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is lessee, utilized three acetylene Milburn lights of 10,000 candle power and 15-inch reflectors to illuminate its front and the signs that were previously lighted by electricity. The lights were turned on the front and the signs like searchlights.

Exhibitors Make Orchestras a Feature

In order to increase the box-office receipts, the theatre managers of Edmonton, Alberta, have decided to make their orchestras a feature of the program. Special arrangements have been made for orchestral music and in their advertisements special notice will be made of the musical attraction.

"Watch Your Step"

By H. Winik—W. H. Productions

EVERY one connected with the trade —the exhibitors, renters, and all, are in danger. They must awaken to this fact and penetrate this 'smoke screen,' which is being unfurled around them. Their bread and butter is dependent upon its timely realization. Their position can be likened to that of the Allies during the past forty years. The Kaiser in his scheme for world domination, was in secrecy, constantly preparing for its seizure. His worldly philanthropies were the 'smoke screen' to cover his real designs and he, too, would have succeeded if his attempt had not been too premature. The early realization of the scheme to gain the domination of the film industry, will really keep the trade free from the shackles of its slavery.

"'Der Tag" will come if they willingly aid and support a consolidation of this kind, which will become so powerful and consequently a menace in the exercising of its power to the livelihood of the various dependents upon this industry. The Allies have been for years buying goods from Germany, and unconscious of the fact, have, with their own money, been preparing for their own death. No one realized that every dollar paid to Germany meant suicide.

"The trade should not contribute to its own execution. It is the little grains of sand that, when properly coordinated, become mammoth boulders. I have been here for several months, and have been watching things very carefully. I have had conversations with officers of the largest film concerns, and when these officers forgot themselves while talking, this is what they said: 'We have all the stars —all the best producers, the strongest organization, and we can raise all the money required. We will make the exhibitors pay big prices—they cannot live without us and our products. We figure on making several millions of dollars each year. In two years from now, we will own the best picture houses in every city in the United States of over 25,000 population. This is 'Der Tag,' which is in the process of being, although many do not realize it, foisted upon the various branches of the industry. Stars, actors, directors and all will feel the weight of the mailed fist. They will be units or cogs in the wheel of one gigantic combine. Their individual identity will be lost, and they will take what is offered them, or look for other means of making a living.

"Most of the stars to-day are stars—but among other stars. When you visit the zoo, and look into the monkey-house, all the monkeys practically look alike. You would have to put another type of animal among them, in order for it to be in a class by itself. The stars must carefully consider their own status and realize that when they are linked up with others of stellar worth, they no longer shine with the brilliancy with which they would were they segregated with concerns that are being run independently.

"To my mind, Charlie Chaplin to-day is the biggest drawing power in the world, because he does not allow himself to become tied up with other stars. No one makes a bigger fuss over Douglas Fairbanks than over Mary Pickford or Marguerite Clark. They are all the same because they all come from the same exchange, with the same kind of posters, slides, etc., showing the same trademark.

"Who ever heard that a picture that should only cost between $15,000.00 and $25,000.00, should bring $2,500.00 for a week's rental for one copy from one theatre in one town? It is the craziest thing I ever heard of. That very same picture brings in England in a theatre just as large as those here in the United States, and that charges the same price of admission, $125.00 for three days. Yes, a British exhibitor will pay $1,000.00 a week or more, provided the picture is worth it (the cost of production is always considered).

"Charlie Chaplin is the only star that means anything in foreign countries. Each production is booked on its merit, regardless of who appears in it, and until this condition exists in this country, the bankers, who are to a great extent, responsible for the extravagant wastage, are loaning money to irresponsible parties.

"If 'Der Tag' comes, the film industry will become an automatic proposition and before any one will be able to get a job, he will have to be a relation. There will be no advertising in trade papers, but about $4,000,000.00 a year will be spent in newspapers and magazines to the public, advertising one brand of productions, showing in theatres controlled by one organization."

"Direct Application Success"

Carle E. Carlton, President Crest Pictures Corporation, Pleased With Success of "A Grain of Dust"—Exhibitor Assured Fair Deal

CARLE E. CARLTON, president of Crest Pictures Corporation, whose latest offering on the independent market is the Ogden production, "A Grain of Dust," adapted from David Graham Phillips' work of the same name and featuring Lillian Walker, says that the direct applications for booking received by this organization exceed the prices placed upon this feature for some territories.

"We are not in business for a day, or for the purpose of marketing a single picture. This being so, we are more intent upon gaining the confidence of the trade than we are upon abnormal profits.

"As we see it, such confidence can be gained only in two ways: First, by making productions, which at all times will be worthy of such confidence. Secondly, by so marketing these productions that both the exhibitor and the state rights buyer will make the money to which they are entitled.

"That we have accomplished the first step, so far as 'The Grain of Dust' is concerned, would seem to be evidenced by the reception which has been accorded this feature. Nothing but unusual and self-evident box-office value could have produced such a response as we have received from our suggestion that exhibitors get in touch, direct with us, regarding this picture.

"The second step is not so easy of accomplishment. My thought is that it depends fundamentally upon the sincerity of purpose of those marketing a production. As both an exhibitor and a state rights buyer, in addition to a producer of pictures, I have a very profound respect for the problems and perplexities of my fellow exhibitors and state rights buyers.

"Definite arrangements have been completed with exhibitors all over the country for the showing of this picture at prices equitable to all concerned. Territories are being closed with the definite stipulation that these arrangements, both as to price and to first-run protection, will be honored by the buyer."

"A Grain of Dust" drew strong commendation from the reviewers.

Jester Comedies Meet with Favor

William Steiner, Jester Comedy Company, Reports Success with First Two Releases—All But South Sold

William Steiner, of the Jester Comedy Company, who is now on the Pacific Coast, giving trade showings of the first two Jester comedies, "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance," featuring Twede-Dan, sends in encouraging reports of conditions on the Coast. He writes that the cry of inactivity on the part of the film producers has evidently been started by a few of the newcomers in the field, who have gone to the Coast to make productions, and are having a hard time of it All the regulars are busy as bees and hard at work on productions for Spring release. He said:

"The exhibitors in this territory are in a flourishing state, and are using only the best that the market affords at the present date. The question of price does not enter into their business method at all. What they want is good productions. There is no room for the mediocre film plays on the Coast.

"I have given many showings of the Jester Comedies, and they have been well received. I have signed up for all territories from New York to the Coast, and will now make an invasion of the South. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to which of the two first releases of the Jester Comedies are the best box office attractions, "The Recruit" or "His Golden Romance." This is only natural, as the stories are foreign to each other. The idea of making the first two stories so diversified was to give the exchanges and the exhibitors an opportunity of seeing the full scope of the work that can be done by Twede-Dan, the star.

"Heretofore, it has practically always been customary for a comedian to adopt a certain personal, and carry that through all his stories with the result that the comedian soon becomes tiresome. In Twede-Dan I have a remarkable comedian who possesses not alone a real comedy strain, but who is possessed of dramatic ability. Both these forces are given full sway in "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance," and in the third of the series, "All Fur Her," Twede-Dan has been given a greater opportunity to show what he can do.

Grier and Berman Join U. S. Exhibitors

John K. Grier, who resigned recently as Canadian sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has joined the sales staff of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation and will supervise distribution in the Cleveland territory. Mr. Grier was formerly manager of the Triangle exchange in that city.

Another recent addition to the U. S. distributing organization is Charles Berman, well known in Canadian film circles. He will represent the Hall organization in Toronto, in which district the U. S. subjects are handled by the Superfeatures, Ltd., of which Charles Stevens is president. Branch offices are maintained in Montreal and St. Johns, the latter covering the maritime provinces.

Mr. Berman was interested formerly in the Regal Film Company and had the World franchise and also has handled in Canada Triangle and Goldwyn subjects. Mr. Berman will supervise the distribution of U. S. productions throughout the dominion.

Homer Howard Joins U. S. Exhibitors

Homer Howard, one of the best known film men in the upper New York State district, has resigned his position as Buffalo representative of Paramount to join the sales forces of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. He will be in charge of the Buffalo district, making his headquarters in the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange of that city. The productions to the exploitation of which Mr. Howard will henceforth devote his entire attention are "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those, Who Pay" and "The Belgian."

Max Cutler also has joined the U. S. organization and has been assigned by General Sales Manager Lynn S. Card to the Chicago office.

News Notes from Canada

Public Dislikes to Lose Its Comedy

The action of the Manitoba Government in prohibiting the comedy films in that province has caused much discussion and disapproval among not only the film industry, but the general public as well. The majority of the leading Canadian newspapers have announced the law, stating that it is thought the Evelyn Thaw production, "Redemption," led up to this action, the authorities stating that it was such plays and comedies that gave the public a frivolous viewpoint.

It takes a great deal of imagination to see what the comedy films have to do with a production such as Evelyn Thaw in "Redemption," the public thinks.

Pictures Used to Teach Trades

The Vocational Department of the Military Hospitals Commission has decided to use moving pictures in connection with the re-educational work of the returned soldiers. It is thought by this method the heroes will be better able to decide just what vocation they wish to follow in the future.

Woman Operator in Canada

Mrs. Art Pelletier, wife of the proprietor of the Sunset theatre, Estuary, Sask., is the first woman to receive a license from the Government to operate a moving picture machine in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Town of Ryley Installs Projection Machine

The first moving picture machine to be installed in a public school in Alberta has been formally inaugurated by H. P. Brown, of the University of Alberta extension department at Ryley, a small town on the Grand Trunk Pacific. The machine is of the Pathescope film type, representing an outlay of $175, which the Ryley school trustees have decided would be a good investment for their community. Mr. Brown gave a public demonstration of the picture apparatus, and complimented the town on its enterprise in making the new departure. It is intended to use the machine for community entertainments and general educational purposes.

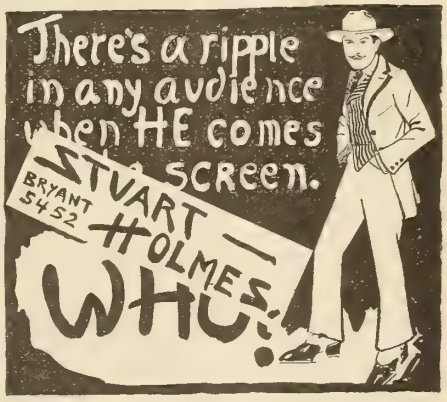
Canada Has Shipping Troubles

Exchanges Send Printed Explanations to the Exhibitors Regarding Conditions—Several Days Each Week Are Lost



EXCHANGE managers and exhibitors of Canada are trying to withhold, it developed last week, what might appear to be undue criticism of the men in power for their recent order curtailing the railway service.

So serious has this matter become, at least in the Maritime Provinces, that the exchanges have found it necessary to issue printed statements setting forth the real conditions of affairs. These are being sent to every exhibitor so that he may realize the difficulties which are likely to confront him in the future. The following are a few examples of what curtailment means to Eastern Canadian exchanges.

Formerly the Halifax service consisted of two trains per day, one leaving St. John, N. B., at noon and one at midnight. The latter was, undoubtedly, the most valuable from a business point of view as it allowed film which had been used in St. John that day to be shipped to Halifax the same evening. This would arrive the next morning allowing ample time for examination before being shown at the matinee. The removal of this train from the service means that all film now has to be shipped at noon of the day previous to screening, and owing to the fact that the night train leaving Halifax for St. John has also been taken off, another day is lost in returning it.

In certain cases as many as four days per week are lost transferring the film from one place to another. The loss of the train running north to Edmunston is also causing endless confusion, and the cutting down of the Shore Line service from six to three days per week seems to be the last straw. However, bad as things are they might be worse, and if the exhibitors will faithfully carry out the instructions of the exchanges they may be reasonably sure of getting their shows in good time.

Usually, if a film is shipped to an out-of-the-way place, the manager of the theatre is requested to see that it is forwarded to another exhibitor in that territory, instead of being reshipped to the exchange. Owing to the fact that many, through carelessness or thoughtlessness, have ignored this request many theatres have had to remain dark for at least a day. The unfortunate manager does not realize what he is up against until he sends to the station for his film, only to find that it has not arrived. His advertising, if he has done any, is absolutely wasted, and he is confronted with the task of making explanations to a disappointed public. The exchange, on receipt of his wire immediately ships a substitute show, and, by the irony of fate, the manager who was the cause of the trouble is likely to find himself without his advertised film for the coming week, it having been sent to appease the wrath of the exhibitor whose house through his carelessness, had been dark.

EASTERN CANADA BRIEFS

I. Sourkes, late manager for the Regal Film Company in St. John, N. B., has returned to Montreal to take up his duties as manager of the home office.

H. H. McArthur, who has taken Mr. Sourke's place in St. John, is one of the oldest exchange managers in experience, yet one of the youngest in years. In 1909 he became manager for the Kinetograph Company, in this city, then he transferred to the Kliene Optical Company, which was later merged with the General Film.

The Regal Film Company handles Triangle, Goldwyn, Paralta, World and Specials such as "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "The Freedom of the World," "Redemption" and "The Spoilers." All of these films are reported to be doing good business.

J. Leverman, local manager for the Fox exchange, is making a tour of the South Shore. He sends word that Dustin Farnum, George Walsh and Virginia Pearson are the best drawing cards in that district. The Casino, Halifax, played "The Two Little Imps" for the second time, and say they did remarkably well with it on its second showing.

The Metro Corporation is handling Hoffman's Foursquare Pictures, National Exhibitors' Circuit, U. S. A. Circuit, and the serial, "The Eagle's Eye." They report solid bookings on all the Chaplins and very good business on all the Petrova pictures.

Manager Margetts of the Universal has been successful in placing his two new serials in the largest houses.

The Mutual Film Company supplies the program for St. John's newest theatre, the Nickel. As its name implies the charge is only a five-cent piece, and while, of course the pictures shown are not the latest productions, they are excellent entertainment for the small sum charged.

Reginald March of the Specialty Film Company has just returned from a trip to Charlotte county and reports business poor in Grand Falls and Perth. Mr. March has placed "The Hidden Hand" in the Empress, Unique and Star theatres, St. John. It is also being shown in Halifax, Grand Falls and Perth. The Vogue theatre, Woodstock, the St. Stephen theatre and the theatre at McAdam Junction have all booked Pathe Plays.

The Imperial theatre, St. John, which is built on the plan of Keith's Palace theatre on Broadway, is showing all the Artcraft-Paramount and Select Pictures besides weeklies and comedies.

The Lyric theatre, owned by F. G. Spencer, and managed by S. Hurley, has been showing "The Whip." All who have seen it consider it a very fine production. During the coming week Herbert Brenon's picture, "The Lone Wolf," is to be shown. Mr. Spencer owns several theatres in the Maritime Pronvinces and all are reported to be doing good business.

Mrs. Davidson, one of the very few women exhibitors in this part of the country, says that business in her town, Moncton, is flourishing. She has booked Chaplin first and second run, Madame Petrova first run and the Mack Sennett comedies.

Business in Halifax is reported to be better than it was before the disaster. The Empire opened January 23 to good houses. Mr. Acker is having the floor of his theatre rebuilt, the roof raised, and new chairs installed. The King Edward is also being rebuilt and will be ready for business shortly.

Messrs. Cragg and Fraser have opened a very up-to-date little house in Bridgewater, and have named it the Empire. The seating capacity is 500. The opening bill was Pathe's "Les Miserables" and on the first night over 200 were turned away. Mr. Walford's house, the Orpheum, reports excellent business.

Laemmle Receives Request from Hoover

Herbert C. Hoover, chairman of the United States Food Administration, has enlisted the aid of the motion picture industry in his nation-wide campaign, which has for its purpose the driving home to the minds of the American people the absolute necessity of food conservation.

Carl Laemmle, president and director general of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was among the film heads to receive a request for co-operation from the Food Administrator.

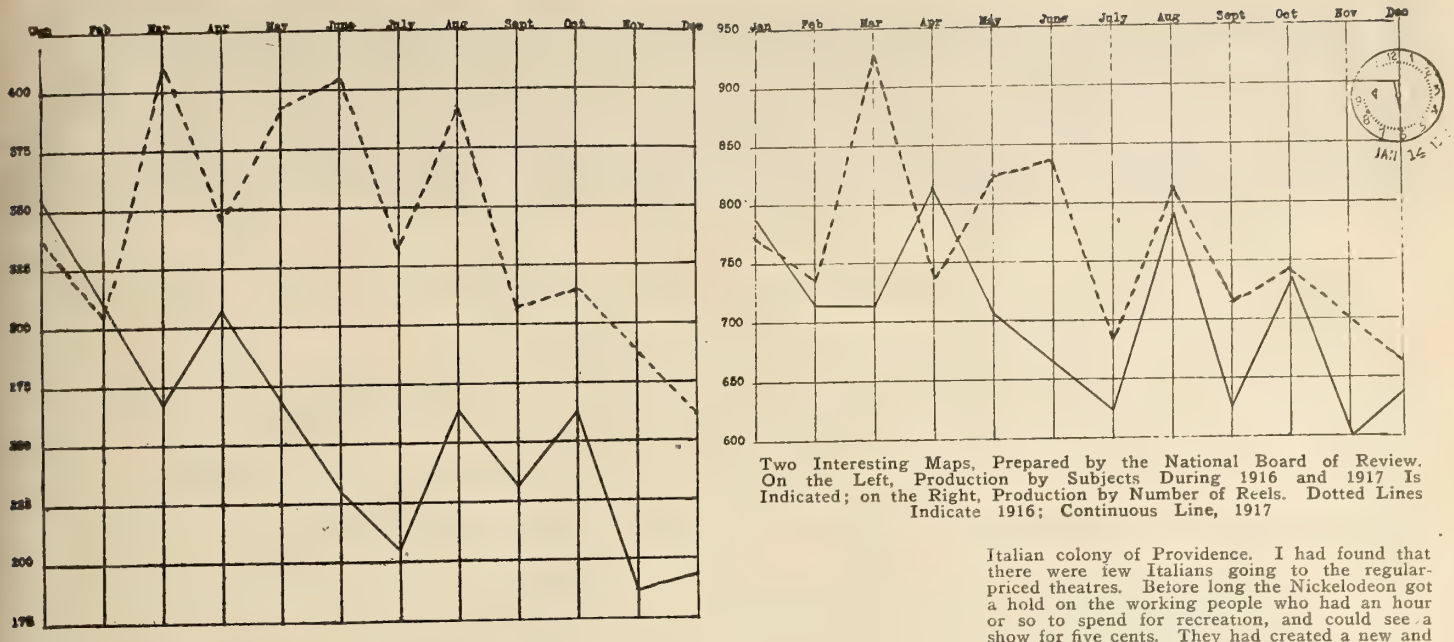
Conservation trailers will be run on each program picture, it is said.

Irwin Notes War Reaction in Canada

THE war reaction of the motion picture industry in England, which set a high-water mark for business, has been reflected in Canada, according to a report received last week by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization.

E. Auger, Eastern division manager for the Vitagraph organization, returned from a tour of the Eastern Canadian Provinces and reported to Mr. Irwin that conditions in the Dominion were most encouraging.

"Despite one of the severest winters the country ever has known," said Mr. Irwin, "Mr. Auger found that the theatres in Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and other places are doing better now than for a long time past. Vitagraph, in fact, is handling a larger amount of business in this territory than at any time in its history, and this we take as a fair example of general conditions across our northern border."



This latter statement is considered especially significant, in view of the statement issued recently by Mr. Irwin, declaring that Vitagraph was not in any plan for amalgamation of exchanges in Canada and that it would continue to operate individually. At the time, he stated that the company's business in the Dominion was satisfactory.

An interesting part of the information brought to Mr. Irwin by his Eastern manager was in relation to stricken Halifax. Although the city, which was blown to bits, figuratively, a few weeks ago by the explosion of the French munitions ship, has only begun to rebuild, motion picture houses are open and are doing a splendid business.

"Bringing Back Vaudeville"

Thomas D. Soriero, of Boston and Lowell, Makes the Assertion in Interview—Says Prices Cannot Advance

"PRODUCERS and exchanges are bringing back vaudeville at popular prices," declared Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park Theatre in Boston, and general manager of the Strand in Lowell, Mass., last week in an interview with a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Manager Soriero bases his claim on his opinion that the exhibitor cannot raise his prices higher and make money, and on his belief that the public in demanding entertainment at popular prices will drive the exhibitors from motion pictures to vaudeville.

"Change and progress," said Manager Soriero, "are everything in the motion picture business. Producers and exchanges are at present acting under the incentive of the picture public, and are asking prices for pictures that are going to drive, and are driving, progressive managers into vaudeville.

"What is the reason? The picture houses have taught the public the popular prices, and exchange managers who would advise the moving picture house managers to raise their prices without knowing the conditions that exist for pictures in their particular field, are not only showing a gross injustice to the theatres, but, on the whole, motion picture industry. The reason is obvious. The exhibitor cannot raise his prices any higher and make money. Why? Because the high price of films has been the ruination of a great many houses in small towns.

"With the exchange manager asking a thousand dollars for certain pictures in certain cities, there is only one thing to do for the manager in a small house, and that is to give a big vaudeville show. He sees that it would be easier for him to give a big vaudeville show for less money than he pays for one picture, and at the same time he gives the patrons their money's worth.

"But let me go back some years in the picture business. Though still a young manager measured by years of service, I may be said to have lived a life in the picture industry as long as many a veteran. Fourteen years ago when vaudeville was all the rage, and any city of any importance had big time vaudeville, the prices were 10, 20 and 30 cents for admissions. In my experience from the time when I sold tickets up to the present time, as manager of New England's leading motion picture house, the Park theatre, Boston, it has been proven to me that this is the history of the motion picture industry. In my early days as ticket seller, I was quick to observe that the only class of people going to the high-class vaudeville houses and theatres were the English-speaking people, while the large number of foreigners were taking their recreation elsewhere. After seeing the effects of the one-reel pictures that usually closed the show at vaudeville houses, I noticed that it would not be long before this would be the class of entertainment sought by the uneducated as well as the more intellectual public. It was the general talk at that time that there were too many theatres in the country for the number of people that attended them. That was true in a sense, there were too many theatres of one kind, but I notice that the moving pictures would eventually create a theatregoing public among the foreign-born public as well as our own citizens.

Thomas D. Soriero, Manager of the Park Theatre in Boston

"It was then that I conceived the idea of opening a nickelodeon, known as 'The Nickel,' to supply entertainment by moving pictures for the Italian colony of Providence. I had found that there were few Italians going to the regular-priced theatres. Before long the Nickelodeon got a hold on the working people who had an hour or so to spend for recreation, and could see a show for five cents. They had created a new and distinctive class of theatregoers that was steadily growing. Then suddenly there sprung into life the ten-cent motion picture house, which cut into the first-class houses throughout the country. Those were the days when every city of forty thousand or more inhabitants had a big time vaudeville house at prices 10, 20 and 30 cents. The vaudeville supplied by the ten-cent houses was not so bad, but that it pleased the masses, and in this way cut into the big time houses.

"At that period there were twelve booking offices in Boston to take care of the vaudeville houses, and supply them with acts. The small time vaudeville houses, giving what was known as bargain shows, soon sprung up overnight like mushrooms in every town of any size. Soon the business man began to go to these amusements to spend an hour or a half hour, for it cost him only ten cents.

"Then came into existence the two, three and five-reel pictures, which soon ousted the cheap ten-cent vaudeville, and gradually the prices were raised to the present day maximum of thirty-five cents, and then to the pictures were added the high-class orchestra and soloists, such as we have at the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand theatre, Lowell. In the meantime the high-class picture houses cut into the vaudeville houses, and the management of the vaudeville houses had to meet the moving picture' competition by putting five-reel pictures with the vaudeville, a thing which exists at the present time.

"Producers should also make the pictures to fit the pocketbook of the exhibitors of the entire United States, and not the Strand and Rialto of New York alone. If the quality and make of the picture is for the entire United States, the picture is bound to go big in New York as well, while if the picture is made for New York alone, it will not fit the whole country. Another thing, the exchanges should cater to the motion picture houses more than to the vaudeville houses, as it is the motion picture houses that pay the prices for pictures and need the pictures, while the vaudeville houses can depend on their vaudeville to draw the patrons.

"Up to the present time the theatres have received nothing more than the pictures from the exchanges. I would suggest that each exchange open a theatre department to consist of capable theatre men, where the exhibitor can go for advice on the running of his pictures. This department could have representatives who could be sent to various theatres throughout the territory, and there to remain for a certain time to help the theatre maanger in the projection of his show. This would be a big boom to the theatres, and in this way it would be a bigger boom to the exchanges themselves. This could be done by having thorough show men and clever business men, for both qualities are essential, to go when needed, give their good advice and lend their help to the exhibitor. Then the exhibitor would look with confidence to the exchange and through this mutual help, both theatre and exchange would have a rapid increase of business."

"The Forbidden Path"

(Fox—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

INNOCENT, lured, betrayed, deserted, avenged—so travels Theda Bara in her latest Fox Standard picture, "The Forbidden Path." Miss Bara plays her part with feeling in all its many phases. Her greatest moments are as the mother, who persists on clinging to the faint hope that her baby's father will do justice by her, and as the avenger, a woman fallen lower than the level of the streets. Always sincere and expressing her various emotions clearly, Miss Bara contributes yet another role of outstanding force to the long list held in awe by her numerous admirers.

"The Forbidden Path," written by E. Lloyd Sheldon, is more or less conventional in its story, but its kind has long since been acclaimed as one of the foremost of the heart interest type, one of the foremost in offering situations dramatically strong in composition. Its originality lies in its ending, which is far removed from the customary finale in which the man's sins are forgiven by the wronged lady. When the opportunity comes, Mary Lynde, the betrayed, avenges herself on the man with a heavy hand. She bleeds him for every cent of money in his possession and even forces him to steal. And then on the announced day of his marriage to another woman, she denounces him before the church, brands him as a viper and a crook, and so the picture ends.

Certainly this conclusion has little, if anything, in common with others. And far from leaving an unpleasant taste in the mouth, it leaves an impression of outraged virtue vindicated completely. The scenario of "The Forbidden Path" was handled in very good style, the utmost in suspense and force being derived from the various situations. J. Gordon Edwards has presented it in the style generally accepted as being suitable to the star in all essentials, and the photographic work of John W. Boyle calls for only words of praise.

Hugh Thompson has the thankless role of the betrayer of innocence, and plays it correctly, seldom working on the sympathies, yet making it realistic enough. Sidney Mason, cast as the artist innocently responsible for all the trouble, gives a natural performance, while Walter Law, Wynne Hope Allen and Florence Martin take the other roles of importance.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Lynde (Theda Bara) is induced to pose as a Madonna by Felix Benavente (Sidney Mason), who is commissioned to do the painting for a church. Robert Sinclair (Hugh Thompson), the artist's friend, meets Mary and is immediately set on having her. He goes about his purpose by keeping the girl out until a late hour. When she returns at midnight her father (Walter Law) drives her from his home. She is forced to seek Sinclair for protection. With no thought of marrying Mary he lives with her in his mountain lodge until tired of her. When her child is born, Mary believes he will return, but he angrily tells her he will have nothing to do with her. She makes her way to the city with her baby and collapses from fatigue on the doorstep of a disorderly house. She is taken in and the child is found dead. Two years later she is sipping the dregs of life in a miserable quarter of the city. Sinclair prepares to marry Barbara Reynolds (Florence Martin). Felix is commissioned to do another portrait representing the "End of the Forbidden Path." Seeking for a suitable model he finds Mary again. While posing she meets Sinclair again and, threatening to reveal her past to Barbara, she secures large sums of money from him—even forces him to steal from his bank. Relenting at the suggestion of Felix, for a time, she soon becomes hardened again when Sinclair makes an attempt on her life. She gives him the choice of accepting her in marriage or of going to prison for his theft. He choses the former course, but at the altar Mary interrupts the ceremony and discloses his entire past in a passionate speech to the congregation.

Alphonse Either, Lisle Leigh and Reba Byrne complete the cast.

"The Other Man"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

HARRY MOREY does some real character work in his latest picture for Vitagraph and with the assistance of a good supporting cast creates for screen presentation a faithful picture of the author, Rex Taylor's work, "The Other Man." Paul Scardon's good direction is evident throughout the run of the five reels and his handling of the diversified scenes called for by the script is punctuated by careful detailed work. Mr. Morey's work calls for superlatives in giving a criticism. From one extreme of character work to the other he goes with an ease of self assurance and never once misses fire on detail or atmosphere of the part he is interpreting.

"The Other Man" can be booked as a headliner on any program. The plot holds; the suspense is well sustained to the climax and there is a sprinkling of mystery scattered through the story that adds a good percentage toward entertaining value. The author has given his story a very human touch, furnishing this quality in goodly quantity to the character of Martin West, one of the two roles presented by Mr. Morey. There are no unnecessary preliminary steps taken in the introduction. The principal character is planted, the support is introduced in logical order and the action follows the natural course of events, excepting in one or two places where the author has underestimated the intelligence of an average audience by straining a point in order to sustain his plot. An example of this looms up in the scenes which depict Martin West again in the role of a noted physician after he had met Dorothy in the tenement districts. It would seem probable that West's, alias Stedman, notoriety as a surgeon would have reached her ears and that she would have put two and two together.

A prominent feature of this production is the exceptionally strong cast, all members of which, from principals to minors, give excellent performances. Grace Darmond, in chief support opposite Mr. Morey, shines in the role of Dorothy Harmon. Florence Deshon, although not prominently casted gives a credible performance. Frank Norcross puts over a character part with a punch. Jessie Stevens, Stanley Walpole and Mrs. Chapin are seen to fine advantage.

John Stedman (Harry Morey), a noted surgeon, returns unexpectedly to his home and finds his wife and a supposed friend together. He loses all desire to follow his profession and a year later finds him a wreck, professionally. He is living as Martin West in a cheap tenement section. While here he meets Dorothy Harmon (Grace Darmond), a society girl who has come to the slums to live for a month on a wager of $10,000 that she can not make her own way in the slums for this length of time without money.

West and she become friends. West has met the political boss of his ward (Frank Norcross) and the boss, learning that West was once a surgeon, hired him as his personal body guard, explaining that a certain gang seeks his life. The end of the month comes and Dorothy collects the wager, $10,000. She secretly sends the amount to her lawyer, who notifies West that the sum has been awarded to him by a certain society. With this money West builds up a practice and once again is at the height of his profession, and is again known as Dr. Stedman.

He has left the tenement district and letters sent to him by Dorothy do not reach him. Dorothy's aunt is taken suddenly ill and Dr. Stedman is sent for to perform an operation. When he arrives, Dorothy is present. He recognizes her but she fails to recognize him because of his beard. He proposes to Dorothy but she tells him she loves another and mentions the name of West. Dr. Stedman realizes that her affection for his former self had been true, shaves his beard and returns to the slums where he meets Dorothy, who has gone there for the same purpose. The Boss, who has become an alderman, marries them.

"Tarzan of the Apes"

(National Film Corporation—Eight Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

HERALDED by a monster banner stretched over Broadway and extensively and novelly advertised in divers other ways, "Tarzan of the Apes" opened to a packed house at the Broadway theatre a week ago Sunday and has been consistently gratifying the hearts of its sponsors by "turning 'em away" ever since. It is probably the greatest novelty in the fiscal year or whatever one prefers to call the last twelve months of motion picture production. In its original form with its various startling episodes and colorful word pictures by Edgar Rice Burroughs, "Tarzan of the Apes" really created one of those "sensations" which producers so often claim as resulting from their offering but which so seldom occur at all. And in its unusualness, its plot is widely different in conception from anything except Kipling's "Jungle Books." "Tarzan" is of more than the "average interest" of the customary feature. Its distinctiveness and unconventionality make it full worthy its eight reels, its special exploitation and the prominence it will be accorded in the film mart.

As is generally known, the story of "Tarzan" deals with a white baby, stolen from his parents by a band of apes and brought up in the jungle with only these hairy animals as companions until he becomes a man. So naturally the picture's realism depends on the realism of the jungle scenes in which the animals partake and the degree of the primitive with which the players of Tarzan temper their performances. Regarding the first it may be said that the apes (in all but on instance humans skilfully covered with skins) are well in the atmosphere of the jungle, save for a few closeups. And the jungle stuff, by the way, which includes mazes of tangled underbrush, trees shooting off parallel to the earth and varieties of tropical vegetation is remarkable to the point of being amazing. Particularly is the photographic work of the highest order in these scenes adding greatly to their effectiveness. As for Tarzan himself, Elmo Lincoln, who portrays him as a man is of a fine physique and obviously went about interpreting the role with understanding. He is never sophisticated; always of the jungle, stopping in wonderment when little by little he learns that a huge gulf separates him from his friends the apes and standing in awe at first sight of a woman of his own unknown race. The manner in which he swings through the jungle on the limber vines and leaps nimbly from tree to tree is the personification of ease, finally completing the illusion that Tarzan never wore shoes, B. V. D.'s or starched laundry. Young Mr. Gordon Griffith in the same role at an earlier stage in life plays cleverly and sincerely. His makeup however varies in shade with certain scenes.

It is Tarzan's adventures that are of chief interest. As the boy his time is occupied solely with the apes until the lost sailor Binns finds him and teaches him the rudiments of the English language. His first realization that he is other than an ape comes when he glances in the pool with one of the animals and notes the contrast. His discovery of the hut of his parents, how he uses a knife on the enemy of his foster-mother, the gorilla, his nimble escape from a lion; these and various other episodes of Tarzan's youth are brought out with a fascination that is quite irresistible. Grown to manhood, his life consists of fighting the blacks, the enemies of the apes, and learning the ways of the English when a long delayed rescue party comes in search of him. All this combined with the parallel story of the Greystokes in England, which is usually played in comedy and always lightly, forms a two-hour show of fine entertainment.

Enid Markey scores attractively as the English girl and George French gives a fine characterization of the old sailor, Binns. True Boardman, Kathleen Kirkham, Thomas Jefferson, Bessie Toner, Jack Wilson and Colin Kenny, the last-named playing the fop, Lord Greystone, contribute to the general good of "Tarzan." Great credit is due Scott Sidney for his direction, a piece of work which, it is plain to see, was neither ordinary nor easy. Isidor Bernstein cut and edited it commendably.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cast on a jungle isle by mutinous sailors, Lord Greystoke (True Boardman) and his wife (Kathleen Kirkham) revert to the primitive mode of living. With the birth of Tarzan, Lady Greystoke dies and soon after the apes in a body attack Greystoke and carry off his child to replace a dead ape baby. So Tarzan is reared by the apes and only meets a white man when Binns (George French), one of the sailors, escapes from the slave-traders and takes refuge in the Greystokes' hut. But Tarzan only learns to know him slightly as he is soon forced to flee from the slave-hunters, while Tarzan easily evades them by nestling in the tree tops. In the meantime in England, Lord Greystoke's brother, a worthless fellow, married to a bar maid, has assumed his title. Young Greystoke (Colin Kenny) grows to be a worthless young man. Binns, returning to England, tells his story to Lady Greystoke and she immediately has him thrown into an insane asylum. So Tarzan grows to manhood before any other white man reaches the isle. When finally a searching party comes in, which is Jane Porter (Enid Markey), he rescues her from attacks by a lion and a lustful negro and learns from her what is expected of him as a member of his race.

"Loaded Dice"

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THAT remarkable portrayer of "iron men," Frank Keenan, herewith makes his debut on the Pathe program in a story from which he benefits and which benefits by his personality. He is seen as a man defiant of all religion save the creed of self and the greed of power. "There is no God," he says at first, but in the end when, twice murderer, he lies abed counting his last minutes on earth a vision comes to him and dying he cries "There is a God." This character, Richard Gordon, the central figure of Ellery H. Clark's novel of the same name, so scheming, so domineering, is brought into wonderful being by Mr. Keenan. His is a characterization not to be forgotten at the door of the theatre. It is wicked, relentless and holds one in a fascinating grip of suspense from first to last.

There is perhaps no other actor on the screen today who has more poise, less affectation than Mr. Keenan. At any rate he makes Richard Gordon a real personality, never for the moment a mere character impersonated. The simple ease with which Mr. Keenan executes a walk across a set is indicative of the air of "at-homeness" with which he endows his part. And yet at the same time he never allows Richard Gordon to drop into the background. In fact, it is that combination of abilities so easily yet inadequately described by the single word "personality" which makes Mr. Keenan the actor that he is.

Pathe chose well in "Loaded Dice" for his first vehicle. While a mere outline of the story will sound grewsome, its morale is always clearly kept in view and prevents it from having this effect. As for the story, it is most entertainingly told in all its phases. The network of traps laid for Harry Palmer resulting in Gordon's triumph, the calm manner with which he disposes of Palmer and Ann Holten, his financial and political success followed by his doom, are all handled with skill, both by continuity writer and director. There are novel touches throughout that bespeak of the handling of a real artist. Neither of the murders is actually shown. Both are suggested in subtle fashion, led up to with a wonderful degree of suspense and their occurrence made perfectly clear. But they are not shown! There are few directors, indeed, who would cut out even the firing of the gun or the gripping of the hands!

Florence (once Billie) Billings, is a beautiful Rose Ashton, ever swayed by Gordon. Guy Coombs plays Harry Palmer with ability and a supporting cast which includes a wonderful array of types that are such in every sense of the word contributes much to the success of Mr. Keenan and "Loaded Dice." Once more it is a fine picture, considerably above the average so it seems to us, whatever the average is, fitting indeed to follow "Innocent" as the second of the Pathe star series and more than likely to bring increased business to the house exhibiting it.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Richard Gordon (Frank Keenan) holds everything on earth as a gamble—and he plays with loaded dice. His theory of life is to win at all costs and he refuses to believe in a God or a hereafter. His partner in various enterprises is Rose Ashton (Florence Billings), whom he promises to marry. It is she who discovers that there is to be a corner on food and Gordon demands to be let in on it. To do so he must have a hundred thousand dollars. With Rose and a disreputable character actress he secures this money from Harry Palmer (Guy Coombs) by working the old game of the young lady compromised. So financial success is his but through an old flame of Gordon's, Palmer discovers the trick and confronts Gordon with the knowledge of it. Palmer never lives to tell the world of it and neither does the old flame. But Gordon was careless in his second murder. A gentleman crook saw him and it is he who, when Gordon is elected governor, rises to blacken his happiness. But determined Gordon plans to do away with him also. This time he is unsuccessful. In the fracas he is wounded himself and his case is pronounced hopeless. Though discarded, Rose comes to his side and before he dies realizes he has seen that there is a God.

"The Naulahka"

(Pathe Play—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

PROBABLY the greatest compliment that can be given "The Naulahka" is that it is still Kipling. This regarding its artistic side, a side which covers many of its merits. And this also regarding its commercial side, for has not Kipling thrilled and entertained the world by his work with the pen, a pen more colorful than many an artist's brush?

"The Naulahka" is one reel longer than the average feature and proportionately greater. Greater in its story which sets two persons from Colorado, U. S. A., down in India for a startling series of adventures, greater in production, which is elaborate, rich and realistic, and greater in cast which includes besides a selection of popular and capable screen performers, Doraldina, a famous Hawaiian dancer of New York, who could easily be a famous vampire throughout the country if she chose to stick to the picture studio.

George B. Seitz made the adaptation from the Kipling story. His is an unusually fine piece of work in that aside from performing the difficult task of setting down the story forcefully and clearly, he has brought out the spirit of the original work to a wonderful degree. His work, however, might all have gone for naught had not Director George Fitzmaurice finished it off with a production complete in every detail and fairly oozing atmosphere. For Mr. Fitzmaurice knows his India every bit as well as Mr. Kipling, else how the correct settings, the fidelity of detail and the retaining of the atmosphere? A question which contains its own answer.

Watching "The Naulahka" unfold one never keeps track of the six reels—one doesn't know there are six reels to it. It seems to pass more rapidly than the ordinary five-reeler—and it is a deal more entertaining. For Colorado and India create a weird combination. A breezy American youth is a sluggish, unfriendly India is something several leagues distant from the beaten path. And his adventures with the Maharajah and his plotting favorite truly supply thrill upon three.

But further elaboration on the many points of interest of "The Naulahka" is left to the picture to accomplish itself. It is the only other medium eloquent enough to speak for itself aside from the original work. It is a great picture and will show as "big" and "extra" in the box-office reports unless the vision of the present writer has become altogether distorted.

Doraldina, sensuous, gleaming, does full justice to the role of the Maharajah's favorite and dances expertly two or three times. Antonio Moreno, handsome and likable, is Nick Tarvin from Colorado, and Helene Chadwick is something more than the usual becurled and besoulful eyed heroine. Warren Oland—enough said—is the wicked Maharajah. J. H. Gilmour, Mary Alden and Edna Hunter take to their allotted roles skilfully.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nick Tarvin (Antonio Moreno), native of Topaz, Col., looks forward to the day when President Mutrie (J. H. Gilmour) will put the Three C's railroad through the town. The rivalry between Topaz and the adjoining town is at its height when Nick meets Mrs. Mutrie (Edna Hunter). This lady loves jewels—loves particularly the Naulahka, an invaluable girdle of gems possessed by the Maharajah (Warner Oland), a powerful Prince of India. When Nick, full of ambitious hopes, volunteers to get it for her providing she sway her husband to run the railroad through Topaz, she laughingly consents and off he goes to India, arriving there just before Kate Sheriff (Helene Chadwick), a girl also from Topaz. Kate had left Topaz and Nick in anger. She wanted to teach the heathen Indians modern medicine and had balked when her father and Nick had interfered. And so she doesn't obviously welcome the sight of Nick.

The Maharajah has two sons, one by his gypsy favorite (Doraldina), another by his first wife (Mary Alden), this latter one the rightful heir to his domain. The gypsy, ambitious for her boy, plans to dispose of the rightful heir in the quicksands but Nick comes to the rescue. By so doing he gains the good graces of the Maharajah. The gypsy tries to get rid of Nick by giving him a false clue to obtain the Naulahka, but Nick escapes from the trap—a trap of snakes and crocodiles. Kate finds the natives unwilling to learn her teaching and gradually warms toward Nick. The real heir of the Maharajah is taken sick after his three-day wedding ceremony and Kate saves his life. In the meantime the gypsy favorite, having failed in an attempt on the life of Nick, is forced to give him the Naulahka, lest he tell the Maharajah of her visit to him. So because she has surrendered the famous jewels she is sentenced to die by the Maharajah. Kate, however, persuades Nick to return the girdle with the provision that the gypsy cease her plotting.

And so the two Americans return to their native land, there to discover that Mutrie had favored Topaz for the railroad all the while.

"The Fighting Grin"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

FRANKLYN FARNUM'S late work for Bluebird falls far short of being the best or as-good-as the average work of his before the camera. "The Fighting Grin" is a burlesque rather than a comedy-drama. Its construction is of the weakest material and its plot is supported by incidents and events without sustaining substance.

Inconsistencies run riot throughout the picture. It is overdone both in creation and in the presentment of the roles. Mr. Farnum is handicapped from the start by a poorly written script. The presentation incites indifference in an audience. The burlesque is carried to extremes when the straight comedy could and should be expected. "The Fighting Grin" requires something beside a cast of players to put it over. A personality stronger than Mr. Farnum's would find difficulty in overcoming the shortcomings in the script.

Edith Johnson, playing opposite Mr. Farnum, presents a pretty picture and carries her part well. J. Morris Foster, Charles H. Mailes and Fred Montague are other members of the supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Margie Meredith (Edith Johnson) and Billy Kennedy (Franklyn Farnum) are in love but their fathers are enemies and refuse to permit their offsprings to associate with each other. Billy's father is the more lenient of the two and believes it would be a good joke to encourage his son to seek the company of Margie, to spite his enemy, her father. Billy wins at the tennis tournament and becomes the favorite. He sees Margie waiting in Harold De Vanderveer's (J. Morris Foster) car and persuades her to elope with him. He takes Harold's car and they start for the justice of the peace. Margie's father and Harold discover them and follow in Billy's car which he had left. They arrive in time to prevent Billy marrying Margie. Billy's father had bet him $10,000 that he could not win Margie. The next day Billy and Margie try again and start for the West, where their fathers owned ranches. Margie's father learns of their plans and has Billy transferred to a freight car and Margie rides on alone to the ranch. Billy emerges in the dress of a tramp and meeting a minister, compels him to give him his clothes after Billy has appropriated the outfit of a bandit and hold-up man. He takes the minister to a near-by cabin and makes him a prisoner. He makes the bandit put on the garb of the minister.

He then sets out to find Margie. In the meantime the bandit in the minister's clothes has performed the ceremony which made Harold and Margie man and wife. Billy finds Margie shortly after the ceremony has been performed and takes her away to the minister he has imprisoned and they are made man and wife when they explain to Margie's father that the "minister" who had performed the ceremony making Harold and Margie man and wife was a bandit and not a minister.

"Lest We Forget"

(Metro Special—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS is a picture of the war and includes flashes of the invasion of France by the German hordes, the thrilling adventures of a Frenchwoman in the hands of the enemy and a reproduction of the sinking of the Lusitania, a spectacular series of scenes. Rita Jolivet, herself a survivor of the ill-fated vessel, is the heroine of the adventures. From the moment of the outbreak of the European war until after the sinking of the huge vessel, her life, if we may judge by "Lest We Forget," was a dramatic series of incidents, startling and terrible to the person who sits by and watches in his theatre chair. It serves to bring the war close to our own shores and gives some insight into the struggle in Europe as it has been waged for over three years.

The personal story which brings the adventures together supplied by Leonce Perret, who also directed, concerns that triangle ever popular in war pictures. Rita Jolivet is a Frenchwoman, Harry Winslow, an American hero, serves in the ranks of Joffre's army, and the villain is a German spy, masking as the friend of Rita and Harry, though in realty scheming to secure the girl for himself with an ardor equal to that with which he serves his government. The doings of these three characters would be of considerably greater interest were they separated from each other and joined, and re-edited with more attention paid to continuity of action.

Really it is unfair to judge "Lest We Forget" in its present state, for the work of the editor has often spoiled a dramatic situation. For instance, the action leading up to the sinking of the Lusitania is remarkable for its sustained interest and increasing suspense. The unsuspecting passengers are flashed, together with long shots of the speeding vessel, interior views of the submarine, showing the captain aiming the torpedo. This string of scenes goes its round until one is all ready for the firing of the torpedo, when—cut, went the editor's scissors and there is intruded a number of feet of trench action, with the hero the central figure. It is obviously wrong to break into the fine introduction to a climax and show something else. It snaps the interest in half. In the same way, when the Baron breaks into Rita's room with dire intent. Here again is the action builded up to a strong point and—cut, again the hero in a hospital is introduced. And in a few minutes in walks Rita! Not until then is the incident of the Baron closed, not until she tells it to the hero herself. When the writer saw the picture, at the Lyric last week, he was not alone in believing a reel had been omitted by the operator. And to create such an impression is certainly not skilled editing.

Probably with revisions along these lines and with the eliminations we understand the Metro is to make in the actual footage, "Lest We Forget" will present a totally different appearance. It is produced well, large exterior settings were erected, burned and bombarded. The fact that it was all made on American soil has in no way deprived it of realism. Particularly does the division of French soldiers seen marching through the streets of Rita's village appear to be the genuine article. And the Lusitania episode, staged lavishly as it is, will be immeasurably stronger when it is not broken in half. Mr. Perret is a Frenchman, and a Frenchman was certainly needed to produce "Lest We Forget." His scenes never lack atmosphere and their realism is complete.

Some of the photographic work is deserving of the highest praise. The lighting in the prologue and epilogue is exceptional, and all the battle stuff is aided by good camera work and the introduction of unusual effects.

Miss Jolivet plays her role with a modesty that is always appealing and her beauty shows to wonderful advantage. Hamilton Revelle is a good Harry Winslow and L. Roger Lytton a formidable German spy.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Rita Heriot (Rita Jolivet), light opera star, meets Harry Winslow (Hamilton Revelle) in France before the outbreak of the war. He falls in love with her and asks her to marry him. Slightly undecided between Winslow and Baron Von Bergen (L. Rogers Lytton), a German spy, she tells him to wait. On the day that war breaks Rita telegraphs Winslow, who is in London, of her acceptance. The Germans then invade the little village. The telegraph operator is killed and Rita operates the instrument until captured by the Germans. She is sentenced to be shot and a soldier of the French army, seeing her before the firing squad, reports her dead. Winslow hears this and enlists in the French army. Then it is revealed that Rita escaped. She had been ordered to translate a message, tortured because of her refusal and then made captive in the commander's room. Only through the services of a German soldier, who played in the orchestra at her Paris theatre, does she escape and land in England. She then sets sail for America to fulfill a three months' engagement at the opera house. She is constantly courted by Baron Von Bergen, who has transferred his activities to the United States, but, refusing to believve his report that Winslow is dead, she will have non of him. She books passage to London on the Lusitania and the Baron urges her not to sail. He pleads so persistently that she becomes aware of the fact that he is a spy. But disregarding his entreaties she sails anyway and the ship is torpedoed. She, however, is rescued and completes the journey to London where, after a while, the Baron arrives and persists in his unwelcome attentions. One night the Baron breaks into her room. Winslow is wounded and taken to a hospital. He is angrily reading a letter when Rita arrives to see him. It is from the Baron telling compromising lies about Rita. She then continues the episode of her bedroom, relates how she caught the Baron off his guard for a moment and succeeded in slipping a cord about his neck and strangling him to death. This explanation brings the two together again, and following some allegorical scenes the picture closes.

"The Catspaw"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS is the third installment in "The Price of Folly" series and sets forth an interesting melodrama that is somewhat disappointing in its conclusion. The price of folly in this case seems to be the daughter of a political grafter who falls in love with his honest opponent. This, at any rate, is what Ruth Roland as Dorothy Rand is and does. The honest opponent believes her as crooked as her father and the end finds him denouncing her and leaving her life forever.

"The Catspaw" has a plentiful supply of complications which take the form of the plotting of the grafter and his henchmen. It will appeal mainly to those audiences who enjoy seeing the underworld exposed for their delectation without, it must be confessed, any great regard for anything but its melodramatic possibilities. Supporting Miss Roland, who is seen to advantage in a tomboy-society girl girl role are Frank Mayo, Lake McKee, Mollie McConnell, George Thielan and Ruth Lackaye.

"A Petticoat Pilot"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

JOSEPH LINCOLN, author of quite a number of colorful stories dealing with the Cape Cod fisher folk, is responsible for the plot foundation of "A Petticoat Pilot" in which Vivian Martin appears. It is the simple little tale of Mary 'Gusta who brightens the lives of two old sea salts and who later discovers to what sacrifices they have gone that she may receive proper education. But between author, star, adaptor and director "A Petticoat Pilot" looms more engaging than its bare plot, though, according to rule, not any stronger. Strength, however, is the last thing to be associated with Miss Martin's pictures. It is the color, the atmosphere, the comedy, the human interest and the heart interest that makes her pictures the enjoyable things they are and "A Petticoat Pilot" follows well in line with her previous subjects.

Miss Martin has received valuable assistance from Theodore Roberts, truly a "sterling old character actor," and James Neill, hardly less celebrated and just as able. This pair play the old salts, Shad Gould and Zoeth Hamilton, and play them with a rare sense of character. Their quaint language of the subtitles, chosen by Gardner Hunting, the adaptor from Mr. Lincoln's story, gives a further touch of atmosphere. Miss Martin herself appears first as an innocent little youngster and later as the fine young lady who takes hold of the decayed business of her guardians and makes it pay by applying modern methods. The love story, though slight, is another point of interest.

The atmosphere of the Cape Cod town has been exceptionally well brought out by Director Rollin Sturgeon, always a stickler for detail and a master at making the spectator catch the spirit of his work. Harrison Ford, Bert Hadley and Tom Bates have other prominent roles. "A Petticoat Pilot" may be summed up as "typically Vivian Martin," a classification distinct and complete. And of this type it is a very fine example.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

With the death of their old partner, Shad Gould (Theodore Roberts) and Zoeth Hamilton (James Neill) adopt his orphan child, Mary 'Gusta (Vivian Martin). The two old captains conduct a general store and Mary soon makes herself useful around the place. After a few years, Shad and Zoeth suggest that she go to boarding school and that she may not know of their charity invent the story that her father left her a fair sum of money. In Boston Mary meets Crawford Smith (Harrison Ford), who happens to be the son of Edgar Fuller (Bert Hadley), alias Smith, who long ago eloped with Mary's mother. When Mary, learning of the sacrifices of Shad and Zoeth, returns to aid them, Crawford follows. Because Mary knows that her guardians would disapprove of Crawford if they were aware of his identity she refuses him. But later Crawford returns bearing a letter from his father, now dead, which asks forgiveness from Shad and Zoeth and proves that the young people are in no way related—all of which brings on the happy ending.

Helen Gillmore, Richard Cummings, Jane Wolff, John Burton, Cecil Lionel, Jane Keckley, Antrim Short and Clarice Urhe complete the cast.

"The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain"

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

ONE of William S. Hart's first feature productions, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" has been recut and edited by the W. H. Productions and as shown for review presents one of the most virile and strong characterizations of the Western bad-man ever given by Mr. Hart. The picture is shown in six reels. It was produced by Thomas H. Ince, and reveals a dance hall and gambling scenes which for realism, detailed work and character revelation has yet to be equaled in the screen drama. The action of this picture is kept at top speed and the story runs with the smoothness of delicate machinery.

Assuming that you have seen this picture before it is worth another hour or more of your time. With the action going at top speed and confronted with the virile type of "the two-gun man," in the person of Mr. Hart, an audience will forget the time, a few years back, when they witnessed this performance. From first to last the picture has been given an entire new set of sub-titles. In a way it is a new picture and one that will appeal to any audience as being fresh from the laboratory.

It is one of those subjects which grows better with age and contains a certain human, heart-interest appeal of which the American never tires. Mr. Hart did some of his best and most dramatic work in his earlier pictures and in this one we find no exception to this commonly accepted belief. It is a Western drama in every detail and the true Western atmosphere surrounds every scene. As mentioned above, the gambling and dance hall scene, which takes a good bit of reelage, is entitled to special mention for its settings. It is a marvel for detail work. Some picturesque exteriors of the mountainous country in the West are contained and reveal shots which will please the eye regardless of the number of times seen. The picture will go over in any house and with any audience.

William S. Hart will always be remembered for his work in this production—a typical Hart characterization, the good bad-man. Clara Williams is seen opposite Mr. Hart in the leading feminine role and gives an equally good performance and presents a fine type. F. Frank Burke, J. Barney Sherry and James Dowling give excellent character impersonations of Western types.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jim Stokes, the two-gun man (William S. Hart), is a bandit. He learns of the approach of the stage coach with a big money consignment and plans a hold-up. He dismisses his followers and resolves to play the game alone. By a clever ruse he leads the passengers and driver of the coach to believe that he has his followers concealed in the brush and tells the driver that his men have the passengers covered and will shoot to kill if they move within five minutes from the time that he leaves with the booty. His plan succeeds and he gets away with the money.

He makes for the border but falls from his horse and is injured. He crawls to the nearest brook and is found unconscious by a mountaineer (J. Barney Sherry), father of the girl (Clara Williams). He is taken to their cabin and there he falls in love with the girl. His identity is not known and he marries the girl. He plans to return the money and goes to town. He is recognized and succeeds in making his getaway. The posse follows to the cabin and the mountaineer and his daughter learn that the girl's husband is the noted "two-gun man" and bandit. Jim goes to another town and registers at the hotel. He is followed by the sheriff and captured. The money is found but the sheriff's propensity for gambling gets the better of him and he loses the money he had recovered from Jim at the roulette wheel. Jim promises him to get the amount back if he will give him his liberty. He agrees and Jim holds the proprietor at the point of a gun and takes the night's winnings. He gives the loot to the sheriff and the sheriff in return takes his prisoner to the mountains and gives him his freedom. Jim returns to his wife and a reconciliation is effected.

"Who Loved Him Best?"

(Mutual—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Lisle M. Albright

EDNA GOODRICH is seen to the best advantage of her screen career in this latest Mutual production, directed by Dell Henderson. She is getting "camera wise" and in the not far distant future will probably have that merciless transcriber, the lens, eating out of her hand. Each production in which Miss Goodrich is starred shows her making progress in ability to create a favorable impression. Her make-up, for some reason or other, in the past has not always been effective. But in "Who Loved Him Best?" this criticism crumbles, and her sweet smile, lustrous dark eyes and fine profile give her the title on the screen of being the beautiful woman folks raved about on the speaking stage.

The play itself is good, and will be of interest inasmuch as the first part of the story is laid right in a picture studio and gives a faithful presentation of the part cameraman, director and artists play in picture-making. Although it is a little improbable that "the first star of filmland" would give up her place as a bright luminary in picturedom and pass by a chance to marry a successful picture producer in order to become the model of a sculptor, it, nevertheless, gives inspiration to a man who was going stale, grants love a change to play, serves as the basis for a very interesting picture, and, therefore, ought to be excused.

Herbert Evans, as George Steele, is opposite Miss Goodrich and plays the temperamental sculptor with rare skill. Miriam Folger, as Mrs. Schuyler, a scheming widow, with a desire to annex a famous husband so that she may share with him the honors of an obsequious world, is also good.

"Who Loved Him Best?" is a story that ought to go well in the average neighborhood house. It is clean and, though somewhat lacking in comedy touches, affords five reels of well put together entertainment. And the women as usual will be anxious to see Miss Goodrich in her newest gowns, furs and millinery effects. She has, it seems, a more elaborate display than ever this time, appearing in different clothes in practically every scene. The photography is good.

Doria Dane (Miss Goodrich), a motion picture star of marvelous beauty, meets George Steele (Herbert Evans), a talented sculptor, who sees in her a source of inspiration and obtains her consent to pose for him. Doria is attracted to him, despite his irresponsible mode of life. Mrs. Schuyler (Miriam Folger) is a wealthy widow interested in George and is jealous of Doria's influence over him. Under his model's influence, George gets back his old punch, stays away from Bohemia and the chatter of Mrs. Schuyler, and achieves success. With success, however, comes egotism and neglect of Doria. She finally catches him kissing her arch enemy, Mrs. Schuyler, at a bazaar, and she decides to leave him forever. She goes back to the studio to leave a message and discovers Harry North, another sculptor, with a studio next to that of George's, copying the latter's statue of "America Militant," which was completed for a prize competition.

A few days later, when surrounded by his friends, Doria walks into George's studio and smashes the statue to fragments. She then leads the way into North's studio and shows them the replica and confesses that she has exchanged the two statues and that the remaining one is the original. And at the foot of the real masterpiece there is a reconciliation.

THIS picture, produced by Rupert Julian from the story written by E. J. Clawson, is typically Western and faithfully depicts the gambling element and the blackleg claim-jumper so common in the days gone by. The whole theme centers around the efforts of a bunch of crooks to gain possession of a rich claim just developed by Dan Stuyvesant. The play is well conceived, although the mining claim just serves as an excuse upon which to hang the narrative. The wild mining country, the modest shacks of the miners, the gambling den and dance hall, so much associated with the old-time mining camp, are all very much in evidence, as is also the hair trigger action of the habitues of these places. There are a few thrills, and it is a picture that will surely satisfy the lover of Western drama. Among the cast perhaps the most real character is Dago Sam, well portrayed by Monroe Salisbury. Rupert Julian also gives a good account of himself as Tom Flynn, Hilda's lover. The locations are aptly selected and nicely photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dan Stuyvesant (W. H. Bainbridge) has struck a rich vein, and, when on his way to record his claim, he is shot from his horse by a blackleg and his papers taken from him. Jack Dedlow (Al Filson), a gambler who is in league with a gang of crooks, hearing of Stuyvesant's "accident" and believing him dead, sets out to take possession of cabin and claim. On arriving at the cabin they notice signs of recent occupancy and a search reveals Hilda Stuyvesant (Ruth Clifford) hiding in a bin. They decide to draw cards for her and Dedlow holds the biggest hand, but Dago Sam (Monroe Salisbury), who has been befriended by Tom Flynn (Rupert Julian), flashes a pair of six-shooters and backs his erstwhile confederates out of doors. Then he takes the terrified Hilda by the hand and rushes her to another cabin for safety. She, however, has her doubts of Sam's honesty of purpose, and tries to make a getaway. Nobody believes in Sam, his every action is misconstrued, so having the name he decides also to have the game, and but for the sudden change of demeanor displayed by Hilda things might have gone badly with her. But, in a moment of lucidity, apparently, she declares "I believe in you," and the better side of his nature declares itself, and he sets about to restore her to her lover, Tom Flynn. In a brief mixup, consequent upon Hilda's meeting Dedlow in this cabin, Dedlow is killed, and Flynn having heard the true history of the case regains his confidence in Sam.

"TRAPPED BY TREACHERY" opens with Doris about to be ground to death by the cogs of the chain of coal shovels. Ramsey arrives just in time to beat off the Hidden Hand and his assistant. Later, with Ramsey led away on a false clue, Doris is attacked while riding on a Fifth avenue bus. She only manages to evade the conspirators by swinging up to the elevated railway as the bus passes beneath it. Climbing up between the tracks she narrowly misses being killed by an oncoming train and only scrambles to the platform in the nick of time. This is a fine thrill and registers as one of the best in the serial.

Dr. Scarley, however, succeeds in capturing Doris. He demands the locket, but Doris is able to slip it into an envelope, address it and throw it to the street. A boy mails it but not before Scarley reads the address. It is consigned to Doris Whitney at a hotel. Verda registers here as Doris Whitney and secures the letter, but Ramsey arrives and relieves her of the locket. Doris, in an attempt to escape from Scarley, shoots and seriously wounds one of his assistants. The villainous doctor prepares to transfuse some of her blood to the wounded man and is about to perform the operation when Ramsey arrives. He covers Scarlet with a gun but the villain threatens to stab Doris with his knife if a shot is fired.

"The Captain of His Soul"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

A STORY that gives promise of developing into a good murder mystery is muffed when the author has attempted to introduce something "high-brow." Just what this something is presents a question which we for one, are unable to answer. So "The Captain of His Soul" in the last three reels goes about in circles, only reaching its conclusion after the spectator has been obliged to look on at countless mental aberrations of the author.

The situation which gives rise to the body of the picture is the finding of the dead body of Martin, dishonest manager of the Boyce Pistol Works. Each of the Boyce brothers believes the other guilty of murder, for Martin's mismanagement of affairs has caused the death of their father. This suspicion causes the serious illness of Henry, the younger brother. But Horace, the older, goes along contented, rejoicing in the fact that he is captain of his soul. When they meet Martin's widowed daughter they become rivals in love and Henry, slightly out of his mind, accuses Horace of the murder. This serious situation is relieved by the confession of Martin's discarded mistress who is the real guilty party.

The sole strong point of "The Captain of His Soul" is the cast, which includes William Desmond, Walt Whitman, Charles Gunn, Jack Richardson and Claire McDowell. But these able principals do not appear at their best. Eleanor Talbot Kinkaid is author, Lillian Ducey adaptor, G. P. Hamilton director and Tom Buckingham photographer.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ebenezer Boyce (Walt Whitman), owner of a small arms factory, retires from active charge at the suggestion of his sons, Horace (William Desmond) and Henry (Charles Gunn) in favor of Martin (Jack Richardson) an agent of a trust. He succeeds in putting the Boyce works completely in the hands of the trust and the shock of this is so severe that old Ebenezer dies. The next morning Martin is found lying by the roadside, dead. The verdict of suicide is given out but Horace and Henry suspect each other. This thought so works on Henry that he leaves his brother and sets out for Santa Barbara. Still worried, he is taken sick. Horace, who bears his ordeal with calm, is sent for. Myra (Mitzi Gould), widowed daughter of Martin, helps at Henry's bedside. Eventually he recovers to discover his brother making love to Myra. Infuriated, he accuses him of the murder, and it is not until then that Annette (Claire McDowell), once mistress of Martin's, confesses that in a struggle with her he was killed.

"New Love for Old"

(Universal—Five Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

THERE is nothing very much out of the ordinary in "New Love for Old," but it gives Ella Hall ample opportunity to display her talent, and she takes full advantage of same, proving herself at one time a veritable mountain nymph, and always coy, artless and winsome. Emory Johnson, a love-sick youth, carries himself convincingly, as does also Gretehcn Lederer, but it devolves upon Harry Holden to give the true rustic air to the picture, and he as the village quack, always amiable, ever-ready to render a service, makes an admirable "Doc Podden." The scene is laid around a mountain resort, and the scenes pictured are wonderful reproductions of mountain stream, rugged woodland, sylvan dells and a placid lake.

The story is by Waldemar Young and was produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. The direction is good, everything running so smoothly as to leave nothing to be desired in that respect.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kenneth Scott (Emory Johnson) is boating on the lake with Marie Beauchamp (Gretchen Lederer) and he takes advantage of his surroundings to press his attentions upon her, declaring that he will keep her out on the lake until she promises to become his wife. To safeguard herself she promises, but in the early morning leaves the resort without notifying him of her destination and he is nearly heartbroken. Old Doc Podden (Harry Holden), noticing his despondency, correctly diagnoses his case and invites him to spend a few days in the woods to rid himself of the love germ. This he does, and there meets Daphne Sawyer (Ella Hall), daughter of Ben Sawyer (Winter Hall), the village postmaster and general storekeeper. Daphne makes no secret of her admiration for Kenneth, and the old love is fast giving way to the new. A rustic dance is arranged and Marie Beauchamp, who has opened a roadhouse in the immediate vicinity, which, by the way, has furnished the village gossips with unlimited material for scandal, attends and there meets Kenneth. The attention these two pay each other angers Daphne, who leaves the dance-hall and goes home. She is followed by her old country swain, Pete Bracchi (E. A. Warren), her father's storekeeper, who had viewed her actions with Kenneth with alarm and suspicion; in a shack away from the house he presses his suit, but Kenneth arrives and a fierce battle ensues, in which the Italian is worsted, although Kenneth is badly beaten up, and Daphne half carries him to the road-house to get medical attention. In the meantime Daphne is missed from the dance-hall and the hastily drawn conclusion is that Marie has lured her to the road-house. A posse is formed with the intention of raiding and burning the place, but things turn out differently when the facts become known, and finally Daphne is informed that Marie is her sister, she having left home some years before on account of her father's cruelty.

"The Marionettes"

(Select-C. K. Young Production—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE millions who admire Clara Kimball Young on the screen will be given an exceptional opportunity to bestow this admiration on the star and at the same time to fully realize a matinee or evening of ideal entertainment, if they will see Miss Young in the screen version of Pierre Wolff's play, "The Marionettes," her latest work before the camera under the direction of Emile Chautard. From the introduction to the final scene of Mr. Wolff's play, Miss Young is seen either in a close-up or a semi-close-up with the spporting cast pushed all but off the stage. "The Marionettes" is Clara Kimball Young's picture and hers alone. The supporting cast are truly "marionettes."

The prominence with which the star's personality and magnetism has been brought out in this production and the quality production which Director Chautard has given the French playwright's work, are stepping stones on which an audience can mount to considerable heights in giving praise. The followers of Miss Young's work for the screen will rejoice after reviewing this screen presentation and if there are in the audience those who have not been attracted by the star's personality, they will have succumbed at the conclusion of this run. It is to be doubted if there is an artist now working before the camera who presents such a wholly refreshing and delightful picture as Miss Young. Add to this, she works with a natural ease and appreciates so thoroughly the inaffectiveness of overexuberance in registering pleasant surprise or the opposite feeling of depression that it is not to be regretted that she is constantly in the spot light.

Pierre Wolff's play is of the social drama type. The scenes are laid in Paris. The first reel presents Miss Young in the role of a demure convent girl. The transition from this role to that of the butterfly of Paris has been brought about in a skilful and logical manner by the author. Director Chautard is due more than ordinary praise for the skilful manner in which he has staged this production. The interior sets shown are lavish and the finest detail has been brought out with due prominence.

Nigel Barrie is seen opposite Miss Young in the principal supporting role. Mr. Barrie gives an average performance. He is at times a bit too effective in his interpretations. Corliss Giles is an excellent type and is capable of handling a more prominent role than that of Pierre Vareine. Edward Kimball does well in a role of average importance. Alec B. Francis does his usual good work. Florence Atkinson, in a semi-vampirish part, gives promise of more effective work in the future. Others in the cast are Mrs. Helen Simpson, Mrs. Madeline Cadeux, Hazel Washburn, Mrs. Louise Bates, Carey Hastings, Sam V. Phillips, John Dudley, Henry Warwick, Robert White, Henry Law, Arthur Marion and John Gaylor. The photography stands out with prominence.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Fernande de Ferney (Clara Kimball Young) is an orphan. During the summer when she is not at the convent she lives with her uncle, Professor de Ferney (Edward Kimball). The professor is an old friend of the Marquise de Monclars, whose estate is near the home of the professor.

Fernande is seen often at the home of the Marquise. The Marquise's son, Roger de Monclars (Nigel Barrie), is in Paris and heavily in debt. He visits his mother for the purpose of obtaining money to settle. The Marquise tells him that she will not furnish him with money unless he marries and settles down. Knowing that Fernande admires her son, the Marquise suggests that he marry her. He consents in order to obtain money. They are married and Roger spends little time with his wife. He leaves for Monte Carlo. His friend Nizerolles (Alec B. Francis) takes an interest in Fernande and invites her to participate in a puppet show which he is giving. The puppet deals with a neglected wife, a lover and a husband. She adopts the methods of the neglected wife and when her husband returns she pretends to be indifferent to him. She leads a gay life and becomes the most prominent woman in society. Roger realizes that she is beautiful and attempts to win her affections. She ignores him but at the same time loves him. Because she will not return his affections, her husband resolves to leave, but decides to remain when his wife explains that she has acted indifferent toward him in order that she might win his respect and love.

"Madame Jealousy"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

GEORGE V. HOBART, whose chief claim to fame is the popular and apparently ever-recurrent "Experience," an allegorical play, is author of "Madame Jealousy," Pauline Frederick's latest vehicle. Miss Frederick appears in the title role and her mission in these five reels is blighting the domestic bliss of Valor and Charm. As the beautiful embodiment of the Green Eyed Monster she completely upsets the home of the Valors, always ably assisted by her aides, Mischief and Treachery. But she retires defeated when Mrs. Valor becomes the mother of a wee mite, Happiness, and when we last see her she is selecting another loving couple on which to practice her disquieting abilities.

Whether or not the public takes to pictures of the allegorical type is too general a question to discuss here, though it is difficult to recall one that has been a distinct success. Probably "Experience" will score when at last its stage run is concluded, but "Madame Jealousy" is lacking in successful pictorial ingredients. In the first place, Miss Frederick's role is entirely impersonal, while those carried by the supporting cast possess something of individuality besides fairly well carrying out the idea that they embody certain human traits and emotions. But the star never gets into the dramatic action of the play. She hovers constantly in the offing and is only the center of attraction by will of her name and renown, not by reason of any possibilities contained in the part. She is, indeed, incidental to the main action.

On the other hand the story of Valor and Charm, their distrust of one another aroused by Madame Jealousy, never becomes more than fairly interesting. It lacks punch, fails to hold one, possibly because the story has a number of loopholes without which it could not have existed for its full length and possibly because the mixture of allegory and reality doesn't go well. When Madame Jealousy wills to appear on a scene she does so through a dissolve which would be quite all right providing she was neither seen nor heard as a personality by her victims. But she comes arrayed in modern clothes and converses with the rest as one of them. This mixture seems false.

Certainly "Madame Jealousy" is not to be ranked with Miss Frederick's former successes. That would be very much to their discredit. The fact that it was written by Mr. Hobart does not make it another "Experience," regrettably.

Thomas Meighan, Elsie McCloud, Frank Losee, Frances Cappelano and Edwin Sturgis are among those who constitute the large supporting cast. Eve Unsell made the adaptation and Robert Vignola directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Seeing the happiness of Valor (Thomas Meighan) and Charm (Elsie McCloud), Madame Jealousy (Pauline Frederick) determines to enter their lives. She succeeds in making each distrust the other and breaking up their home. Valor returns to his parents, Finance (Frank Losee) and Display (Ina Bourke), while Charm goes to hers, Commerce (Charles Wellesley) and Pride (Isabelle O'Madigan). Madame Jealousy then sets Finance and Commerce against one another. Valor goes to the dogs in despair and Treachery (Edwin Sturgis) urges him to drown himself. But Sorrow (Grace Barton), who has been the constant companion of Charm since the separation, urges him to return to his wife, where he finds the baby, Happiness, to restore peace to his house.

BILLIE RHODES, mischievous as ever, always delighting in a prank to somebody else's discomfiture pretty nearly puts one over in "Somebody's Widow," and doubtless would have succeeded had not her friends played her false. A bevy of girls disporting themselves on the beach at a fashionalbe resort, are somewhat chagrined at the total absence of any men folk, until the arrival of Jack Random (Landis Cullen)—a playwright—and his secretary. But they are too engrossed in their work to pay any attention to the fair sex, so on a wager Billie guarantees to bring the man on his knees within a specified time. Showing her knowledge of genus homo to be of profound depth, she poses as a young widow, for "they all fall for that widow stuff," she explains. Truly, a charming young widow she makes, and jack swallows the bait—"hook, line and sinker," and Billie bids fair to winning the bet. But the other end of the wager, fearing to lose, lets Jack in the secret of Billie's trickery, which he counters by having his secretary disguise himself and impersonate the lost husband. Billie is terrified and is forced to make a clean breast of the affair. She therefore loses the bet and gains a hubby.

In "Her Friend Brown," Jack's flirting proclivities get him in trouble. He happens to meet an old sweetheart and declaring himself still single, carries on a clandestine flirtation. Nellie Brown (Clarice Urhe), known to her friends as "Brownie," is the innocent cause of Jack's premature downfall, or she writes Jack of her lonesomeness and urges him to dine with her that night. Wifie gets the letter and Jack explains that "Brownie" is a rich bachelor. At this juncture, Jack is despatched by his office to a neighboring town to close a deal, so the wife decides to keep the dinner engagement with Jack's rich bachelor friend Brownie. And here the trouble commences. The reel is brimful of amusing incidents and both these short subjects will be well received by any audience. The release dates are January 29 and February 5 respectively.

"Flare-Up Sal"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

R. WILLIAM NEIL has created for screen presentation J. G. Hawks' ideas as incorporated in "Flare-Up Sal" with a sincerity of purpose and a knowledge of the atmosphere that hovered over the "forty-niners" in the days of the gold-rush to California, that lovers of the Western drama are assured complete satisfaction and sixty-odd minutes of rousing entertainment at the theatre where Dorothy Dalton is scheduled to appear in the title role.

"Flare-Up Sal" is a Western drama of the first water. Miss Dalton is seen again as the dance-hall queen. Director Neil created a better production from the script of "The Price Mark," the last screen drama in which Miss Dalton appeared under his direction, for the reason that he had a much better story to work from and did not have to follow ideas and incidents which, only a few months ago were followed in a production in which Louise Glaum appeared titled, "Golden Rule Kate." The two are very similar in plot material and general atmosphere. However, this fact does not detract from the quality of Mr. Neil's direction. He has used every care in staging Miss Dalton's late picture and has chosen his cast with a good eye for types.

Mr. Hawks' story is not the best example of material for a working script. In the way of introduction, the author has revealed a family of prospectors en route to the gold fields. This incident serves to introduce the heroine of his story. After the first reel the family is left in camp on the way and here they are left with no explanation offered in the latter reelage as to their whereabouts. He sends Flare-Up Sal to the nearest settlement and after her arrival, the action is made to center about her adventures at the dance-hall and her family are left in oblivion. Inconsistencies like the above are a distinct drawback to the author's story. Because of the good direction, the appearance of Dorothy Dalton in a role that she handles to perfection and to which she is thoroughly adapted and because the picture reveals the distinct Western type and action, "Flare-Up Sal" will make a distinct hit with the average audience and will leave a favorable impression at the box-office.

Miss Dalton's supporting cast is made up of especially fine Western types. Thurston Hall in the role of the Red Rider, does commendable work opposite Miss Dalton. William Conklin as the dance-hall proprietor, is convincing and appreciates the characteristics of the role. J. P. Lockney, in the role of the hanger-on, gives a highly commendable characterization and succeeds in getting a full quota of laughs from his audiences. Milton Higbee does effective work. The production was made under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The exteriors are fine examples of Western country and the photography is of the best. The fire scene in the last reel has been reproduced with finese.

"Flare-Up" Sal (Dorothy Dalton), with her father (Lige Higbee) and mother is on her way to the gold fields in the days of the gold rush. The father is addicted to gambling. He goes to a near-by settlement and at the roulette wheel loses his small fortune and all his belongings. "Flare-Up" Sal's mother sends her to town to fetch her father. She finds him at the roulette wheel, having lost everything. She gambles with the proprietor Dandy Dave Hammond (William Conklin) to determine whether her father is given his losses or whether she remain at the dance-hall in charge of Dandy Dave. She loses and remains. She becomes the queen of the dance-hall.

The Red Rider (Thurston Hall), a gentleman hold-up artist, has heard of "Flare-Up" Sal and arranges to go to the dance-hall in the guise of a preacher. He changes clothes with the preacher who is on his way to take charge. Arriving at the settlement, he meets Sal. Dandy Dave, fearing that the new preacher will drive out his business, conspires with Sal to run him out of town. Tin Cup Casey (J. P. Lockney), a hanger-on, is Sal's slave. Sal invites The Red Rider to the dance-hall and Dandy Dave has it arranged to surprise them both in Sal's room. Sal has grown to like The Red Rider and when Dandy Dave comes to her room, she substitutes Tin Cup Casey and conceals The Red Rider. Soon after this, The Red Rider throws off his disguise of the preacher and enters the dance-hall. He shoots up the place and he and Sal escape during the excitement and are married.

"Beauty and the Rogue"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Lisle M. Albright

WHETHER or not Mary Miles Minter has actually gathered more sunshine in her hair and more charm in her smile in this last picture than she ever had before, is possibly a debatable question. But, surely, her irresistible fetchingness is not. Plot, settings and story all fade into insignificance so long as her smiling face and sweet personality flood the screen. A twinkle in Mary's eyes and a pout upon her lips are enough to cause one to forget incongruities of plot, inconsistency of story, lack of realism or fidelity to life, or even bad acting on the part of her supporters. Not that any or all of these shortcomings apply to her current production, for they don't. In "Beauty and the Rogue," while she is not given what could be characterized as the best of stories, the impression of the play as a whole is more than pleasing. The biggest fault of the picture is the easiness with which crooks, innocents and detectives seem to happen on the scene of action. They are a little too omnipresent.

Roberta Lee, the spoiled and petted child of a Western oil magnate, has unbounded faith in the goodness of mankind and devotes much of her time to moral uplift work and the reformation of incorrigible crooks and rogues. She finds one, who goes by the name of "Slippery" among his pals, and tries to instill in him a sense of moral consecutiveness. That he is unsuccessful in changing his moral code is due to no fault of his, for he tries hard, but just naturally can't.

Orral Humphreys, as "Slippery" Bill Dorgan, gives a most vivid and lifelike interpretation of an inveterate thief and rascal struggling against temptation to justify the trust placed in him by a sweet young girl. It was the first time any one had ever thought there was even a little bit of good in him, and it created a strange sensation in his bosom. That he couldn't reform, however, was an essential to the story and was instrumental in bringing Allan Forrester, as Richard Van Stone, into a mesh of circumstantial evidence which branded him as a thief at first, and then cleared up and left him enshrined in Roberta's heart.

Henry King directed the production, which, besides having those already mentioned in the cast, displays to good advantage Spottiswood Aitken, Clarence Burton and Lucille Ward.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Roberta Lee (Mary Miles Minter) is a sympathetic girl who believes in the "uplift." Her father (George Periolat) is a rich oil magnate who lets himself be overruled when Roberta insists that he employ "Slippery" Bill Dorgan (Orral Humphrey), an ex-jail bird, as his gardener. "Slippery" gets his chance and loots the Lee home, stealing, among other things, a brooch. Roberta visits her old nurse in the country, where she meets Richard Van Stone (Alan Forrest), who also is in the country on business for her father.

Van Stone is traveling incognito and doesn't know who Roberta is but falls in love with her instantly. 'Slippery," in the meantime, leaves the city and tries the country life. He runs across Van Stone and sells him the brooch in order to get the price of a square meal. At a charity entertainment "Mlle. Tiptoe" dances and Richard presents her with her own brooch. Assuming that he is the burglar, she has him arrested. The misunderstanding is later cleared up to the satisfaction of everyone when "Slippery" is finally caught in a party that intended to kidnap Roberta and hold her for a ransom. The blame for the Lee robbery is taken off of Richard's shoulders, and to show him that she is sorry for suspecting him, Roberta gives him her hand.

"Real Folks"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"REAL FOLKS" won the thousand dollar prize offered in a scenario contest conducted by the Triangle Film Corporation and the Photoplay Magazine, but there have been better pictures whose stories cost considerably less. It retells the old tale of the family of humble origin whose whole existence is changed by great wealth. It counts as its most prominent lines of action the efforts of Pat Dugan, the head of the house, to break into elite society and the dislike of Jimmie, his son, to the sudden changes which the big fortune causes, together with his romance with a girl not of his father's selection.

This story is played in a moderate tone from beginning to end. There is none of the broad burlesque of the Dugans eating peas with a knife and playing an orchestral accompaniment with the soup so often seen in pictures of a like type. "Real Folks" is not so boisterous. Sometimes one wishes for comedy of this sort. It at least has always proven amusing. J. Barney Sherry as Dugan becomes initiated to the ways of the rich quite easily. True, there is a peculiar cut to his dress suit and he doesn't enjoy wearing it. He would rather smoke his clay pipe than cigarettes. But save for these and kindred eccentricities equally as mild, "Real Folks" would be totally bare of humor. Mr. Sherry's performance is, by the way, excellent in conception. It is a pity that he was not given more of an opportunity to make his presence felt.

Kate Coraley is the prize-winning author. Jack Cunningham prepared her work for the screen and Walter Edwards directed. The five reels abound in attractive exteriors and were well photographed by C. G. Peterson. Francis McDonald, Fritzi Ridgeway and Alberta Lee complete a pleasing quartette of players.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Pat Dugan (J. Barney Sherry), oil laborer, strikes it rich and becomes a millionaire in a day. His son, Jimmie (Francis McDonald), he packs off to an eastern college. Jimmie doesn't fit. He proceeds to thrash three of the college snobs and a policeman and gets his walking papers. Then he disappears. Pat and Mrs. Dugan (Alberta Lee) move east to Long Island to gratify Pat's ambition to break into society. A search for Jimmie is begun, but eventually he shows up of his own accord as a florist. He is prevailed upon to remain with his parents. Much against Pat's wishes he falls in love with a dancing teacher, Joyce Clifton (Fritzi Ridgeway), who is stopping on the adjoining estate with Lady Blissington (Marion Skinner), leader of a Red Cross movement. Mrs. Dugan makes friends with her. Jimmie elopes with Joyce. Lady Blissington plans an elaborate entertainment to which the Dugans are invited. Pat is satisfied at last, for he is in society and when Joyce introduces his own son to him as her husband he is more pleased than angered.

Betty Pearce and T. D. Crittendon complete the cast.

"Broken Ties"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

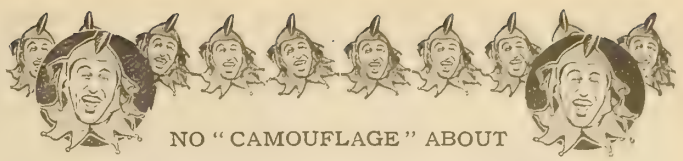

A SKILLFUL combination of two themes; the barrier of race and the neglected wife result in "Broken Ties" being one of the strongest World pictures released in some time. These united themes lead up to a murder mystery, planted in great and absorbing detail and while no mystery to the audience a seemingly impossible one to the characters of the story. So well is the web of circumstantial evidence woven about at least two of the characters and so delicate are the relationships of various of them that the suspense soars to an unusually high mark.

In fact, the whole of "Broken Ties" is a carefully formulated and evolved drama and while leading up to the murder contains not one dull moment. The many intricacies of plot have been clearly and forcibly handled by the author, Woodbridge Clapp, and as well presented on the celluloid by Director Arthur Ashley. The denouement when Corinne La Force confesses to the murder and immediately thereafter plunges the knife into her own breast is handled with fine regard for its possibilities.

June Elvidge, Montagu Love and Mr. Ashley, three of World Film's most popular stars appear in the principal roles of "Broken Ties," each of them playing with all the skill demanded by their big situations. Pinna Nesbit, present in many a World picture of the past, does exceptional work as Corrine, the half-breed whose dark blood does not show. Alec B. Francis and Kate Lester complete the cast of principals with a brace of good performances. Looking over the names of the players one reaches the obvious conclusion that seldom has such a selection of talent been assembled to interpret the roles of a single picture.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Henry Hasbrook (Alec B. Francis) promises La Force (Arthur Matthews) at his death that he will care for his daughter, Corrine (Pinna Nesbit), in whose veins runs the blood of a West Indian mother. In later years Hasbrook's nephew, Arnold Curtis (Arthur Ashley), something of a weakling, falls in love with Corrine. Hasbrook admonishes him to stay away from her, to which he consents. John Fleming (Montagu Love), a busy lawyer, introduces Arnold to his wife, Marcia (June Elvidge). She is neglected and Arnold offers innocent companionship. Marcia, in debt from gambling, is with Arnold one afternoon when a note comes from her husband asking for three thousand dollars which he left in the safe. This she has spent. Arnold comes to the rescue and asks for payment that night at a certain roadhouse, where, under the influence of liquor, he attacks her. She escapes from him and returns home, not, however, without dropping a locket in the roadhouse room. This same night, Hasbrook is murdered by Corrine. Mrs. Fleming (Kate Lester), John's mother, is seen by the body by a burglar. She made the journey to Arnold's rooms, having overheard his appointment with Marcia and intending to prevent any disaster. Arnold is accused of the murder, for that night he returns to the club with blood on his clothes, (Marcia, in defending herself, had hit him with a bottle). He refuses to defend himself when questioned. Fleming takes the case, learns of his wife's visit to the roadhouse and denounces her. At a pre-arranged hearing, when Arnold is cross-examined, Corrine, present as the ward of the late Hasbrook, confesses to the murder because he was on the verge of informing Arnold that she had dark blood in her veins. She then takes her own life. Fleming decides to pay more attention to his wife in future and a reconciliation follows.

"Dodging a Million"

(Goldwyn Pictures—Five Reels)

Reviewed by R. E. Pritchard

HERE are mighty few of them who can "come back," but rules do not apply to Mabel Normand, for in "Dodging a Million," the first of her five-reel features released by Goldwyn, she proves that not only has she maintained her old time popularity of the slapstick days, but that she has been able to firmly establish herself in the front rank of comediannes.

Highly imaginative though the story is, and thoroughly improbable, yet it is likely to make a box-office winner. It is the sort of a production in which one forgets the impossibilities and remembers the convincing charm. It is the sort that leaves everyone thoroughly satisfied with the evening's entertainment. It is the very sort in these war-time days when people want to be really delighted for an hour or more and forget the sterner realities of present day existence. It is a time and a day for these stories of the fanciful, and certainly there could be no more charming interpreter of such roles in the land of near make believe that Mabel.

If you are going to a production to pick it to pieces and find little things that wouldn't happen in the ordinary day's life, you are not going to like "Dodging a Million." But if you are going to the theatre to be interested, to laugh, to wonder at the more or less foolish mystery of it, a mystery story without a murder or a robbery in it, you will leave your seat mighty glad that you spent the admission price. Miss Normand herself is an entirely different sort of an actress from the days when she had to be messed up with custard pie or thrown into a lake to get a laugh. Her beauty attracts instant attention and there are wonderful gowns that she wears which will keep the women folk talking for many a day. She is convincing except in one scene where she weeps; the twinkle in her eye belies her grief.

Goldwyn has supplied her with a strong supporting company, and Tom Moore has been well cast for the leading male role. His part is a big one and exhibitors will do well to call attention to his presence. The production itself is elaborate, including many scenes of New York life, including Sherry's. George Loane Tucker shows his skilful hand through the direction and the photography is always good.

This picture played to unusual business at the Strand theatre, New York. It ought to do even better in other cities, for not only does it possess for the others all the charm it gave New Yorkers, but it may be played up as a story of life along the "Great White Way." Miss Normand's work in this picture ought also to leave a new demand for her later work.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Arabella Flynn (Mabel Normand), a messenger in a fashionable gown shop, after being used for a model for a late customer, is overcome by her "style" and with the eight dollars of her week's pay in her pocket and her borrowed finery she decides to spend one night in the fashionable life of New York. She goes to the most fashionable restaurant and there sees her employer, Raquin (Armand Cortes), and his favorite model, Luella (Rita Dane), and flees. She flees and there comes to her rescue Jack Forsythe (Tom Moore), who is the laughing stock of the city because his father made his money in corsets—and wears 'em. Finally she escapes to her furnished room house, after she has failed to get in the store to return her borrowed finery, and because of her gay clothes she is refused admittance by the landlady. She is in desperation when an expressman comes up with three trunks for her and a check for $800. She immediately jumps in the taxi in which she had fled from the restaurant and orders herself driven to the most stylish hotel and registers under the family name of the aunt who has left her the money. Through reporters flocking to interview her she learns that she is supposed to be the heiress to $94,000,000. She gets the best in the hotel and gownmakers, hatters, jewelers and all sorts of trades people flock to her. Her credit is unlimited and she buys and buys. But, there enters one who is destined to interfere with her joys, Signor Rodrigues (J. Herbert Frank), who bears a letter from her aunt which says that he must be admitted at any time. Of course it so happens that Jack is living at the same hotel and infatuation quickly develops into an ardent courtship, with the mysterious silent signor interfering at every turn. He is present at the opening of the first of the mysterious trunks filled with the aunt's clothes and bearing the message that if Arabella doesn't like them to buy more, and the second which a note declares to include artificial jewelry and to advise the purchase of genuine duplicates, and finally of the third which contains a mysterious poison which the girl is told she may use if she finds the man she loves is not true. In the meantime the conduct of the signor has made Jack's father suspicious, though the young man refuses to believe until he has seen the signor in the girl's apartment late at night. And just at that moment the lawyer representing the estate berates the clerk who has hunted up Arabella that he made a mistake in the check. The clerk jumps to the conclusion that the wrong girl got it, goes to the hotel and denounces her as an impostor and incidentally gets back the uncashed check. Then flocks of creditors from the hotel proprietor down demanding their money. Jack, finally convinced that she is an adventuress, starts to leave the city, and Arabella determines upon the poison, but the signor dispatches a note to warn the youth that the girl needs him. He returns, but before he can get back the lawyer has discovered the clerk's second and graver error and rushes to the hotel with the news that the mistake in the check was that it should have been for $80,000 instead of $800. And with the explanation that the mysterious signor was to learn whether the girl was really worthy, all live happily ever afterward.

Foreign Buyers

This old and well established concern, wishing to extend facilities to the foreign buyers in their relations with American Film producers, has recently opened a special department for the purchasing and exporting of Moving Picture Films. Through this special department it will be possible for you, on a very reasonable basis, to purchase your films and other articles in the moving picture line to much better advantage than could be done directly by yourself.

For this very complete service, backed by our thorough knowledge of American conditions, you pay us only a commission.

Saving — Owing to the fact that our purchases are very large, we can give to you the benefit of the lowest prices. We are holding out no profit for ourselves on the purchase prices, whatever we save is for our customers.

Satisfaction — Our main object is to satisfy our customer in every possible way, not only to be able to save money for him, but to buy the best the market affords; and keep him posted regularly as to what is going on in the film industry as regards new productions.

Shipments — In connection with the film department you will also have the advantages of our well operated shipping department, thus you are assured of the careful and proper handling of all goods, which means for you Prompt Delivery.

Confidence — You will deal with a concern with unquestionable financial standing.

EXHIBITORS' PERSONALS

INDIANA.—Byron W. Brentlinger, late assistant manager of the Orpheum theatre, Terre Haute, has been appointed manager of the new Terre Haute theatre now in course of erection, and which, it is expected, will be opened early in April.

Manager Alcorn, of the Lyric theatre, Greenburg, has closed his theatre to help the community conserve its coal supply, necessary to provide light and heat for domestic purposes. During the extremely cold spell that visited Indiana during the first half of January, the Lyric remained dark.

IOWA.—Hugh Fleming has bought the Palace theatre at Afton.

Tullis Bros. have assumed the management of the theatre at Decatur.

F. G. Sloyke has taken over the management of the Scenic theatre at Lakeville.

James Byrgenstein has bought the motion picture theatre at Leeds.

Emil Olesen has purchased the motion picture theatre at Falls City.

KENTUCKY.—The Hippodrome theatre, Newport, charges five-cent admissions on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights. On the other nights ten cents is the admission, the patrons paying the war tax on those nights. Patrons approve of the plan.

The Paris-Grand and Alamo theatres, which are under the same management at Paris, have joint use of a four-piece orchestra. The orchestra plays at the Alamo from 2 to 5.30 p. m., and at the Paris-Grand from 7 to 10.30 p. m.

Bloomfield and Minor, managers of the Pastime theatre, Winchester, have commenced on the enlargement and improvement of same. In order to take care of the increased patronage of the theatre the stage will be torn out and the increased space gained by tearing out the stage will allow them to put in about 100 additional seats, which will relieve the congested condition at the theatre considerably.

E. O. Billiter has leased the Pike theatre, Cynthiana, from Doc Bowman, and will show Saturday nights.

F. M. Sparks, Earl O'Hara and O. B. Heady have leased the motion picture theatre at Hodgenville from R. D. Gaddie, and are arranging to show five days each week.

MISSOURI.—T. E. Smedley is the new owner of the Royal theatre at Thayer.

NEBRASKA.—A. O. Henry has opened a motion picture theatre at Malvern.

Dr. Gehrke has leased the Pastime theatre at Ravenna.

George C. Allgaier has purchased the Gem Motion Picture theatre at Oakland.

NEW YORK.—Plans for changing the theatre at the Grand Opera House, Syracuse, from the second to the first floor have been prepared under the direction of William F. Rafferty, owner of the building.

NOVA SCOTIA.—Messrs. Cragg and Fraser have just completed their magnificent theatre at Bridgewater, N. S. This theatre is modern in every detail and the proprietors have not spared expense in looking after the comfort of their patrons. The projection room is fireproof and as an extra precaution, automatic sprinklers have been installed. The theatre has a large stage for dramatic performances, together with dressing rooms and scenery, and will be able to take care of any road show. This theatre is said to be one of the finest theatres in Nova Scotia.

OHIO.—Through the office of S. W. Manhein & Company, 719 Garfield building, the Polster-Lefkowitz Company, which operates the Wonderland theatres, 1714 E. Ninth street, and the Gaiety theatre, 1726 E. Ninth street, Cleveland, have combined and purchased the unexpired lease and business of the Bronx Amusement Company on the Bronx theatre, 1770 E. Ninth street.

The new company will be known as the Polster-Lefkowitz Company and has elected A. Polster president, and Max Lefkowitz secretary and treasurer. The intention is to run high-class feature productions in the Gaiety and a short program in the Wonderland and Bronx.

The consideration by the new company for the Bronx theatre was about $10,000.

Charles Hauser has leased the Alhambra theatre, Franklin, and will place a new projecting machine in the house. Closing of this deal means that Electric theatre will be closed.

H. B. Solomon, manager of the Marvin theatre, Findlay, has leased the Chidister theater at Bowling Green.

PENNSYLVANIA.—The old Park theatre property at Johnstown is to be remodeled by George Panagotacos, and rendered suitable for motion pictures.

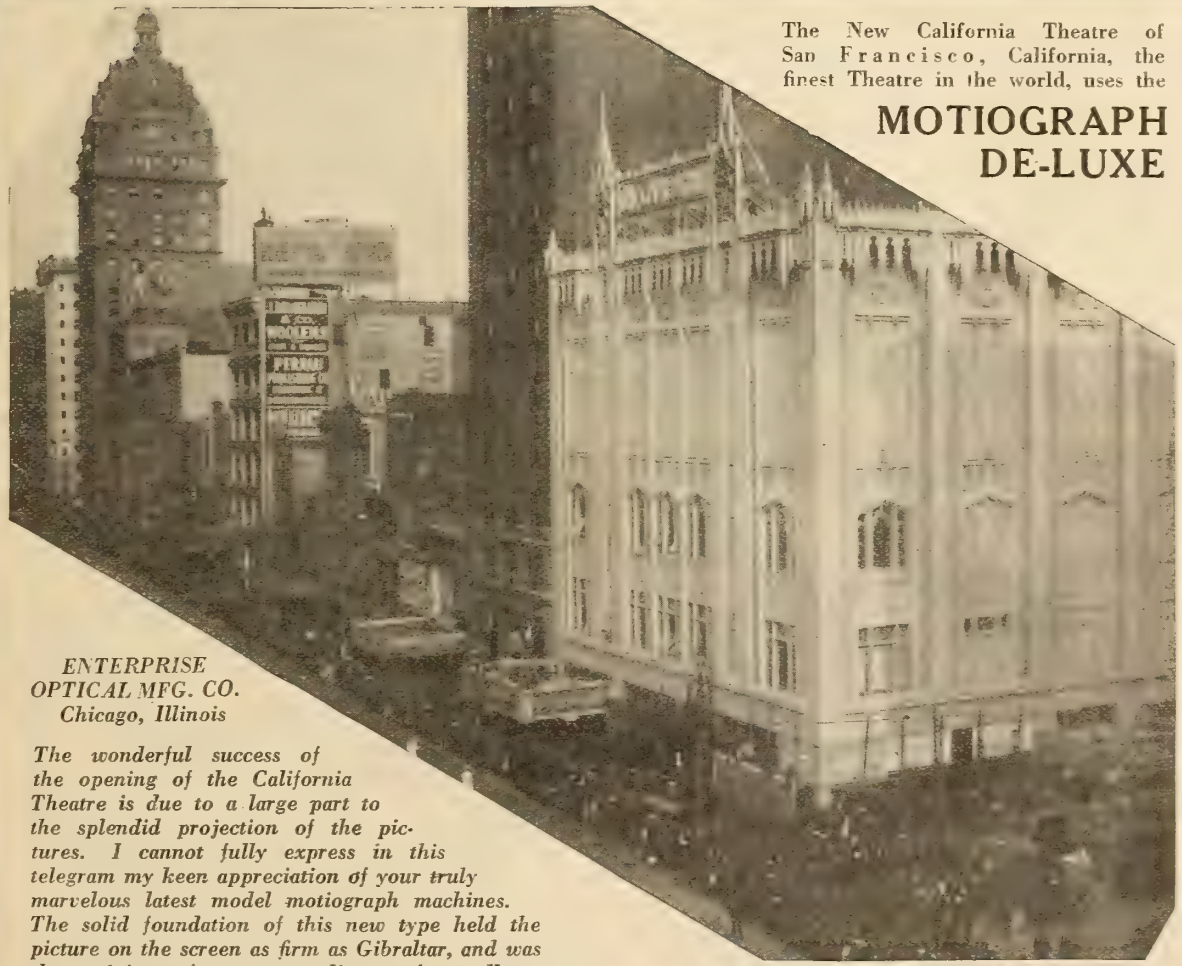
William Berkowitz, of Brackenridge avenue, Tarentum, has purchased the Luna theater, Brackenridge.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Ruth N. Broome, daughter of Warren E. Broome, proprietor of the Fulton Opera House, Lancaster, and one of the leading motion picture exhibitors of this city, to the Rev. Frank W. Tasky, pastor of the Reformed Church at North Wales, formerly of Wilkes-Barre.

WASHINGTON.—R. J. Charles, of Vader, who owns motion picture theatres at Onalaska, Vader, Toledo, Napavine and Silver Lake, has purchased the Metropolitan theatre at Chehalis from J. A. MacMillan, and will be asisted in the management of these houses by Harold M. Clane.

The Liberty theatre, at Northport, which has undergone extensive improvements, has been reopened to the public and will be managed by Melville Adams, as a motion picture house. This makes two such theatres for Northport, the Iris having been built a few months ago by Wilbur Robinson.

WISCONSIN.—A. A. Altchwager has taken over the management of the motion picture theatre at Columbus.



J. H. Henderson has purchased the Lyric theatre at Cumberland, and will conduct same as a strictly motion picture house.

A. F. Werner has purchased the motion picture theatre and all equipment at Black River Falls from F. E. Keefe.

The lease of the Majestic theatre, Wausau, which has been held by W. O. Troyer for a year past, has been taken over by Fred Levenhagen.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.
Chicago, Illinois

The wonderful success of the opening of the California Theatre is due to a large part to the splendid projection of the pictures. I cannot fully express in this telegram my keen appreciation of your truly marvelous latest model motiograph machines. The solid foundation of this new type held the picture on the screen as firm as Gibraltar, and was the recipient of many compliments from all exhibitors. We are ordering two more machines from Mr. Kemp, which is ample proof of the sincerity of the above.

An Open Letter from OSCAR M. SHECK, General Organizer of the I. A. T. S. E., to the Moving Picture Machine Operators of America

International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employees

Of the United States and Canada

107 West 46th Street

New York City, January 19, 1918

Dear Brothers:-

So many members of our order have written me for information concerning the SHECK UNIVERSAL ADAPTER for utilizing MAZDA lamps in motion picture projection, that I have thought best to make a public acknowledgment of these letters and a public reply to them.

Through the courtesy of the MAZDA engineers, I was invited to be present at the first semi-public demonstration of MAZDA lamps in the projection of motion pictures. I realized at that time that I was witnessing an epoch-making event in the motion picture industry, and the thought occurred to me that the fruits of this wonderful invention would be more quickly available if some one were to perfect an appliance by which any existing make of motion picture projection machine could be adapted to the use of these MAZDA lamps immediately, instead of waiting for the machine manufacturers gradually to awaken to the importance of the discovery. Then the thought came to me: Why not design such an appliance myself? This idea was the inception of the SHECK UNIVERSAL ADAPTER. Its development is too long a story to tell here. Suffice to say the adapter, passing through various stages of experimental evolution, is now standardized and is operating satisfactorily in many theaters in this country. And the demand for the adapter is far in excess of our present factory capacity! So much for that; now a word as to the lamps.

Like every new thing, incandescent projection has encountered the usual number of scoffers. Many fellows who watched Robert Fulton's steamboat on its first trip up the Hudson laughed at the "hair-brained inventor who imagined that any such fool contrivance would ever work!"

I have even heard of operators who have opposed MAZDA projection on the theory that it would make projection so simple that experienced men would not be needed in the booths. To this objection I reply that it is sheerest nonsense. I take it as a trite proposition of industrial ethics that any invention which improves the conditions under which a man works, automatically raises the standard of his craft and tends to increase remuneration for his services. The linotype machine, at first bitterly opposed by the printers of this country, is one of many proofs of this axiom.

Successfully to project pictures with MAZDA lamps requires as complete a knowledge of the art as under the old arc-lamp regime, while the steady quality of the incandescent light gives an operator more time to watch his picture on the screen and to keep his films clean and in first class running condition.

But the big advantage of MAZDA Projection from the operator's standpoint is the matter of health! No more fumes in the booth--no more tuberculosis! That's the thing which should recommend these lamps to all of us who are familiar with the disastrous inroads of this terrible disease in our brotherhood.

And finally, the saving of operating costs! In the great majority of installations, my adapters and MAZDA lamps save the theaters 75% of the cost of current, so our grateful friend, Mr. Exhibitor, is not likely to commit himself to a policy of further retrenchment.

It is my firm conviction, therefore, that incandescent projection stands for better working conditions, improved health, an elevated industrial standard, and in the long run, a higher wage scale.

Yours fraternally,

Oscar M Sheck

War—Peace—Prosperity

PREPARATION against war is one of the most potent influences toward peace.

Preparations for peace are the most potent influences toward prosperity.

While we are under the stress and strain of a world war—while our industries are working with every ounce of power toward its successful culmination we must not lose sight of that which is to come after the war clouds have passed over us.

Industries which before the war were making special goods for a special market but which are now making war supplies of various kinds can not afford to lose sight of the fact that a day of reckoning is coming. Unless they are prepared for peace they will come out again into the old markets and meet competition with companies which before the war they never even recognized.

The output of the old lines may be limited—perhaps temporarily given up entirely, yet can the man with the reputation to maintain afford to let his prestige and good will entirely evaporate? Absolutely not. He must keep his name up, he must let his old customers know that he intends later to be at the old stand serving the trade as before, but that for the present he feels it his patriotic duty to help the government to the utmost of his ability.

HOW can this be done? In one way only—Advertising—talking to your customers—keeping their faith in you stimulated—letting them know your plans for the future.

"Advertise without having goods enough to go around?" asks the manufacturer. "Preposterous!"

Not at all—the most logical thing in the world. The present condition is not going to last forever—every day brings the prosperity after war that much nearer and when it comes you must be on the mark ready to be off at the signal.

Mr. George Frank Lord, Director of Advertising for the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Co., which company with its allied interests is probably the largest single unit engaged in war manufacturing, yet one of the most prosperous manufacturers in peace times in the country, covered the subject in a recent speech in a way which shows the position taken by this great company which should be an example for all others.

"History records that all great wars have been followed soon by periods of intense reconstruction. That the present war surpasses all others in magnitude and destructiveness only means that its sequel of reconstruction will also surpass all others in magnitude.

"With the major portion of the world's cash in American hands, can there be any doubt that in this country construction of railroads, homes, factories, utilities and luxuries of every kind will leap forward at an unprecedented pace?

"The demand for everything of use or beauty is bound to be tremendous.

"The war has taught us that preparedness is really the longest word in the dictionary and also the strongest. We cannot start preparing for big business on the day peace is declared, any better than we started preparing for war on the day we declared war.

"Most emphatically I believe that now is not the time to stop advertising. On the contrary, it is the time to start more and better advertising than we have ever done before.

"Why should we hesitate to show our faith in the future of America by building for that future?"

THE same thing applies to all companies both great and small—the only difference is in the degree to which the principle is to be carried. It is the same in the Motion Picture Industry as in any other. Those companies who are hiding behind the war clouds as an excuse for not advertising are merely fooling themselves.

The theatres are prosperous. Smaller houses may have closed but those which are open are doing a greater volume of business than ever before. They are buying goods and many are taking cash discount who in the old days asked ninety days credit or more and in addition wanted 10 and 15 per cent discount from the list price.

Our Buyers Service Department handles requests for goods each week in quantities which prove that the business is not dead or even on its last legs.

Last week we had five letters asking for help in the construction of houses alone, all these men are planning theatres under 1,000 seats. This does not look like the death struggle of the small house or the last gasp of a dying industry.

The business is there—now—the exhibitors want to know what you have got—they want to know when and what to buy—they want to know what they are going to be able to get if they wait. Your announcements are as much news as the text itself.

It's the manufacturers' next move.

E. K. Gillett.

Equipment Operating — Projection — Questions Answered

Westinghouse Introduces Moderate Priced Rectifier

THE growing recognition of the fact that projection satisfactory to our present critical public can be secured only by use of direct current in an arc source has led to the development of several types of converting equipment, and many forms of each type. As is always the case, the first efforts in development were to produce equipment which was satisfactory in operation, leaving to later development the refinements and simplifications which reduce price.

The Westinghouse Elec. and Mfg. Co., East Pittsburgh, Pa., is announcing for the first time a simplified and inexpensive Mercury Arc Rectifier, the type WL projection lamp, which is the logical successor of the older forms of this type of equipment. In addition to the great price reduction, there have been made considerable improvements in the operating characteristics, which result in increased efficiency and power factor.

Westinghouse Type WL Rectifier

The type WL rectifiers are made in 30, 40 and 50 ampere models, which differ only in size and output and are very much alike in appearance and electrical characteristics. The reduction of line voltage to the necessary value, the provision of a neutral in the transformer, and the introduction of stabilizing reactance are all secured by means of a single auto-transformer, so designed that when the proper line voltage is applied to the primary, the secondary delivers through the bulb a steady, stable direct current of the characteristics best suited to projection. The accessory apparatus, included as part of the outfit, provides for its adaptation in line voltage slightly off the normal, automatic starting, and protection of the bulb against dangerous overloads.

A single change which can be instantaneously made adapts the outfit to the operation of the arc on alternating current.

The cast-iron frame in which the whole is mounted is small and compact, and besides offering a neat appearance protects the bulb against accidents.

The bulbs are of the now well known "Hard Glass" construction with which the Westinghouse Company has so greatly improved the average lives of their bulbs in the last three years.

Strand, Ft. Dodge, Has Classy Operating-Room

Mr. J. H. Anderson, Fort Dodge, Ia., sends the excellent photograph reproduced herewith and writes as follows:

"Never before have I butted into the projecting department of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, but for the last few months it has picked up wonderfully in the art of motion picture projection, and from now on you can count me in with the rest of the boys. I have been reading about the operating-room equipments in the NEWS and think it is great.

"I enclose you the photograph of the Strand theatre [Fort Dodge] operating room and kindly compare it with the Rivoli theatre in New York. I don't think they have anything on us, and later on I will send you a photo of the reading room, for the operators only, and the generator and experimental room.

"For a long time there has been a lot of talk about the operating room of the Rivoli theatre being such a world beater. New York is making a howl about nothing unusual, but at the same time it is some equipment, so you will have to hand it to them. Why not give us all a chance? The big noise iris diaphragm dissolvers, special Simplexes Martin Rotary Converter, speed indicators, special panel control switchboard, for all that they have nothing on the West.

"Iris diaphragm dissolvers, why we have forgotten all about them as being anything special; they are a necessity in a first-class house. And as for speed indicators, we have put them on the shelf. They are of no earthly good. No cameraman ever registered his speed at which a production has been taken. It would be impossible to tell a person the time of your next show, until you have once run it through your machine. Why spoil it for the mere sake of time?

"The instrument can be of no use until the producer sets a standard for camera speed. But nevertheless if Brother Lester Bowen can explain the advantage of this device it would be greatly appreciated and I will take my hat off to him.

"And they also mentioned the arc-controllers; will say they are great, but they have nothing on the Strand. We have been using Auto Arc for over a year, only there is quite a difference in the initial output of the Rivoli Arc controllers compared to the ones we use.

"When it comes to current, what is the matter with Old Man Westinghouse, Type 50 SK Generator, capable of delivering 120 amperes? You can't beat that; just like a National Cash Register, you can't beat it, so you see we have overstepped them once again. And here is one more; two Powers projectors, that project a picture as steady as a rock and with a determination up to the strength of the army and navy.

"Don't think for one minute that this is taking a slam at Brother Lester Bowen; it is only to show you that the West is as near to the front line as New York when it comes to projection and motion picture equipment, and far ahead in many other things."

Comment: Judging from the photograph, there is much to praise about Mr. Anderson's operating room, and the dominating feature appears to be its apparent cleanliness. We see clean towels strongly featured in the scheme of things, speaking well for the personal characteristics of the correspondent, and we also note the tooth-brush for cleaning the projector sprockets, and the projectors are in the sparkling condition which befits their importance as the keystone of a motion picture theatre.

The West is certainly to be congratulated upon the possession of such up-to-date projection installations, of which there are doubtless many others, and we are at all times glad to receive descriptions of the operating-rooms of our readers.

We can hardly agree with our correspondent's remarks concerning speed indicators, and we believe if he were to try out a high-class device, such as the Robin Cinema Time and Speed Indicator, he would acclaim it one of the most valuable devices amongst his equipment. It is true that the time necessary to run the various reels of the show can be noted when they are screened at the first performance, but the Robin Indicator, which is an extremely sensitive and accurate device, in addition to indicating the speed at which the machine is running (in pictures per second and feet per minute) supplies this information at a glance, so that the speed of the machine may be set, by reference to the indicator, to run off any given film in any desired length of time. This is a matter of importance in houses where the shows are run on a definite and exact schedule, and it will be apparent to the correspondent that it is much easier to regulate the show by observation of an accurate and complete time indicator than it is by reference to a clock. We heartily endorse Mr. Anderson's observation that no performance should be killed (by overspeeding) for the sake of time.

As Mr. Anderson concludes with the statement that the West is far ahead of New York in many things, we gallantly invite him to set forth the nature of some more of these improvements, and will also await with interest the promised photo of the operators' reading room, and the generator and experimental room at the Strand theatre, Fort Dodge. We hope that readers of the Projection Department may be provided from time to time with details of the work carried on in that experimental room.

Lens Dimensions, Etc.

Jacob Sheetz, Northampton, Pa., propounds the following questions:

(1) What size projection lens am I using on the Power 6 A machine, a quarter or a half-size?

(2) How is the focus of the projector lens measured? I do not quite understand the meaning of "aperture."

(3) What is a rectifier, or in other words, how does it change the current from A.C. to D.C.? Are they expensive and are they proven to be a success?

In Reply: We first of all compliment the correspondent on putting forth his questions in an intelligent and straightforward manner, and will try to clear the various points up for him in the order given.

Unless a half-sized lens was especially ordered when the Powers machine was purchased, the correspondent can be pretty certain that he is not working with such an objective. It is easy, however, to ascertain whether the lens is a half-size one or whether it is something smaller. If it is a half-size lens, the diameter of its component glasses will be 3½ inches wide, or upwards, which is considerably in excess of the diameter of the customary cine projection lens. Half-size lenses are not supplied as regular equipment by any of the makers of projection machines, so the correspondent will probably find that he has an ordinary objective of smaller dimensions, such as are commonly termed quarter-size. While we are on the subject of the half-size lens, we might state that it can be shown that there is no advantage whatever in the use of objectives of such large aperture in motion picture projection.

The most important focal measurement of a projection lens is its equivalent focus (E.F.), for it is the E.F. which determines the size of the projected picture. The focal value marked on the lens barrel by the manufacturer is the E.F., so it is hardly ever necessary for an operator to make this measurement. In case an operator does require to ascertain the E.F. of his projection lens, it is important, however, to set about this in the right way, and as the instructions given in all of the Handbooks are incorrect, the following suggestions are in order.

The E.F. of a projection lens, or any other positive lens, is the distance behind the second principal point at which a parallel incident ray cuts the axis after refraction by the lens, and this value is the E.F. marked by the makers on projection lenses.

We do not enter here upon the details by which E.F. is measured, because this has just been thoroughly explained, with diagrams and the necessary formulae, in the Camera Department, issue of February 9. The optical articles in the Camera Department are for the instruction of operators, as well as cinematographers, and by commencing at the beginning of the series, our operator readers will secure exact information on the action and properties of lens systems. In an early issue the study of the principal points (from which exact focal lengths are measured) will be extended to compound lens systems, such as projection objectives.

In the loose and ordinarily used sense, the term "aperture" means the ratio of the diameter of the lens glasses to the focal length; for instance, a lens of 4 inch E.F. the diameter of whose glasses is 1 inch, would be said to have an "aperture" or rapidity of f/4. This is in no wise a correct statement of the effective aperture of the lens, however; the aperture ratio is properly defined as the ratio of the diameter of the "entrance-pupil" to the focal length. As the subject of pupils is at present somewhat ahead of the operator, we must advise the correspondent to follow the optical articles in the Camera Department until we come to the detailed explanation of pupils and other things concerned with aperture. For his present requirements, however, he can assume that if he has two objectives of like E.F. but different diameter, the lens whose glasses have the largest diameter is the one of greatest aperture.

With regard to the Mercury Arc Rectifier, for changing A.C. into D.C. this cannot be treated in extenso at present, although a complete article on the subject is a possibility in the near future. Briefly, A.C. current after passing through an auto-transformer passes into a tube containing rarified mercury vapor. At the bottom of the tube, and connected with the incoming current, are two separated pools of mercury. By tipping the tube mercury from the two pools is splashed into contact, creating an arc across the mercury vapor in the tube.

Due to the manner in which the electrodes of the tube are arranged, the current from the mercury arc is rendered unidirectional, i. e., it can only leave the tube through a certain outlet, from which it passes to the arc as a D.C. current, but still of a pulsating character. In effect the ordinary A. C. waves are flattened out by the rectifier and their hollows somewhat filled in by a reactance, which is part of the outfit, and the result at the projector lamp is a light with D.C. characteristics. The Mercury Arc rectifiers, as made by the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse Company are an established success, and full descriptive information concerning them may be secured from the respective manufacturers. A description of the latest Westinghouse rectifier appears in the present issue.

Mutual "Screen Telegram" in Market for Topical Stuff

"SCREEN TELEGRAM," the twice-a-week news reel issued by the Mutual Film Corporation to supplant the Mutual Weekly, is in the market for negative on news and short feature subjects suitable for news reel purposes.

It offers an unusual opportunity for the "free lance" cameraman to submit negatives for purchase on a footage basis.

All negatives should be submited undeveloped, mailed to "Screen Telegram," 6235 Broadway, Chicago. Packages of important news film should be mailed special delivery. Each tin of news negative should contain an explanatory caption setting forth in detail the description of each scene. A duplicate caption should be mailed separately to Blaine McGrath, editor of "Screen Telegram," at the above Chicago address.

Frame lines of all negatives submitted must be between the sprocket holes and special mention must be made on captions of the light conditions under which the film was exposed. All unused negative and cut out parts of used negative will be returned.

Cameramen may obtain further information by writing Blaine McGrath.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Notice! Anti-Misframe League Members

Membership cards are now ready and are being sent out as fast as possible. There are a number of operators, however, who have neglected to send in the desired information. If you will fill out the blank and mail to this office, button and membership card will be forwarded.

Local 384 Has Service Flag

IN recognition of those of its members who have entered the country's service Local 384 of Hudson County, New Jersey, has secured a service flag, and the flag was recently raised at the headquarters of the organization.

The service flag of Local 384 bears ten stars, and the honor of raising it was accorded to Mr. Arthur Boldek of Hoboken, who is stationed at Camp McClellan, Ala., but happened to be home visiting friends.

Local 384 will hold a patriotic ball at Grand View, N. J., on February 27th, and it is planned to have several well known motion picture stars in attendance.

Speer Alterno Carbons

HAVE REVOLUTIONIZED ALTERNATING CURRENT CONDITIONS

Intense Illumination — Noiseless Projection

Wanderless Arc — Perfect Operation

No Change in Carbon Holders

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days.

The adoption of SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS merely necessitates the proper placing of the carbons in the upper and lower holders. No new housing, no additional lamp jaws, no adapters—simply the same equipment used for other carbons.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct. Operators and projection experts now declare that perfect projection is obtainable with alternating current equipment.

Operators' Inquiries

C. HOFFMAN, Albany, N. Y., "What kind of carbons should I use on 45 amperes A. C.? Let me know the proper sizes and thickness."

REPLY: The most recent developments in carbons for A. C. are the White A. C. Special of the National Carbon Company and the Alterno Noiseless made by the Speer Carbon Co. The National Co. recommend ⅝" White A. C. Specials for both top and bottom up to 60 amperes, and the Speer Co. recommend the use of Alternos of the same size with the current you mention.

C. J. PETERSON, Hallock, Mich., "What is the advantage in wiring two 110 volt rheostats in multiple?"

REPLY: The advantage is that one secures twice the amperage, minus certain slight losses due to the customary behavior of resistance, whereas by connecting two similar rheostats in series we secure only half of the output of either of them.

B. E. DICE, Tooele, Utah., "Tell me the reason I cannot get as good a light at the aperture of one of my machines as I do at the other? Everything is just alike on both machines and seems to be O. K. Both lamps are wired the same and draw the same amperage."

REPLY: Although the data is insufficient we suggest the following: Possibly the amperage is not the same at both arcs, and if separate resistances or other devices are used for the two lamps, it is very likely that the amperage is not identical in both cases. Have the amperages of the two arcs measured with an ammeter. Even though both arcs were found to be burning equal, an inferior condenser system could greatly reduce the intensity at the aperture of one machine. See if one set of condensers is not inferior in quality to the other set, or whether the condensers are not severely discolored, or roughened on the face next the arc, causing severe light scattering. For best results, all condensers should be polished every day.

G. E. WALKER, Enslet, Ala., "What will prevent oil leaking from the intermittent casing of the Powers 6A? I have tried shellac but it doesn't hold good."

REPLY: Shellac is generally found serviceable in sealing up the intermittent casing of the Powers mechanism so that it does not allow the oil to leak out, but the manner in which the shellac is applied can influence the result. Some operators put the cover of the casing in place, and then apply shellac around the edge where the cover and casing come together. This frequently prevents the oil from leaking, but it is best before putting on the cover of the casing to apply some shellac to the rim of the casing and to likewise apply some shellac to the inside of the cover near the edge. When the cover is then secured in place and some shellac applied around the outside, at the point of junction, an oil-proof connection results. If it is found impossible to prevent the oil from dripping out, we recommend that a solid lubricant be tried.

R. M. SHIRK, Oskaloosa, Ia., "Why does the Motiograph speed-control pick up when arc of No. 2 machine is struck and remain at that speed?"

REPLY: The data supplied is too insufficient altogether to enable an intelligent reply to be given. It will be necessary for us to know the exact and entire manner in which the machines are connected to the supply and to each other, if they are operated from one single resistance or current saving device. The converter, rectifier or other source of current for the arcs should be specifically stated, and also the source to which machine motors are connected, not forgetting to show the speed-control connections. Upon receipt of a description and sketch setting forth these requisites we will be in a position to advise.

J. NELSON, Douglas, Ariz., "How are projector carbons manufactured, including the Holdarc and Silver-tip?"

REPLY: A description of the process of arc-light carbon manufacture would consume rather more space than its value to the practical projectionist would justify; nevertheless, we may prepare a brief article on the subject at some future time. An interesting book on the subject may, however, be consulted at Public Libraries. It is entitled "The Manufacture of Carbons for Electric Lighting and other Purposes" by Francis Jehl. The manufacturers of the Holdarc and Silver-tip carbons have not made known the methods by which they deposit the metallic coating on these special negative carbons. It is probably done by electro-plating, a process which can be readily studied up in text-books on the subject. As is now well known, a carbon coated with metal gives less resistance to the current than a plain carbon, and the use of such carbons as the negative electrodes of D. C. projection arcs results in improved steadiness of burning and makes the control of the arc much easier.

H. E. SMITH, Topeka, Kan., "What do you think of the Amberlux lens filter? Is it really good or just made to get the money?"

REPLY: The Amberlux lens filter, as is generally known, is a transparent glass disc of light yellow tinge intended to be placed before the condenser system of the projector. It imparts a yellowish tinge to the light projected on the screen and thus, it is claimed, reduces the eye fatigue incident to viewing the projected picture. It requires to be pointed out that as regards black and white images, or pictures, which are the basis of all cine positives, there is nothing selective about the action of the Amberlux filter, i.e., it not only reduces the intensity of the highlights of the pictures, but it reduces the brightness of the shadows as well. It would seem, therefore, that an equivalent result, as regards the reduction of retinal fatigue, would be more economically secured by reducing the amperage of the projector arc lamp.

H. J. PHILLIPS, Barnswell, S. C., "I have a small ghost in the center of my picture and I would like you to give me a remedy for it. I am using A. C. Special Carbons and have tried moving my lamp-house back and forward, but it does no good."

REPLY: The position of the lamp-house is frequently the cause of a ghost in the field of projected light, but as changes in its position have been tried in this instance we have to look elsewhere for the origin of the trouble. With the A. C. arc one gets two spots at the machine aperture which are substantially equal in intensity, and if the operator tries to utilize the combined light from the two spots the general result is a blue streak across the center of the projected picture. Under exceptionally favorable conditions, when the arc, or flame, between the carbons is only slightly bluish in color, the ghost may not be noticeable to the detriment of the screen results, but to eliminate the same in annoying cases it is necessary to so alter the setting of the carbons that one of the two equally bright tips is out of focus at the machine aperture, and to rely solely on the light from the remaining carbon tip for projecting the picture. This may be accomplished by advancing the lower carbon, in a manner similar to the customary D. C. trim, and if it is then found that the light from the upper carbon tip alone is not of sufficient intensity, the amperage at the arc must be increased. This inquiry indicates the wastefulness and disadvantages of A. C. projection

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBONS

FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT PROJECTION

The new White A. C. Special Carbon for motion picture work has proven conclusively that alternating current can be used to great advantage without expensive change in lamp fixtures. These carbons eliminate the roaring noise of the old A. C. arc.

The use of these carbons has reduced the cost of operation below that of the regular cored carbons. These new carbons operate at a lower arc voltage and use less current for the same screen illumination.

White A. C. Specials In Operation Burn With Perfect Craters on Both Carbons

White A. C. Specials give a strong, flexible light, variable at the will of the operator according to the thickness of the film. No two films are alike and no two parts of the same film are of the same density or thickness, consequently to give a true, artistic representation of any picture you must have a flexible light source. A trial will convince you.

The New "Duplex" Printer

WHEN the Duplex Machine Company of 316 Seventy-fifth street, Brooklyn, N. Y., introduced their "Duplex," or double, printer some three years ago, the convenience and value of their printing machine was immediately recognized by the laboratory technicians of the industry at large, and its consistent adoption by the majority of the largest laboratories testifies to the accuracy of construction and performance which the Duplex printer embodies.

In the course of time certain changes have suggested themselves to the manufacturers of the Duplex printer, which would add to the operating convenience of their already efficient machine, and would render increasingly certain the production of the highest quality of positive prints. The results of extensive and careful experimental work are concretely apparent in the latest Duplex printer, and an account of the modifications and new features will perhaps be of interest to producers and laboratory workers.

As the illustration shows, the Duplex printer consists of two complete positive printing machines mounted on one pedestal, and the printer may be installed with the minimum of trouble. A complete Duplex printer occupies but 26 inches of floor space and is made ready for use by simply connecting to the electrical current supply by means of a plug and socket attached to the motor housing at the lower part of the pedestal.

The threading and operation of the Duplex is likewise so simple as to readily be mastered, and a glance at the illustration will give an idea of how this is accomplished. Above each of the printing mechanisms are two metal discs upon which the roll of positive stock and the negative to be printed from are placed. The positive stock is placed on the front disc, and the negative is placed on the rear disc. To thread the machine the ends of both films are led under a roller above the feed sprocket, next over the feed sprocket, and then under a tension roller which maintains the film in position on the sprocket. Loops are now made in the films; a four-inch loop being made in the negative strip, which is innermost, and a five-inch loop in the positive stock which is outermost or nearest the operator. Allowing a larger loop in the positive film than that for the negative is a necessary precaution, as it prevents the scratches and frictional troubles which arise if the films are allowed to run in contact at this point.

The Duplex Printer

On their way to the exposure aperture the films next pass through the breaker-box, which resembles a continuation of the film track, or aperture-plate, and is located just above the gate. A spring contact attached to the track at one side of the breaker-box bears against the edge of the negative in its passage past this point, and serves to operate the light-changing mechanism through the agency of notches cut in the edge of the film near the points where changes of scene occur in the negative. An important improvement in the construction of this breaker-box is that the width of the film track may be adjusted, thus insuring the proper operation of the light-changer, even in the case of old and severely shrunken films.

During its passage from the discs at the top of the machine to the exposure aperture, and also from the aperture to the take up, the film can come in contact with nothing except guards or tracks of highly polished metal, which are readily kept clean and afford no opportunity for the accumulation of oil or grit which might otherwise scratch the films.

Returning to the passage of the films through the Duplex printer, after the formation of the proper sized loops at the top the film is led through the breaker-box, which has a small gate provided with two tension-shoes of tempered steel. This gate is closed upon the films thus providing a steadying tension prior to the passage of the film past the exposure aperture where the printing contact is supplied in a most perfect manner by the tension-gate proper. When the films, in contact with one another, have been placed in contact with the exposure aperture and the tension-gate of the machine closed upon them, they are again looped below the gate and then pass to the take-up sprockets. The size of the loops below the gate is just the opposite from that at the top; a five-inch loop is now to be made in the negative strip and a four-inch loop in the positive stock. The illustration shows the arrangement of the take-ups for the negative and positive film strips, and gives an idea of the method of threading. It is seen that the films after being passed under the tension rollers adjacent to each sprocket are now run over the sprockets and attached to the take-up spindles. All of the take-ups on the latest Duplex printer are provided with sliding discs, similar to those used on laboratory re-winders, which facilitate the removal of the rolls of film after a print has been run off.

The printing aperture and tension gate are vital features of a positive printing machine, and have received careful consideration in the designing and construction of the Duplex printer, and as the result of this attention prints made on the Duplex reproduce to the utmost the sharpness embodied in the negatives printed from.

The aperture plate is made from hardened steel, machined and ground with the utmost accuracy. The plate is relieved in the center so as not to bear upon the image area of the negative strip, and is finished so smoothly as to prevent scratching of the film.

The tension gate is of new and improved style, and in addition to bringing the negative and positive films into absolute contact at the exposure aperture it is designed so as to afford the operator a clear view at all times of the images when they are before the printing aperture. This positive contact, which is so essential to the production of sharp prints, is in reality a double contact, consisting of a square bronze pressure plate, with a separate square pressure plate of glass protruding through its center. The bronze pressure plate bears against the margins of each image, at the instant of printing, while the central glass pressure plate, which has a slightly convex face, bears against the center of the films and flattens them into absolute contact. By an arrangement of cams this double pressure plate is withdrawn from contact with the films when they are moving downward between successive pictures, and in this way undue strain or friction on the films is avoided. Near the top of each gate is located a framing knob for centering the images before the exposure apertures, and as the exposure aperture and the breaker-box move together when framing a picture, the notches along the edges of the film maintain a relationship with the aperture which causes the light changing device to always operate at exactly the proper instant.

The intermittent substitution of pictures before the exposing aperture of the Duplex printer is accomplished by a claw movement of rugged construction, and in the latest model Duplex the claws have been further strengthened, as have also the guides in which they run and the cams by which they are actuated. The claws are so designed that they will handle a variety of styles of perforations of different dimensions and still produce a rock steady print of the customary Duplex quality, and in addition all parts of the movement have been so designed that they may be easily replaced with very little effort on the part of the operator.

When it is desired to put the Duplex printer into operation the motor is started by means of a snap switch on the motor housing below the mechanism, but while this starts the motor, the printing mechanisms do not go into operation until the operator starts them, by turning the clutch handles seen in the figure, just beside the respective pressure-gates.

By turning these clutches outward the printing mechanisms are put in operation at will, and the printing operation is just as easily stopped at any instant by turning the clutch handles back to their original positions. The clutch by which the motive power is communicated to the printing mechanisms is of a rugged and effective type, and causes the printing to start instantly when the handle is turned outwards.

The source of motive power is a 1/6 h.p. motor mounted in the motor housing below the mechanisms, and the power is conveyed to the printers through gearing and an upright, or vertical, shaft. At the lower end, this driving shaft communicates with the motor through two worm gears, one being made of steel and the other of manganese bronze, which, it will be apparent, is a durable and long wearing combination. These worm gears which transmit the power from the motor to the upright driving shaft run in a gear housing which is attached to the motor casting direct and virtually is a part of the motor. This relieves the extra long motor spindle from the weight of the worm gears and gear housing, which latter is packed with grease, assuring the steady operation of the upright driving shaft at all times. The driving shaft is supported at its upper end in two S. K. F. ball bearings, and is provided with a pinion which actuates two transverse shafts connecting with the printer mechanisms through the medium of the starting clutches. Any necessary adjustments to the mechanisms may be made by removing the back of the main mechanism frame, which is conveniently held in place by two thumb nuts, and the printing lights, in the form of 60 Watt Mazda globes are also installed or renewed by removing this back cover. To oil the important running parts of the new Duplex printer it is not necessary, however, to remove any casings or covers, as a series of eighteen tubes terminating in oil holes at the top of the mechanism serve to convey the lubrication to every bearing where it is required.

On the earlier models of the Duplex printer the changing of the light, to suit the varying densities of the scenes on the negative, was accomplished by a hand operated lever, which, by varying the opening in the revolving shutter, gave a range of variations in the intensity of the printing light. This method of light changing was eventually augmented by "automatic" light-changers, which operate electrically through the instrumentation of notches cut in the edge of the film at suitable positions. On the latest Duplex printer the hand operated light change has been done away with entirely, and a highly perfected type of "automatic" now accomplishes the work of altering the printing light to suit the densities of the various scenes of the negatives being printed.

This improved "automatic" is the result of extensive experience in constructing electrically operated light changing devices, and the limitations of many previous types of automatic have been taken into consideration in designing it. The automatics are shown in place above each printer mechanism in the illustration, and the Duplex Machine Co. can also supply their automatic light changers for use with other makes and styles of printers, with which they are found to operate successfully.

As the automatics are such an important factor in the performance of the Duplex printer, a short description of their improved features will not be amiss. The light changing movement consists of an accurate escapement which is operated by an electro-magnet very accurately wound so as to operate the escapement instantaneously when a contact is made at the breaker-box. As the illustration shows, the intensity of the printing light is controlled by a light bar which is so operated that it comes successively into contact with a series of plugs, on the front of the automatic, corresponding to the various scenes on the negative strip. Each of these contacts puts the requisite amount of resistance in series with the printer light, and it is thus that the printing intensities are governed. The new Duplex automatic has a capacity of 18 different light intensities and will also change the light for 18 successive scenes at one setting.

When the proper printing intensities have been ascertained for each scene of a given roll of negative, a card is punched with a series of holes corresponding to these light values. The card is then mounted on the front face of the automatic and plugs are inserted through the holes in the card, which is only used as a guide to the insertion of the bronze plugs, and may be removed before printing is commenced.

With the older types of Duplex automatic, the light-bar was in contact all the way across the front of the contact panel, but with the present model only one of the contact buttons on the inner side of the light-bar is in contact with one contact plug at any time. This allows the bar to drop so easily, when the automatic is operated, that a greater pressure can be supplied to its buttons, which assures excellent contact between them and the plugs through which the light changes are accomplished, and also climinates any possibility of arcing when the light-bar drops from one position to the next. Electric current is supplied to the magnet which operates the escapement and light-bar of the automatic by the starting clutch of the printer, and is cut off, when the printer is stopped, through the medium of a switch which operates in unison with the clutch handle. If the machine is run without a negative film in place, the breaker box will supply a continuous current to the magnet which might cause it to burn out, but this is avoided by disconnecting the flexible wire cord and plug through which the current reaches the automatic. The current is cut off from the printing lamps when the light-bar is opened for the insertion of the card and the contact plugs, while the current is in turn cut off from the light-bar by opening the switch shown at the bottom of each automatic. If the current is left flowing through the light-bar a shock can be sustained if the hands of the operator come into contact with it when arranging the contact plugs. In former models the light-bar was exclusively shifted by electricity through the medium of the contact in the breaker-box above the machine gate, but the perfected escapement of the new Duplex automatic terminates in a handle at the top by which the light-bar can be raised or lowered by hand to any desired position.

A film notching device supplied with the printer is used to cut notches in the edge of the film at any point where a change in the printing light is required. This notching device is provided with a guage which indicates the exact point at which the film should be notched, in order that the change of light shall occur exactly at the dividing line between scenes.

Gilbert, Friedland and Lewis Write a Hit

L. WOLFE GILBERT, Anatol Friedland, and Henry Lewis, the popular Broadway comedian, have turned out another winner in "I'm the Brother of Lily of the Valley." Every one who ever played "Lily" for pictures or dances knows what a big winner it was, and those who did can be assured—the writers swear to it—that the answer song to "Lily" is a better number.

While the song has not been out more than a few weeks, singers and leaders with time to make the rounds of publishers are clamoring for it. And Mr. Gilbert will not be offended if twice as many musicians who used "Lily" write in for her brother.

"Are You from Heaven?" by Gilbert and Friedland, is looming up like a real honest-to-goodness hit, and every day it is finding way into more vaudeville and picture houses.

And speaking of vaudeville houses, it is not stretching matters to say that approximately all publishers are pleased to know that one of their numbers is being featured in a vaudeville theatre, and more than pleased to know when one is put on at the Palace theatre, even though a dozen other songs are used the same day. To have a number introduced and featured at the Palace gives a song a certain amount of class. Then imagine how Jos. W. Stern & Co. must feel to know that two of their songs, "When the Moon Is Shining" and "Send Back Dear Daddy to Me," are featured every day by Detty Peterson at the Broadway theatre.

Miss Peterson is the only singer there, which means that the songs could not have found a better spot.

Since this country became active in the war many of the better class of picture theaters and hotels are taking more and more to popular music, and whether it is because the present crop of songs is better or the owners of the theatres and hotels wish to serve light music as an antidote for heavy feelings is rather difficult to say. The hotels and theatres, especially the better class, could be made valuable channels of exploitation, if proper and business-like methods were adopted in getting the numbers to the leaders and owners. Some song pluggers not infrequently place publishers in a bad light with leaders and owners by employing obnoxious methods and making pests of themselves.

Fred. Forster, the Chicago publisher, has never bothered leaders or allowed pluggers to make pests of themselves, and yet practically every leader of any account in the country has been featuring "Missouri Waltz" and "Blue Rose Waltz."

Fred Vandersloot is another out-of-town publisher who knows how to induce leaders to feature his publications. He has a system all of his own that does not require the services of any pluggers, but just how he turns the trick he refuses to divulge. Without as much as having a New York office, Fred has had "I Wondere How the Old Folks Are Tonight" featured by singers, leaders and phonograph men, and has sold more than a million copies. Two weeks ago the Oakland Tribune carried the chorus of "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are" in a war dispatch from "Over There."

E. M. WICKES.

General Comments

LEO FEIST has just issued a pocket size booklet bearing the title, "Songs the Soldiers and Sailors Sing," containing about thirty choruses, words and music, of the most popular numbers of the eason. The booklet sells for fifteen cents and can be obtained at any music counter.

F. J. A. Forster has gone to the Coast for three months, but his business in Chicago will continue the same as ever. The firm has just brought out a new number by Frederick Knight Logan, entitled "The Military Waltz."

L. W. Gilbert and Anatol Friedland have returned from Chicago, where they played in vaudeville for a week. While in Chicago they opened a branch office to handle the rush of performers after their new numbers.

James Casey, prime mover in The Echo Music Co., is trying to figure out who is responsible for the sudden rush of eastern orders for "My Golden West" and "My Hawaii, I Hear You Calling Me."

Sol. P. Levy, who has made a specialty of writing motion picture music, has just placed "That's My Girl," with the Times Music Co., 145 West Forty-fifth street, a new concern in the popular field.

For patriotic photoplays, "When the Yanks Come Marching Home," by Wm. Jerome, is an ideal number, and more leaders are beginning to realize this every day.

Hamilton S. Gordon's "Motion Picture Music Collection" is growing in favor with leaders and pianists all over the country.

Musical Review of Latest Publications

1—"Are You from Heaven?" by Gilbert and Friedland. A remarkably effective and Melodious composition, most appropriate for Love Themes and Scenes. (Gilbert and Friedland Edition, 230 W. 46th St., New York City.)

2—"It's a Hundred to One You're from Dixie," by Gilbert and Friedland, an exceptional clever composition, splendidly arranged and most appropriate for any light or comedy situation. (Gilbert and Friedland Edition, 230 W. 46th St., New York City.)

3—Autumn Day (Waltz), by E. M. Rosner. A very melodious Waltz, by a composer of international reputation, a number most appropriate for Society Pictures. (W. A. Quincke Edition, Los Angeles, Cal.)

4—"Valley Rose Ballad," by Evans Lloyd. A beautiful Andante con expressivo movement, considered to be the greatest ballad ever written by an American writer. It is a composition of artistic value from a musical standpoint, and still so wonderfully constructed that the listener or player after hearing it once is bound to remember it forever. For pathetic scenes and the like, this composition is unreplaceable. (Publ. by Jeff Branen, 145 W. 45th St., N. Y. C.)

5—"Prudence" (Entr'acte), by Ernst Luz. A number in gavotte style effectively arranged. Illustrates romance. Lends itself easily to different tempos, making it valuable for playing to the Photoplay. A melodious number throughout. (J. W. Stern Edition, N. Y. C.)

6—"Summer and Winter," six Piano pieces by Theodora Dutton:

1—At Grandmother's Fireside.
2—Dancing in the Moonlight.
3—In a Jaunting-Car.
4—The Jovial Gypsy.
5—The Lotus Lake.
6—A Skating Party.

In this little set of numbers the suggestions of the titles are carried out with a sense for happy melodic. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

7—"My Hawaii, You're Calling Me," by L. W. Lewis. The style of this wonderful Hawaiian ballad is quite a contrast to the other Hawaiian compositions published up to date—"My Hawaii" is a triumph of tonal beauty, and must be considered as a very valuable addition to the library of any musician. (Published by the Echo Music Co., New York and Seattle.)

8—Dramatic Narrative, by Pauline Pement. A melodious composition of exceptional tonal beauty, especially composed to portray "Scenes of Reminiscence." (Cineman Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bldg., N. Y. C.)

9—"Harbor of Dreams," Reverie, by J. R. Shannon. A composition opening with a melodious "¾ Expressive Movement," finishing with an exceptional fine Trio—most appropriate for Love Themes. (Vandersloot Music Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

10—"Just as Your Mother Was," by Harry von Tilzer. Another famous masterpiece by this well-known composer. A melodious and most delightful composition. (Published by Harry von Tilzer, 222 West 46th St., N. Y. C.)

11—"Liberty Lads," March, by Lee Orean Smith. An Alla-Breve March, in the Spirit of the Hour. (Leo Feist Edition.)

12—"The Rainbow," March, by Louis Maurice. A swinging 6/8 March, by the composer of the "Great Divide" and "The Fighting Hope." (Leo Feist Edition.)

13—"Love's Melody" (Reverie), by Shannon. A charming slow movement, with a most delightful melody; most appropriate for Love Scenes. (Vandersloot Edition.)

14—"Land of Joy." New York's big, smashing Spanish Musical Success—has been published by G. Schirmer, 3 East 43rd St., New York City, and a "Selection Waltz" and "One-step" from this show are now obtainable at special reduced prices.

15—"When the Yanks Come Marching Home." One-step, by Jerome and Furth. A worthy song to go with the great hit, "Over There." A wonderful overnight success. You never played a better dance for orchestra. (Published by Jerome Pub. Co., New York City.)

16—"Love in April," A Love Song, by Christian Kriens. The writings of Kriens need no introduction, and this is a wonderful melody—splendidly arranged. (Carl Fischer Edition.)

Exterior and View of Auditorium, New Royal Theatre, New York City

New Theatre Appeals to Big N. Y. City District

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that William Yuist has just purchased the new Royal theatre, at the northwest corner of Forty-sixth street and Tenth avenue New York City. It is located in a section of the city that has received very little recognition from the motion picture interests, and until this building was erected the residents of that section were compelled to walk several blocks for their diversion.

The building is American colonial in design and the simplicity of the architecture gives it the atmosphere of cheerfulness and comforted. It is heated and ventilated by the Typhoon System and is equipped with one of the latest model Photoplayers. The seats were furnished by A. H. Andrews Company. All of the other equipment of the house is of the very latest design and everything is provided to give comfort to the body and the eye.

Des Moines to Have New Theatre

THE Rialto, the new $100,000 Des Moines moving picture house being built by the Hawkeye Amusement Company—managed by Abe Frankel—is now in the skeleton period of construction.

The location of the new house should be its biggest asset. It is on Locust street, on which are five other motion picture houses. It follows the western growth of the town, being on the corner of Eighth and Locust, and is next door to the new thirteen-story Register-Tribune building.

The Rialto will seat 1,200—main floor and balcony. Opera chairs will be mahogany, upholstered in Delft blue velour. Side panels will be ivory and blue. The lighting system will be indirect, by means of big globes, and soft side-wall lights.

A Robert Morton Symphony Orchestral organ will be installed, calling for only one operator but giving over forty separate instrumental effects.

The forty-four-foot street front will be finished in terra cotta, and the name of the current bill will be flashed in electric lights.

The Hawkeye Amusement Company operates the Casino and Majestic, also showing Triangle, Artcraft and Paramount and Perfection pictures.

Lighting Features Reading House

THREE color lighting system is one of the notable features of the Colonial theatre, Reading, Pa., a house which can compare with the most modern through the country. It is owned by Carr & Schade and was built in 1916.

The interior of the theatre is decorated in gold and brown, this work having been done by William Eckart of the Eckart Studios.

The theatre seats 2,000, the greater portion of the seats being on the lower floor, yet there is an ample gallery with a large number of exits and side boxes on the upper floor.

Addressing Multigraphing Printing Typewriting

Why the Rivoli Picked Porter

WITH the opening of the Rivoli theatre, B. F. Porter, pioneer in projection engineering, again comes to the force, for it was he who was selected by E. L. Rothapfel to supervise the purchase and the arrangement of all the apparatus. He did the work at the Rialto, and as at that theatre two of the latest type Simplex projectors are used.

A number of years ago Mr. Porter became convinced that projection was not keeping pace with the quality of the pictures themselves. That was in 1910 when he was one of the incorporators of the Precision Machine Company and for several years its manager. But he did not give up his hobby when he resigned from that company and opened a showroom at Broadway and Forty - second street. His purpose was not only to sell the Simplex, but to render service as a projection expert.

He realized early that it would not do to simply "build a theatre and put in projectors," but that the problem was a complicated one, in no two cases alike, and in every case worthy of deep, intelligent study and careful decision, in order that the success of the enterprise might not be jeopardized.

The projection scheme of any theatre does indeed present a many sided problem which cannot be solved by merely putting your finger on a "projection lens table" and ordering projectors with lenses of the focus therein indicated.

By studying and working out in practice all the many details entering into such problems, Mr. Porter soon won the confidence of those who realized that it requires an expert to specify projection equipment and accessories to secure results that pay.

Many exhibitors have engaged him for such work, leaving the selection of complete equipment entirely to his expert judgment, and held him responsible for the performance of the apparatus, with the result that the projection in many theatres has been vastly improved.

For after all, many good theatres have lost patronage through poor projection. The public will often overlook the quality of a picture when it is properly presented and projected with brightness and clearness on the screen.

This concentration upon the problem has brought recognition of a very substantial character, which is best shown by the fact that he equipped the largest and finest theatres in the world.

Among these may be mentioned the first, finest and largest at the time, the Regent, at 116th street and Seventh avenue, New York, of which S. L. Rothapfel was then managing director. The next big theatre was the Olympia, at 107th street and Broadway; then the Strand, at 47th street and Broadway soon followed, as well as the great New York Hippodrome and many of the largest theatres in the country, including Poli's 4,000 seat Palace theatre, at New Haven, Conn.

When big feature pictures were produced and presented at admission prices never before dreamed of, only the utmost in projection would do, so Mr. Porter was engaged to equip the Liberty theatre for the first presentation on Broadway of D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" and also "Intolerance."

Then came the fitting up of the Criterion theatre for Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization." In fact he made the installations on Broadway for nearly all of the big producers of pictures for their initial presentations.

And when big features were roaded throughout the world, it was Mr. Porter who specified the equipment. Many more prominent names could be added to the list but it would prove wearisome. Enough have been mentioned in number and importance to educate the exhibitor to build his theatre around his projection.

Directory of New Theatres

MAINE

The roof has been put on the new moving picture theatre for H. Mayo, Southwest Harbor.

MICHIGAN

Dr. P. P. Duket of Chicago is erecting a modern new hotel, with a capacity of 250 rooms and a combined vaudeville and motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,500, at Sault Ste. Marie.

Arrangements practically completed call for the erection of a four-story structure on the lot at the southwest corner of Maple and Court streets, opposite the court house, and the complete remodelling of the present Murray Hill building. The new structure will be four stories in height, and an additional story will be built on the Murray Hill building.

NEW JERSEY

The new motion picture theatre being erected at Seaside Park for A. C. Lewis is fast approaching completion. It will be known as the Lorraine.

NEW YORK

Lorenzo Smith, whose property in Clinton street, Gouverneur, was recently destroyed by fire, says he will replace it with a modern theatre, work on which will be started as soon as the weather permits. It will be located on the site of Fairyland theatre and will have a large plate-glass front. The main floor will seat 550 people and the balcony 250. The stage will be approximately 35 x 25 feet, with gradual slope.

Since the Union Hall block was remodeled about three years ago, Gouverneur has been without an opera house. Public meetings and entertainments, which formerly were held in Union Hall, have been held in churches and fraternal halls.

OHIO

Negotiations have been closed in a deal whereby Fine & Kramer, Meadville, Pa., have sold to A. G. Phillips, owner of the Meadville Daily Messenger, two Meadville theatres and will come to Cleveland immediately to start operations on a new photoplay house here.

Mr. Fine, one of the owners of the Denison Square theatre, and Mr. Kramer have bought the Zimmerman block at Lorain avenue and West Thirtieth street, which they will remodel. This, with an addition to be built on adjoining land, will give them a theatre seating 1,200 persons. There also will be room on the ground floor for two store-rooms. Fine & Kramer have acquired a parcel of land 84 x 200 feet. Building operations will start as weather conditions permit.

OKLAHOMA

James Hues is erecting a modern motion picture theatre on D avenue, between Second and Third streets; Lawton, to be 75 x 100, and will be the biggest and best-equipped playhouse in this section of the country.

OREGON

St. Helens is to have another theatre. L. R. Rutherford has awarded a contract to Christian Spies, a Portland contractor, for the erection of a theatre building 35 x 102 feet. The theatre will be built in the rear of the Rutherford block on Columbia street, and entrance will be from Columbia street. Hollow tile will be used in the construction of the building, so that it will be fireproof. A stage 18 x 24 with ample scenery and setting will be provided, in the event that the showhouse books attractions other than the movies. The contract price of the building is $4,000, and it is expected to have it ready for occupancy in sixty days. The seating capacity of the showhouse will be 425, and steam heat and a good ventilating system will make the place comfortable.

Plans for a $30,000 unit of the coliseum for the State Fair grounds at Salem have been approved by the members of the State Fair Board. Not having sufficient money on hand with which to complete the structure, only the first of two units will be built this year. For this purpose a surplus of about $15,000, realized from the 1917 exhibition, will be used.

The board expects to have the first unit completed for use at the fair this Fall.

Lewis I. Thompson of Portland is the architect delegated with the work of the coliseum. The completed plans will be out in two weeks. The building will be 200 x 300 feet in dimensions, of brick, with a seating capacity of 8,000, or almost twice the largest seating capacity of the Portland Auditorium. The arena will be built according to nationally accepted regulations, and will be 100 x 200 feet, without posts, and of truss roof, one of the largest trusses in the country being used. The coliseum will be naturally lighted, a modern idea of light and ventilation being employed. All Oregon products will be used.

Beneath the seats there will be a display section 1,000 feet in length, to be used for auto display rooms, concessions and a few stalls for extra fine livestock.

Several novel features will be employed in the construction, one of which is the provision for a subway system of entering the seat auditorium. There need be no passing down aisles and in front of others, according to the plan Mr. Thompson has worked out. The completed structure, according to Mr. Thompson's plans, will cost $75,000.

Mr. Thompson also is the architect for the new livestock pavilion to be erected by the Pacific International Livestock Exposition, at a cost of about $250,000.

TEXAS

An airdome is to be built for use in Waco during the warm months, according to the plans of A. L. Mitchell and A. H. Simon, proprietors of the Majestic theatre. The building is to be located in the L-shaped space between the office of the water board and the Y. M. C. A, and the lot north of the Y. M. C. A.

The leases of these two lots have been secured by the two gentlemen who have the matter in charge, and the work will begin on them in the near future. It is planned to expend about $5,000 for the building, and it will seat from 2,500 to 3,000 people. The proprietors plan to make this the most popular entertainment resort of the city during the summer months, and will show motion pictures and family vaudeville.

WASHINGTON

Work of remodeling the old Pantages theatre, Tacoma, is about to be commenced, and when completed will be reopened as a motion picture theatre under the management of Edwin F. James.

Dr. H. M. Johnson has begun the erection of a new theatre on the east side of South Toppenish avenue, Toppenish, and expects to have everything in readiness for opening early in March.

Rains and floods will not delay the construction of the new theatre at the corner of Market and Ninth streets, Tacoma, being erected by John S. Baker and H. T. Moore, if Architect R. E. Borhek carries out his present plans. Borhek is preparing to stretch canvas over the site of the new building so the work can go forward despite the rain, figuring that the time gained in the construction of the building will offset the extra cost of providing the canvas shelter. Work is now progressing on the foundations of the new theatre.

The new Pantages theatre, recently erected at Ninth and Broadway, Tacoma, was opened recently under most auspicious circumstances. Gov. Ernest Lister, Mrs. Lister, and their dauyhter; Mayor A. V. Fawcett and his wife and children; William Jones, who bought the property in 1898 and is responsible for its present development; Alex. Pantages, whose faith in Tacoma has resulted in his leasing of the exquisite playhouse; his manager, T. J. Myers, whose first appearance with amusements in Tacoma dates back twenty-eight years; all these and many others of Tacoma's most prominent citizens were present to assist in the dedication.

The new Star theatre at Everett was opened in a blaze of glory a few days ago, much to the delight of Manager Totten and the entire satisfaction of immense audiences. Many changes for the better have been made in this playhouse under the direction of A. W. Thoms, a local decorator.

WISCONSIN

Charles Cohen, proprietor of the Lyric theatre, Wauhaca, will close the house after Sunday during the week opening only on Saturdays and Sundays until further notice, to give opportunity for the improvements he contemplates making in the theatre. The room recently used by W. J. Olson will be added to theatre space and the entire proscenium will be redecorated and improved, and the seating capacity increased to 300.

Under a hydraulic pressure of nine hundred tons the sharp reliefs and beautiful detail of "Classik" ceilings are formed with a clearness and accuracy that can never be attained by the usual drop hammer process.

"BERGER'S Classik" STEEL CEILINGS

The repressed bead used in the "Classik" system, together with the accurate forming makes joints practically invisible and the finished ceiling has all the beauty and continuity of molded plaster, without its disadvantages and dangers.

These ceilings are made in a wide variety of artistically correct classified designs. You'll find a number of "Classik" patterns, any one of which will blend with and unify your plan of decoration, whatever it may be.

The beautiful cornice and beam effects, possible with the "Classik" system, are particularly adapted to theatres, and this system also offers you a wide choice of suitable and attractive designs for your proscenium arch or your walls and partitions.

"Classik" Steel Ceilings are a positive fire-retardant. Time and again entire buildings have been saved because the "Classik" ceilings checked the spread of the flames until the firemen could arrive

These ceilings also relieve you from the menace of falling plaster. An accident of this sort in your theatre will inevitably mean a loss of patronage. "Classik" ceilings cannot fall, chip or crack. Painted in the popular flat tones they afford a uniform perfect surface that will retain its beauty indefinitely.

A "Classik" Steel Ceiling will make your old theatre beautiful and safe. It will make your new theatre attractive and give you added safety and permanence.

Looking at Things from the Right Angle

The grocer who magnifies the importance of quality of merchandise to the extent of neglecting courtesy, appearance of store and neatness of clerks is bound to fail. And so is the one who installs mahogany fixtures and employs a Beau Brummel to sell flour with weevils in, rotten potatoes and rancid butter. All this applies equally to the Motion Picture business. A House with dirt floors, grocery boxes for seats and mouth-organ music would be a financial failure with the best of projection. On the other hand, it is folly to magnify the trimmings at the expense of the main thing—projection. Take a hint from the Master Exhibitor, of Rialto and Rivoli fame. After going the limit in beauty, music and appointments he didn't say: "Now it doesn't matter much what kind of projection I give the people." Not on your life he didn't! He looks at things from the right angle. His success is due to that. Therefore, Simplex projection for him. Now the beauty of all this is that you can have projection exactly as good as these Motion Picture Palaces, and it will cost you less in the long run. For the Simplex is so built as to be almost repairless. That's one of the reasons for the permanence of its perfect projection. (When the better costs less, is there any excuse left for choosing what is less good?)

A proposition as good as the SIMPLEX looks good from any angle

"The Wooing of Princess Pat"

The Story of a Capricious Girl Transformed into a Woman by the Miracle of Love

by WILLIAM ADDISON LATHROP
Directed by WILLIAM P·S·EARLE

In this most appealing love story of a firey but lovable little aristocrat who rebels at signing a contract to marry a man she has never seen, Gladys Leslie, known everywhere as "the girl with the million dollar smile," is given an ideal vehicle for the display of that distinctive charm that has made her a nation-wide favorite.

And in the opposite role is J. Frank Glendon, whose work as the star of many of the widely-advertised O. Henry features has gained him a large and constantly growing following.

Charles Kent, "dean of the screen," William Dunn, Templar Saxe, Bigelow Cooper, Carlton King and other widely known players appear in the supporting cast.

4,000 Exhibitors now have "That Goldwyn Feeling"

EXHIBITORS everywhere are making a profit by presenting Goldwyn Pictures in their theatres—and today profits come ahead of everything else.

Goldwyn productions are stronger and the Goldwyn stars have gained tremendously in popular favor. Next to profits these points are second in importance to exhibitors.

Only a letter like this one from Ned Burns, manager of the New Theatre, Staunton, Va., can describe the enthusiasm and confidence of the 4,000 Goldwyn Pictures exhibitors of North America:

"Goldwyn has established a record for consistency in high-grade production. A feeling of pride goes with the presentation of Goldwyn Pictures. This feeling makes a manager want to stand in his lobby and say to his people: 'Come in and see what I've got. Nobody in the world has anything finer.' . . . .

"We are pleased with the service you give us. We are a small town customer and we value the fair and kindly consideration we receive."

Goldwyn invites the many exhibitors who have not yet booked Goldwyn productions to test the strength of our stars and productions on the basis of box-office profits.

TRIANGLE

Here's the Proof

You have read our recent advertisements describing the new Triangle policy towards exhibitors. We have told you of the box office value of Triangle pictures, of the fair and square business methods of Triangle, and of the fact that Triangle prices enable any exhibitor to make money.

We have also told you that exhibitors appreciate the policy of Triangle and as a result are flocking to the Triangle standard.

Here is a letter from Mr. H. R. Mason, who operates the Acme, Crystal and Rex Theatres at Goldsboro, N. C., which will give you the experience of an exhibitor who is using Triangle service.

"Regarding using Triangle Service, will say that ever since the majority of the manufacturers adopted the plan of shifting the Film Footage Tax to the Exhibitors, we have been using from one to three Triangle Dramas and Comedies every week, besides the two reel Keystone Comedy every Saturday for the past year or more. It gives me much pleasure to say that both the dramas and the comedies have been entirely satisfactory to me and my patrons, and business I am glad to say has not fallen off, and if anything has increased as a result of the change. On the days that we run pictures only, we get just as good if not better results from the Triangle Service, as the Taxed Service, and what's most interesting to us is that we are getting the service for almost half of what we have paid for the Taxed Service.

I am indeed glad that you, together with a few of the other recognized manufacturers, decided to align yourselves on the side of the exhibitor, for to defeat the exhibitor, you have defeated the whole business, and you are to be commended by the exhibitors for the stand you took and are now taking in their behalf.

If the Service we are now getting from your Company continues to hold up as it has since we began with you the last time, it would not surprise me a bit if your Atlanta exchange will not receive shortly an order for their entire output.

While attending the Convention of the North Carolina League held in Raleigh last week, I came in contact with a number of the real North Carolina Exhibitors, and those that are using and have been using Triangle Service for the same reason and beginning at the same time I did, had everything to say in its praise, and naturally with the endorsements Triangle received from these influential men, your Atlanta office should be taking on a bunch of new business.

I sincerely trust that exhibitors all over the country will rally around the TRIANGLE banner and accord you the support you so much deserve, and in doing so they will not only help you but help themselves by getting a consistent and well balanced service at a price they can afford to pay, and no WAR TAX.

Assuring you of my appreciation for the stand you have taken, and for the excellent service I am getting from your Company, and that should the occasion arise that I can be of any assistance to you, I am yours to command,

Yours sincerely,

H. R. Mason (Signed)."

Do not Mr. Mason's statements inspire you? Are you satisfied with the service that you are now securing for your theatre? Let us suggest that you get in touch with the Triangle Exchange nearest you so as to know exactly what Triangle has to offer you.

"LOOK here, old chap, you got to get aboard our bandwagon, and book these super deluxe, extra special productions. Cause why? Cause the public just eats this star of ours up; they don't care what she's in, so long as it's her and the pictures cost money. And money? Oh, Boy, this here one cost three hundred thou. Sure you got to pay for it, and if you don't come through Hank Smith over the way will. But don't worry about that. It's going to bring you in exactly five times as much money as your house can hold. . . ."

The ten plays already finished have all passed the one test of MAKING GOOD. The full twenty-four pictures of the three star series, already laid out, are planned with one end—to make good.

Back of these promises is the word of W. W. Hodkinson, who never put over an ounce of bunk in his life.

But TODAY you need take no man's promise, because the Paralta Plays are making good before your eyes, in your theatre—or your neighbors'—in trade paper reviews, in letters from exhibitors, in the enthusiasm of fans. And—

How to Ride with Progress

"If any proof were needed that big things are doing in General Film then the fact that the staid old organization is tearing away from the downtown Fourth Avenue address is sufficient for us."—Editorial in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

General Film Company is a happy combination of two things—poise and progress.

It may be "staid," but it has also a record for "tearing away" from the obsolete.

General Film Company has been the first exchange organization to put into practice the great idea of one commercial service to handle the product of many film producers. Magnates in the wilderness, crying for economy and elimination of duplicate overhead, take notice.

General Film has been the first to adopt the advanced merchandising details that prevail in stabilized American industries.

General Film Company is the only motion picture concern to report its film rentals to manufacturers by the employment of electrical accounting and tabulating machinery like that used by the U. S. Census Bureau.

General Film Company is one of the few who at the outset refused to impose the arbitrary 15c. per reel charge upon releases.

General Film Company is the only exchange organization founded upon a market for short length pictures to make a brilliant and immediate success with feature product, as exemplified in the Paralta Plays handled through its exchanges by the "Hodkinson Service."

General Film has retained exhibitor confidence from the beginning—a golden crown of good will that in this hour is more than treasure.

General Film Company, in fact, does not have to resort to trick photography to simulate speed. It glides onward with power and with purpose.

The way for a motion picture exhibitor to ride with Progress is, to ride with General Film.

"THE LIGHT WITHIN."

Produced by Petrova Pictures Company
Directed by Larry Trimble
Presented at The Rose.

THE CAST:

Dr. Laurel Carlisle Durand.....Mme. Olga Petrova
Dr. Leslie .....Thomas Holding
Durand .....Lumsden Hare

By Mae Tinée.

Ah, what a new Petrova have we here!

From the shapely cocoon enveloped in folds of apparent hauteur and indifference has emerged a creature of exquisite womanliness, of profound if reserved feeling, and a rich friendliness that makes her witnesses, her friends. It has taken some time for the screen to woo Mme. Petrova successfully, but the conquest has been accomplished.

"The Light Within," which is the second picture produced by her own company, deals with the discovery by a woman surgeon of a serum, curative in cases of infantile paralysis.

The laboratory scenes, of which the production calls for a number, have been evolved with a Belascoian eye for detail. So perfect are they said to be as to have called for expressions of unqualified approval from members of the medical profession drafted by Mme. Petrova to pass on them. A New York surgeon is also claimed to have placed his private laboratory at the exclusive disposal of the star. Be this truth or press agentry, it sounds well and the scenes are most effective.

Married to a man who doesn't understand, never did understand, and never will understand — as the pictures proves—Dr. Laurel Carlisle has a hard time between profession and home, though in no way does she neglect either. She is a beautiful example of maternal love, an inspiring professional figure.

The picture is full of touches, "bits" that go straight to the heart. I am not facetious when I say that there is no better acting in the photoplay than that done by a beautiful collie that has been the playmate of the little son and which, after the baby dies, mourns with and endeavors to comfort the mother in her numb grief.

The supporting cast stands up well and the photography and direction are exceptional.

I should say: "See 'The Light Within.'" serials, have built new and better theatres, paid off mortgages, proved that no season is a dull season if you give your audiences the show, and made many exhibitors rich. And the proof of these facts lies in every town in the land!

Now Pathe presents this greatest of box office stars in the most interesting, thrilling and expensive serial she has ever been in, with the most popular leading man she ever had—

Antonio Moreno

There can be no question but what it should be the triumph of Miss White's career to see "The Iron Claw" alone. Pathe considers "The House of Hate" to be far superior to "The Iron Claw."

What just a few of the exhibitors say (Pathe received over a thousand letters from exhibitors on "The Fatal Ring" only):

J. J. Cluxton, manager of the Pantages, San Francisco, reported that he had increased their matinees over $50.00 per day with a Pearl White serial.
The Queen Theatre, Omaha, reported that they could not handle the crowds on Pearl White in "Pearl of the Army."

M. S. Marks, president of the Marshfield Amusement Co., of Chicago, owning four big houses, wrote: "In view of the tremendous drawing power of Pearl White, don't you think it would be advisable to increase 'The Fatal Ring' to twenty-five episodes? She is a sure money getter."

H. C. Cooley of the Bijou Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., wired: "Audience cheered Pearl White in 'Fatal Ring' so loud today could be heard a block away."

Rain or snow, melt or freeze, past performances prove that Pearl White in "The House of Hate" will fill your house for fifteen successive weeks

Miss White and Mr. Moreno together form an unbeatable combination.

The newspapers of a nation have recognized the box office value of Pathe's famous serial star. Here are the statements of just a few of them:

The Montreal Herald: "Pearl White is Montreal's favorite star."

The New Orleans Item: "It is doubtful if any star in the world has so great box office pulling power."

The Baltimore News: "Pearl White is the most popular photoplay star in Baltimore."

The Providence, R. I., News Democrat: "Pearl White is the most popular serial star in the world."

The Director and Writers of
The HOUSE of HATE
Have proven by past successes their mastery of serial art
George B. Seitz, the director, wrote the scenarios of "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," and "The Iron Claw," all phenomenally successful. He directed "The Fatal Ring," another clean up. No director in the business has been associated with so many or so popular serials. The sets, photography, and direction of "The House of Hate" are perfect.
Arthur B. Reeve is the author of the famous "Craig Kennedy" stories in the Cosmopolitan. He was also the author of "The Exploits of Elaine" serial. With Chas. A. Logue, another successful author, he wrote "The House of Hate."
Bertram Millhauser, the author of the scenario, also wrote the scenarios for "Mystery of the Double Cross," and "The Fatal Ring."
Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Co., which produced "The House of Hate," directed "The Perils of Pauline," the first of the long line of successful serials put out by Pathe. As president of the Astra he supervised the production of "The Iron Claw," "Mystery of the Double Cross" and "The Fatal Ring."
Pathé has released seventeen successful serials: No other house can anywhere near approach that record. Pathé goes on record as saying that "The House of Hate" is the greatest serial of them all!!

Even a fire fails to drive out an audience when.....

HAROLD LLOYD

.....is on the screen.....

Manager Frayne of the Palace of Schenectady says" So well are these 'Luke' comedies liked by our audiences that the fire did not dismay them; they preferred to stay and see the finish of 'Love, Laughs, and Lather,' one of the funniest comedies ever pictured."

ON-STAR

CROWD DECLINED TO BE STRICKEN WITH A PANIC

"Lonesome Luke", on the Screen, Fought to Keep Crowd in Theatre

A panic and possibly the loss of lives and injury of many persons was averted last night at the Palace Theatre by a young chap named Harry Lloyd, who was somewhere in Jersey City at the time and who even now is unaware of what he accomplished.

Fire, was discovered in the jewelry store of William B. Joseph at 456 State street at 8.20 o'clock last night and about a half hour later the smoke began to seep into the Palace Theatre, three doors from the scene of the fire. The big exhaust fans were put in operation by the management in the hope that the spectators who filled the large auditorium would be kept in ignorance of the fire nearby. At about this time a "Lonesome Luke" comedy was thrown on the screen. Lonesome Luke is the Harry Lloyd mentioned above, and the spectators were laughing at the escapade of Luke in the barber shop when Manager Frank Frayne, fearing a panic, appeared near the screen and addressed the house. Mr. Frayne said that he didn't want to worry the people present, but merely to calm any fears that might arise "There is a slight smell of smoke in the house due to a fire down the street," he said, "but there is no danger."

Only Few Left.

A few women got up and went out in an orderly manner, but inasmuch as the operator in the booth kept grinding away on the "film" machine and Pianist Rubens kept beating away on the piano, interspersing the piano numbers with a few organ melodies, no one took the affair seriously.

In less than five minutes, however, it was seen that it was an even break between Lonesome Luke and the fire, a toss-up between an orderly dispersal of the spectators or a panic. The auditorium filled with smoke, which billowed in the rays of light projected from the machine to the screen. Lonesome Luke was getting funnier as the smoke grew thicker and the spectators laughed between coughs.

Theatre Emptied Slowly.

Finally the smoke became so thick that the fire marshal directed Manager Frayne to empty the theatre. The announcement was made and the crowd proceeded to don coats and hats, leisurely and hesitatingly, for the operator kept on grinding Lonesome Luke, and Luke was getting funnier by the minute. The people left their seats and instead of jamming the aisles in a frantic, stricken mob, everyone bent on reaching the open air, the spectators lingered in the aisles. Some even went back and took their seats again, for the operator in the booth kept grinding away and Lonesome Luke kept getting funnier. Half the people in the house had to be forced out by police and firemen, and the police and firemen might have forgotten what they had been ordered to do if somebody hadn't told the operator that he'd better get out of the booth before he choked to death.

It is only giving credit where credit is due to say that Harry Lloyd averted a panic by absent treatment.

WOULD THE COMMITTEE FOR PUBLIC INFORMATION IN WASHINGTON PASS A PRO-GERMAN PICTURE WITHOUT A SINGLE CHANGE OR ELIMINATION?

What Official U. S. Government Censorship Thinks Of

"THE EAGLE'S EYE"

The Committee On Public Information, composed of George Creel, Chairman; the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, officially passed and endorsed the first three episodes of this patriotic serial.

Is the Kaiser's censorship and approval also necessary to permit American propaganda pictures to be shown to American audiences?

Everyone knows that the sinking of the Lusitania was planned in the United States by Imperial German agents. They do not know that it was also planned to blow up the Hotel Ansonia, New York, and kill 800 American Naval Officers attending the Naval Ball. Nor do they know that an attempt was made to torpedo the Atlantic Fleet while in review before President Wilson in New York Harbor. These, and many other facts generally unknown, are revealed by Chief Flynn in "The Eagle's Eye."

Every American should know of the Imperial German Government's deliberate crimes of murder, arson and sabotage, against America and its people—all the while posing as a friendly nation.

"ONE PICTURE IS WORTH MORE THAN A MILLION WORDS"—Arthur Brisbane

Exhibitors should give their patrons the opportunity to witness these revelations because the purpose of this serial is to inspire patriotism and foster loyalty.

Pro-Germans may thus be led to change their allegiance and disloyal Americans influenced to alter their unpatriotic views.

Volume 17. No. 8 February 23, 1918

Prosperity and Cooperation

THE tide seems to have turned in the business of the box-office.

Fully turned. Except for trouble spots here and there, a big reaction has set in. Exhibitors are breathing easily again. Many report to us the best business they have ever done.

The change has come—as sharply, as fully—within the past three weeks.

We are glad to have prophesied this reaction.

Since bad business was caused fundamentally and largely by war conditions, we felt that this country would have just about the same experience which Great Britain went through.

Just this has happened.

The public has set about face; and there's optimism in the air.

* * * *

A HARD-BAKED showman who has been in the business for twenty-two years, who is ultra-conservative and who scents hard times as keenly as good times, says that we shall have this Summer the biggest inflow of box-office cash this industry has ever enjoyed. He backs up his prophecy with observations just made on a trip covering every State in the Union.

After this summer, he says, well—he doesn't know.

But we do. At least, we feel very hopeful.

Something always happens to help this industry along. We are exceedingly lucky.

A period of unexampled prosperity, such as we shall undoubtedly have this year, should give both time and incentive to the producing and distributing branches to set their house in order.

The need is obvious; and the warning is equally obvious.

When a ship passes through a storm, the skipper gets mighty busy when fair weather comes. He has time to look inside and he does. Otherwise he goes on the rocks when the next squalls come along.

The industry's main trouble is over-production.

Not over-production, however, of good film.

The industry's glut of film is a glut of poor film.

If we devote the fair weather period, the sunshine of which is even now right across the bow, to the stoppage of inferior production and to the cleaning up of the market's present glut of it, there won't be any indigestion when the next dull period comes along.

* * * *

WE have spoken of theatre prosperity. It is quite universal in the large cities and communities.

But there's a sharp contrast to it in the case of the many small theatres in the small towns.

These theatres are in a bad way.

And they need help.

We don't refer to the small house competing hopelessly with a big theatre in a city neighborhood. We don't mean the house foolishly built in a bad neighborhood.

We are speaking of the small house in the more or less isolated town or community, where the people want to and will go to see good motion pictures.

The exchange needs this theatre; the industry needs it; the public needs it.

And this small house, in turn, needs a doctor; not public prosperity, but a doctor.

* * * *

THIS type of theatre has been overlooked in the swift march of the industry; and since this industry is growing up this negligence cannot be maintained with safety any longer.

In other industries the small retailer is looked after by the manufacturer. He gets a doctor's services when he needs it.

You cannot, in this industry, produce pictures and let your work end there. The time has come when it is necessary and when it pays to follow the film clear through to the public. And the particular work needed here, and needed right away, is with the small house.

* * * *

WE know whereof we speak, because the small houses are appealing to us, and there's no gainsaying their appeals. But we were glad, this week, to be solidly backed in our stand by a man like Thomas D. Soriero of Boston. Mr. Soriero was once a small house manager; moreover, today as manager of the Park theatre he is in almost daily touch with smaller exhibitors throughout New England. He knows their situation from the practical viewpoint of an experienced showman who had made big and little houses succeed.

"The producer," says he, "should protect his own film.

"Let him find out what's the matter with these small houses.

"If the trouble doesn't lie with the house or the managers, or the advertising, then find out what is wrong with the pictures or their prices—and correct the bad condition.

"Don't leave it to the exchange man. Perhaps the exchange man is merely a film man, not a business man. If so, the situation is hopeless. Even if he is a good business man, he may not have the authority to correct conditions he knows are wrong.

"New York," concludes Mr. Soriero—who, by the way, will say some more interesting things in these columns—

Speaking Editorially:

Theatre Ownership and Theatre Administration

AN Administrative Bureau is announced this week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The object of the Bureau is the closer union of this producing-distributing concern with its retailer exhibitors to the end that each other's problems may be commonly worked out to the betterment of all concerned.

Much interest, throughout the trade, will center in this announcement.

In the first place it ought to set at rest the many rumors to the effect that the plans of this corporation included the outright or indirect acquisition of theatres.

There are many who believe these rumors. Some students of the industry even think that theatre ownership upon the part of the prominent producers is an inevitable end of their higher development. There have been such rumors before, connecting other producing firms with chain theatre ownership.

Motion Picture News has neither believed the rumors, nor—more to the point—do we believe that producer ownership of picture theatres is a feasible thing. It will never even be attempted by those fundamentally familiar with the picture industry.

The Past and Its Bitter Lessons

There are successful chain stores, to be sure, in other fields; but these chain stores are more like our present booking circuits. They do not confine their goods to a single manufacturer's output. This idea has been tried—notably by John Wanamaker in his one-time chain of shirt stores handling only Wanamaker shirts—and proven a flat failure in several striking instances.

One of the best ways, indeed, for any kind of a manufacturer to confine and narrow his own outlet and open the field of his competitor is to define and thereby confine his retailing to his own retailer ownership.

We do believe, however, that producer-exhibitor co-operation is inevitable in the further evolution of this industry.

It is even now taking place and this year will undoubtedly see many various developments of this fundamentally important principle.

Each to His Own—There Safety Lies

In its most successful development, however, it will be found that producer and exhibitor will each retain his identity and individual control of his own functions. It will be a decidedly dangerous thing for either to assume the other's risks and limitations.

The plan of an administrative bureau is assuredly a progressive and most important step.

Are the Stars Falling?

A LITTLE birdie has whispered to us that both in Los Angeles and in the East a number of stars may be found who have seriously revised their salary demands in recent months—or maybe weeks.

And the revisions have been downward—radically so, if we may judge from a few specific cases told us.

Of course, it may be far-flung to discern any general swinging of the pendulum in these current reports. But, while we are not prompted by a desire to see any man's worldly wealth diminish in bulk, we cannot help expressing the opinion that a generous reaction in the case of stars' salaries would have a wonderful tonic effect on Mr. Fillum.

Co-ordination Needed

WE hope that the next bit of legislation that comes from Washington affecting motion picture theatres will bring also with it an authoritative ruling in every paragraph of the statute.

The greatest inconvenience to exhibitors and hindrance to the proper functioning of the ticket tax law has come through the dependence on individual sectional collectors for rulings.

No general interpretations have come from Washington; each deputy makes his own rules. Some are reasonable, some intelligent; many capricious freaks, a few asinine.

Standing Up Well

REPORTS of the National City Bank show that exports of positive film from the United States during the month of December just past amounted to 309,571 feet.

Not at all the anaemic showing that one might be led to expect during war times.

Indeed, quite cheering.

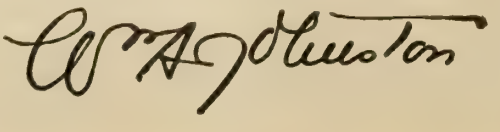
"should take an interest in its country retailers—and right away. If not, there won't be any country retailers."

* * * *



WE believe, however, that this much-needed help for the small house is forthcoming this year. The signs of the industry point strongly that way.

Exhibitors will note that co-operative-producer-exhibitor schemes are springing up everywhere.

It is being recognized that the theatres are the basis and bulwark of the business. Producer prosperity must be built and can be built only upon exhibitor prosperity.

Producer-exhibitor co-operation is bound to come about—this year.

It beehoves the exhibitor to think clearly and not too hastily and select that kind of coordination which will preserve his retailer identity and power and guarantee his permanent prosperity.

Serving It With Speed and Ginger

SOMETIMES it is hard enough to find news sufficient to fill this page with comment without having a whole column stolen from you by the editorial on the opposite page. But we have to admit that the latest move of Adolph Zukor and that Paramount aggregation—no matter what the step may be—naturally bursts out of the confines of this page into the more select editorial columns.

So be it.

But it just hurts us to miss the opportunity of saying a few personal things about Hiram Abrams and Ben Schulberg.

Plus the opportunity of filling a few inches of these twenty-one a week that is very—veree—shy of things to talk about.

* * * *

WE shouldn't have any reason for complaint though. Haven't we the second of those "Practical Plays For Busy Producers" to offer you.

We could talk all day about those features.

This week the tabloid drama concerns the scenario department. Of course we are going to hear a loud and long wail from a number of scenario editors who know that their own departments are not in the state pictured by the author of our "Practical Plays."

Surely. The picture business wouldn't have lasted this long had all scenario departments stayed in the condition described in the little drama. And that condition was typical of nine out of ten just a few years ago. And today the cap fits enough to justify us in presenting the tabloid.

Maybe we will get quite a few so sore that the rebound will go far towards clearing up the mess.

We're willing to hear complaints if we can do that.

CANADA just keeps right on trailing us in the fuel holiday pastime. It's exciting—if not profitable for anyone in particular.

First we had the scare of a three-day closedown all over the land. Then that settled down to leave us with a one day a week holiday.

Some more squirming. Then, after much labor and pulling of strings, the picture houses were allowed to remain open on the general holiday provided they closed the following day each week.

Now Canada has gone through the same course.

At the start the same three-day scare. Quick action, a flood of protesting telegrams, page ads in the newspapers, sufficed to squelch that. Then, while the exhibitors were still riding contentedly to their homes, the parliament slipped the real order over:

A one day a week closing for all theatres in Central Canada.

SPEAKING of fuel holidays, there is one consolation to exhibitors totalling up the receipts of a Lincoln's Birthday week.

February 12th comes on a Wednesday next year.

PERHAPS you have noticed in Rector's film lunch room during the past two weeks a particularly bright young man, all energy and pep. He knows everybody; has a nod and a smile for everybody. Even more.

He can't pass a table. Drawing a chair over, he gets well into the middle of a funny story before you have finished shaking hands, livens the conversation up for five minutes and then moves on. Five minutes more at the next table, five at the following—and so on. Some say that he even eats in the course of his wanderings. But we have never seen him do it.

As he passes on from each table you hear the remark:

"Fine boy that Rothacker. Does great printing work too, they say. Yep, great boy. Always like to meet him."

You have it! The young man with "Excelsior" on his banner is none other than Watterson Rothacker.

Well, this week we give you just a bit more than your usual five minutes with Watterson Rothacker. This week William A. Johnston tells you just "What Kind of a Fellow is—Rothacker."

But he doesn't tell you half of the admiration we all have for the breezy Chicagoan. A pioneer in the game—he was a roommate of R. A. Cochran's when the latter was "a recent advertising man"—Rothacker way back in 1910 took faith in the industrial end of the business and his faith has never been shaken. He fought on and on—it wasn't always easy—but now he is landed squarely on his two feet.

And it's the "Now" that counts, isn't it?

* * * *

NEWS from the producers' camps was light this week. So we'll just tell you here a few of the things the press departments want us—and you—to pay particular attention to during the coming weeks:

Pathe wants you to know that the new "House of Hate" serial is the greatest ever—never was there a serial the product of so many serial specialists, all the greatest in their line.

Vitagraph wants you to keep an eye on Sergeant Guy Empey's "Over the Top"—with its whales of newspaper publicity.

Metro wants you to know that their present program offers all the varieties of stars, spectacles and what not that any manager needs to run his house.

Triangle wants you to keep an eye on that "exhibitor first" policy and the unswerving way it is being worked out.

World wants you to know that the "free film" is the real goods—and that the "free film" is "good film."

There isn't much else a man needs to know in this life.

Is there?—or—is there?

Theatre Ownership

Taken as a whole it ought to bridge solidly the gulf between the maker and exhibitor of pictures—a gulf which cannot economically exist because the success and permanence of each factor is wholly dependent upon the other.

In this one respect they are and must be as one.

It ought to bring about the steadier production of the kind of pictures the public wants.

It ought to make this production more profitable for exhibitor and producer alike.

It ought to assure the permanence of such production.

It ought to—and to this we look forward hopefully—save the small house now hanging in the balance.

The plan is right; and the end is right. Everything depends upon the rightness of its execution and the rightness of all the main factors involved.

Miss Type 'em did you get a report on the scenario sent from the East Coast written by Rex Reach?

Secretary

Yes—it's rotten, so they say.

Editor

Who read it?

Secretary

Mr. Tempermentalio, the Director.

Editor

Send it back marked "Not available."

Secretary

I read a part of it and I thought it was great. Why don't you read it and see for yourself?

Editor

(Indignantly.) Me read it, what do you think I am? What have I got my staff for, you don't think for a moment that I am going to waste my valuable time going over the raft of rot sent in here, do you? Not much, I have other things to do.

Secretary

(Timidly.) I thought you being the Scenario Editor, engaged presumably for your ability and judgment as to the worth of stories submitted, could tell only by personally reading them.

Editor

Well you've got another guess coming. I'm reading the best sellers, the latest copyrighted books. You see I'm wise, little girl. I am playing safe, if the concern buys one of these books, I can always fall back upon the fact that it had a big sale as a book, even if it is a freezing frost as a picture.

Secretary

(Faintly.) Oh! I see.

The telephone rings. Secretary answers it.

Secretary

Who? Wait a minute. (To Editor.) Mr. Kel Antony, the scenario writer is outside and wishes to see you.

Editor

Tell him that I am not in.

Secretary

Excuse me but he has been a wonderful success as a scenarioist.

Director: "Who? Budyard Yipling and Baird Lebasco? What do they know about good stories anyway?"

Editor

(Shortly.) Do as I tell you.

Secretary

(Talking on 'phone.) Hello! Mr. Knowitall is not in. (She hangs up receiver).

Editor

And kindly remember that I shall not be in at any time to Kel Antony. He's too good at the game. You don't think for a minute that I'm going to be idiot enough to let him slip in here with his sure fire stuff, and first thing I know he will have my job. Well I guess not.

Enter Director Accompanied by Lady Star

Director

Hallo! Knowitall. When do I get a story worth while? I'm ready to go ahead on my next picture.

Editor

I've done the best I could, Mr. Tempermentalio. You have had stories by Bernard Georgesha, Rex Beach, David Lebasco, Addee George, Beorge Howson Howdard, Charles Dickens adaptations, some Sir Walter Scott stories, and—

Director

(Irritatedly.) I know all that, tell me something new; haven't I had to wade through them, and they're rotten, all of them.

Editor

Regarding the Beorge Howson Howdard story, Mr. Esemon, the proprietor read it himself and he's strong to have you do it.

Director

What are you trying to do, hand me a laugh? What does he know about a story. He doesn't know a continuity from an aeroplane. Nothing doing on his say so.

Editor

He was quite a prominent director, before he went into making pictures, remember.

Director

That was years ago. He's a back number now. I came in to tell you that I have a story which will make a wonderful picture.

Editor

(Gladly.) Good, who by?

Director

(Pointing to Lady Star.) By little gold curls here. Written by herself for herself, and it's "some story." Isn't it, Queenie? (Patting her on shoulder.)

Lady Star

That's what. I could just die acting it.

Editor

But you know we have an iron-clad rule against buying scenarios for employes.

Director

That's easy, it is supposed to be written by John Wilson. You've had it here for two weeks. You can put it through under that name and she can collect the usual five hundred dollars for a feature continuity.

Enter Hack-writer

Hack

Here's a story by John Wilson, and it's the worst attempt that I have ever read since I have been in the business. Oh, but it's rotten!

Director

(Angrily.) That's all you know about it. That's why you are here writing night and day for thirty-five dollars a week. I have read that story, and it's great. I can make a wonderful picture from it, and I guess that settles it. If we can't agree upon it here, I'll see Esemon, and it's a cinch he will let me have my way about it.

Editor

(To Hack.) That will do Hack-writer; you may go—keep busy on that serial. You only turned in eleven episodes in the last two days, and if you can't do better than that I'll have to get another boy.

Hack

(Nervously.) Yes, sir, Mr. Knowitall. (To Director.) Excuse me, Mr. Tempermentalio. I didn't know you had read it. Kindly excuse me.

He Exits Crestfallen

Editor

(Handing continuity.) Here you are, Mr. Tempermentalio; the story has my O. K.

Director

(To Lady Star.) Come ahead Queenie. Didn't I tell you your story would be the next one we would make?

Lady Star

You just did, you sweet old thing; you are just too nice for any thing.

Exit Director and Lady Star

Secretary

I read that story, and it is the worst thing I ever read in my life, and if it's made into a picture it will mean the loss of eighteen to twenty thousand dollars.

Editor

You should worry, it's not your money. And take a little good advice, you had better confine your ideas and beliefs to what you have to do as my secretary. Studio critics die very young, and directors, who honestly try to save money, get fired. It's a very strange thing, but the God's honest truth. The more money a director spends, the bigger splurge he makes, the more temperamental he pretends to be, the more the proprietor thinks of him.

Secretary

I have noticed that, and yet they seem to think the world is coming to an end upon account of the war tax. Did you ever direct pictures, Mr. Knowitall?

Editor

Me? I couldn't direct ten feet of picture if my life depended upon it. I had just lost my job as a newspaper man when I landed this cinch job.

Secretary

Well, if you can't direct pictures, and don't know anything about it, how do you expect to know what material ought to make a good picture, or what will not?

Editor

(Disconcerted.) You'd better finish your correspondence.

The 'Phone Rings—Secretary Answers

Secretary

Who? Printem and Sellem—just a moment, please. (To Editor.) Printem and Sellem, the book publishers, on the wire.

Editor

(Taking his desk 'phone.) Hello; yes, this is Mr. Knowitall. I don't care for the book, no, it is not suited for our purpose. (He waits—listens.) How much—five per cent—what are you talking about? Publish and Bindem, gave me twenty-five per cent on all the best sellers I have bought from them. How's that—twenty-five—all right; it's not such a bad story after all; I'll recommend it. (He hangs up receiver.)

Enter Esemon, Proprietor

Esemon

(Hotly.) Say you, Knowitall, this scenario department is driving me mad. It's costing a fortune every week, and the results are heart breaking. (Takes out piece of paper.) I've just been figuring. With your salary, and the forty employes, secretaries, stenographers, postage, paper, envelopes, books and magazines purchased and the raft of other stuff, it runs into half a million dollars a year; I simply can't stand it.

Editor

Well, what do you want me to do?

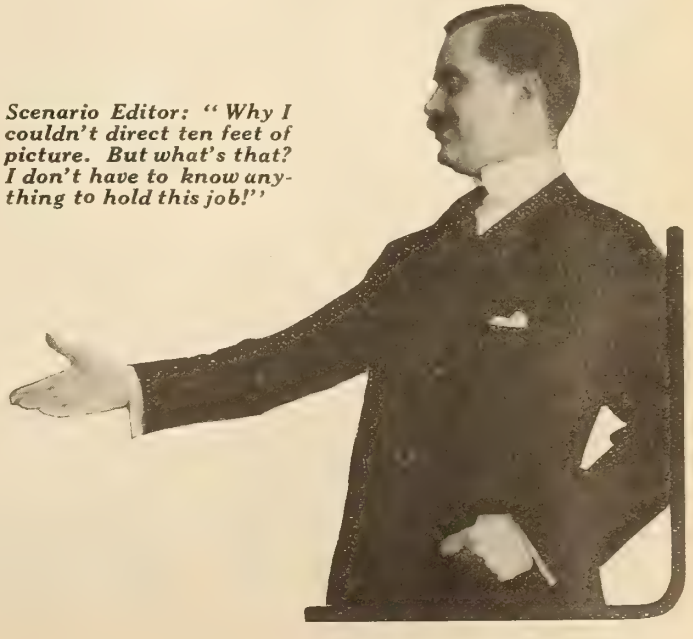
Esemon

I don't know myself. I have figured until I can't sleep nights. The scenario end of the business is more trouble than all the rest of it put together. There will have to be something done or I'll go broke.

Enter the Other Director

Other Director

Say, Knowitall, this continuity will have to be changed. Here I am held up right in the middle of the "take" with three hundred extras all made up and waiting.



Esemon

Didn't you read the continuity before you started the picture?

Other Director

Fool question number six million—of course I did, but this scene won't work out. I can't keep my star on the ten-foot line, close up to the camera, and I won't stand for it; neither will she, and I don't blame her.

Central Canada's Closing Order

Fuel Controller Succeeds in Putting Through Measure to Darken Houses Each Monday for Six Weeks — Tuesday Closing Favored by Exhibitors

THE Canadian Government has decided, as had been anticipated and expected by some exhibitors, to follow the lines as laid down by the United States in the conservation of fuel. As a result the order for heatless days has gone forth in Central Canada. On February 5 the Canadian cabinet adopted this drastic measure upon the recommendation of Canada's fuel controller.

Beginning February 18 all theatres in Central Canada will be forced to close every Monday until March 25, inclusive. An organized attempt will be made by the exhibitors, it is expected, to have the day of closing changed from Monday to Tuesday.

The motion picture theatres involved in this newest trend of war legislation have bowed to the inevitable. The order comes on the heels of the report a week ago that they were to be closed for three days a week. The exhibitors dispelled this idea by hurrying to Ottawa in a body and learning for themselves that no such action of closing for three days was contemplated. The new order, which came through the night of February 5, was, however, a decided surprise, as no intimation was given beforehand.

Developments indicate that an organized attempt will be made to change the regulation from Monday to Tuesday. The exhibitors are actuated in this, it is said, by observation of results in the United States, where Tuesday closings have been less injurious to the motion picture theatres. The Canadians figure that the Monday shutdown will probably have a worse effect on their business than any other "dark" day in the week.

Jules Bernstein, manager of Loew's theatre in Toronto, is one of the exhibitors who believes that action should be taken at once to see if the day of closing cannot be changed from Monday to Tuesday. This change, he contends, if it can be made, will mean much better business to the picture houses.

Chicago League Names Officers

With But a Single Exception All Old Executives Were Re-elected— License Question and Censorship Are Up

THE annual election of officers was the most important stroke of business at the last meeting of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The League members, when they came together Friday, February 1, at the Masonic Temple to consider the question as to who should pilot them through the uncertain waters of the coming year, decided that one good term deserves another, and with a single exception, re-elected all the old officers.

Joseph Hopp, who was re-elected president, was the universal choice of the exhibitors. He is held in high esteem as a diplomat and tactful worker in the interests of showmen. During the past year he has shown himself a tireless and ardent advocate of the measures favoring the motion picture theatre and its owner. As president of the Chicago League, he has used his power and authority wherever possible to get concessions for the exhibitors. He has fought for them before the license committee of the Chicago city council and effectively represented them in the bitter fight against Funkhouser censorship that is still going on. He was instrumental in securing a concession whereby exhibitors are allowed to burn lights aggregating 500 watts in front of the building line on lightless nights. Mr. Hopp has been a leading spirit in all important exhibitor proceedings in the Windy City and was one of the representatives of the local theatre men at the recent allied exhibitors' convention in Washington where he was elected to serve on the amalgamation committee of the two national associations.

William E. Heaney, one of Chicago's ablest exhibitors, was reelected vice president of the local League. Bill Sweeney, when it was learned that Sidney Smith would not accept the League secretaryship for another year owing to the pressure of increased business interests, was unanimously voted into the pad and pencil position. He has served as treasurer of the local organization during the past year. The members knew Bill would make a good secretary of the local branch, inasmuch as he has been national secretary of the League for a number of years and still occupies that position. The office of treasurer was bestowed upon Fred W. Hartmann. William Rohe was elected sergeant at arms.

The following were elected on the executive committee: John H. Freundt, Robert R. Levy, Alfred Hamburger, John Bobeng, Wm. D. Burford, Harry Miller, and George Hopkinson. At their installation March 1 there will be a luncheon and smoker.

The question of theatre licenses and the censorship problem were brought up at the meeting but no definite action was taken. Different methods were considered of divorcing Funkhouser from his following of women reformers who are always present at the meetings of the subcommittee of the city council judiciary committee and are continually heckling speakers whenever they have anything adverse to say about present censorship methods. The exhibitors resent the continual horning in of these women and were wondering if there was any way of conducting a meeting without them.

The matter of theatre licenses was also taken up and plans were laid to fight an increase should the Corporation Counsel, who is now considering the legality of the scale recently submitted by the subcommittee of the council, send in an adverse ruling.

Goldburg Returns from Extended Trip

Jesse J. Goldburg, special representative and distributor of independent features, returned to New York last week from a tour of the United States in the interests of the companies he represents. Mr. Goldburg announces that he signed contracts covering a period of one year, by the terms of which he becomes sole buying representative for A. H. Blank of Des Moines, Iowa, for the territory of Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska; The Consolidated Film Corporation of San Francisco, California, for the territory of California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands; The Consolidated Film Corporation of Seattle, Washington, for the territory of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; The Unity Photoplay Company of Chicago, Illinois, for the territory of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin; and with The Standard Film Corporation of Minnesota; The Standard Film Corporation of Missouri; and The Van Dyke Amusement Enterprises of Illinois, jointly, for the combined territory of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Oklahoma, Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

He also completed arrangements to represent Sidney Lust of Washington, D. C., operating in the territory of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and North Carolina. On this tour, Mr. Goldburg also placed the undisposed-of attractions of The Ivan Film Productions, Inc.

Chairman Zukor Receives Congratulations

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and chairman of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, formed to co-operate with the U. S. Treasury Department in its war program, last week received congratulations from S. L. Rothapfel, Managing Director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres and Lee A. Ochs, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, on the effective work of his committee. The recent letter sent to exhibitors throughout the country by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in which he expressed his appreciation of the co-operation afforded him by the motion picture industry prompted both Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Ochs to voice their commendations in letters to Mr. Zukor. The other members of the Treasury Department Committee are Jules E. Brulatour, Marcus Loew, George K. Spoor and Walter W. Irwin.

Maryland Exhibitors Push Repeal Bill

Maryland exhibitors are expecting a hearing of the Censorship Repeal Bill on February 14. The bill was introduced into the House of Delegates the latter part of January. The movie men say they have a number of influential men in both houses of the legislature back of them who have given their pledge to heartily support the bill. The men are just as optimistic as ever that the bill will go through.

Abrams Heads Administrative Bureau

Is Named, with B. P. Schulberg, by Famous Players—Lasky for Newly Created Department—Main Purpose is Co-operation Within Industry

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION this week announced the creation of an executive department which it explains is new to film organizations. This new unit within the company is to be known, it is said, as the Administrative Bureau, with Hiram Abrams as managing director and B. P. Schulberg as vice-managing director.

The plans and purposes of the Administrative Bureau, Famous Players-Lasky announces, embrace a policy that has never before had a place within the inner construction of film companies as they are at present organized. This policy, it is said, contemplates a more efficient co-ordination of producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Sign of Progress

The constructive step expressed by the inauguration of this Bureau of Administration is termed by Famous Players-Lasky a reflection of the consistent progressiveness that has actuated the course of the organization from its inception. New identities within the company also reveal, officials think, the motive for the recent surrender by Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg of the executive supervision of the Paramount organization.

At the time of the transfer of these duties, Mr. Abrams issued a statement explaining that the action was taken in advance of a well developed plan to establish closer co-operation between producer and exhibitor than was ever before possible. The present declaration of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation indicates the materialization of this plan.

Mr. Abrams, in commenting upon the broad scope of the newly organized Administrative Bureau as an official link between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the exhibitors, said:

Exploring Personal Field

"When recently I completed the national tour which I undertook, accompanied by B. P. Schulberg, in order to feel more closely the trade currents of the country, I realized that a vastly important and necessary realm of our business, the sphere of personal contact, had as yet been unexplored. I became convinced that there should be a specific official channel through which a friendly intercourse and exchange of thought and opinion with the exhibitors could be consistently conducted. I proposed such an avenue of communication to the members of the Executive Board of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, asking to be relieved of the details of distribution so that I could devote all my time and energy to the development of such a bond between ourselves and the exhibitors. The Executive Board itself had often expressed the desire for a closer contact with the exhibitor, and for a greater understanding of his problems, and now, in its wisdom, it has organized this Administrative Bureau for that purpose.

"I feel that my many years of experience as an exhibitor, and my subsequent and equally long experience as a distributor enable me to grasp the aspirations and comprehend the obstacles of the average exhibitor, and I hope to be of personal service to each and every one of them.

Organize the Exhibitors

"It is our wish to organize the exhibitors of America into a great Common Council by which we can obtain the value of their collective thoughts and opinions on all important trade questions. We wish these opinions to extend even to the matter of production itself, for we realize that the exhibitor should have a larger voice not only regarding the manner in which the pictures are delivered to him, but also in the original creation of the subjects which he shows.

"There are many problems within the industry that demand and require solution, but we of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation realize that no trade problem has ever yet arisen or will in the future arise the solution of which did not rest solely with the exhibitor. It will be our purpose to maintain such close and constant association with the exhibitors as to solve the problems that confront the trade as they collectively wish them to be solved.

Consider the Problems

"We want the exhibitors to firmly believe that we consider their problems to be our problems, and we want to render, through the new Bureau, special and individual service, and to do our utmost to relieve or entirely eradicate the difficulties of the exhibitor. That is what I would like the exhibitor to consider this department—his own service department, a branch office of his own theatre, with Mr. Schulberg and myself as his personal agents. I want him to feel that we are always at his service, as in time I am sure we will make him know it."

Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, concurred in Mr. Abrams' statement that the Administrative Bureau had been specially designed for the welfare of the exhibitor, and said that the company hoped to express through the Bureau its appreciation of the fact, not as yet completely realized, that the producer and the exhibitor are in the same business, and the interests of one are the interests of the other, adding:

"I believe exhibitors throughout the country will welcome this new sphere of communion between them and us, as it is certain to result in many constructive and progressive policies."

NEXT WEEK—

GRAUMAN'S, the new Los Angeles picture palace recently opened to the public, truly lives up to its catchword "the million dollar theatre."

We have given you the usual news stories about this new temple of the screen, but you will be interested to know that a special sixteen page section describing all its features in detail will be a part of next week's issue of Motion Picture News.

The feature articles have been prepared by experts on the ground. They make corking reading—and what is more, information of real business value to every exhibitor. So don't forget——

Next week look for the special insert on "Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre."

Universal City May House Producers

In a denial of the report published in a theatrical trade paper to the effect that Pathe had acquired Universal City, is contained the information that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has issued an invitation to all film producing companies to avail themselves of its West Coast producing facilities.

This announcement comes from Carl Laemmle, who describes the step merely as a measure of conservation. With Universal City sufficiently large to accommodate every company in the country, it is felt by Universal that producers will be glad of the opportunity to slash their overhead expenses.

Coast Conditions Good, Says Kent

After two months on the Pacific Coast and in various distributing centers west of the Mississippi River Sidney R. Kent, Sales Manager of General Film Company, returned to New York bringing the latest estimate of the situation as regards the trade in motion pictures. He says it is impossible to deny that business is below normal and pronounces this due mainly to a psychological cause, with the weather as an added reason. The particularly gratifying feature of it all, from Mr. Kent's standpoint, is that General Film Company has been scarcely a sufferer from the prevailing disturbances in conditions. It encourages him to look for a prompt recovery in the motion picture industry at large.

Luncheon to Gerard at Astor Hotel

At a luncheon given February 9, at the Astor Hotel, to James W. Gerard, former United States Ambassador to Germany, to which members of the motion picture trade press were invited, the diplomat made known his reasons for choosing motion pictures as the best means for conveying the information to the public that he gained during his four years in Germany. Mark M. Ditenfass, of My Four Years in Germany, Inc., is producing the screen version of the ambassador's sojourn in the land of the Kaiser.

Mr. Gerard explained that, while he has written a book and had even toured a greater part of the states, he still has a considerable part of the public to reach with his message. He could reach these persons, he said, only through the screen, and that was his underlying reason for picturizing his experiences in Germany.

The former ambassador has seen only part of the picture thus far produced, but is said to be pleased greatly with the attention to detail being paid by the producers.

Mr. Gerard told the trade press men that the Kaiser is so imbued with the desire to override everybody that even in his study he works seated upon a wooden horse. He further stated that it was a motion picture producer whom the English prisoners in Germany had selected to represent them in all matters. This man was named Powell and, before the war, was one of the leading producers in England.

Fear of Germans Claimed Damaging to "Eagle's Eye"

Reports announcing the fact that Loew's theatres had refused to book "The Eagle's Eye" have caused the backers of that serial to come forward with a statement concerning the allegation that fear of his German patrons' displeasure was the reason given by the Loew booking manager for not signing for the serial.

The statement, backed by affidavits of Hy Gainsburg, Foursquare manager for New York City, claims that the Loew officials waited four weeks to see "The Eagle's Eye" before booking their next serial. It goes on to say that after viewing the first episodes, the managers made no comments on the quality of the production, but even had good words to say for it, basing their refusal, however, on the grounds that its strong war trend might cause the loss of much patronage of German tendencies to the Loew houses, and that no other reason for the refusal was given.

Taylor Holmes will turn over to the American Red Cross all money given to him by managers of theatres in which he will appear during the next several months. An itinerary of Chicago theatres for these visits is now being laid out. Mr. Holmes will address the audiences during the showing of his George K. Spoor pictures

Exhibitors Confused on "Tax"

Utica Hippodrome Told to Stamp Tickets When Sold—Washington Previously Ruled This Did Not Apply After November 1

THE confusing situation which developed some time ago among exhibitors when it was learned that all tickets sold at the box offices of motion picture theatres would have to be stamped "War Tax Paid" appears to be yet "alive." It was supposed that this issue was settled in January, when a ruling was secured from Washington to the effect that the "stamp" was not required. However, the Hippodrome, at Utica, has been advised by the Internal Revenue Collector of the Twenty-first District to stamp the legend on the tickets at the time they are sold. This creates a situation which, if exhibitors are required to carry it through, would mean much loss of time and money.

Exhibitor W. H. Linton, of the Hippodrome, Utica, N. Y., recently submitted samples of his tickets to the Twenty-first District of New York, I. R. S. These tickets had been stamped by the manufacturers, "War Tax Paid." In regard to this ticket Collector Neal Brewster replied: "The regulations require that the stamp shall be applied at the time the ticket is issued, and it is the opinion of this office that the printing of "Tax Paid" or words to that effect on the ticket by the manufacturer is not sufficient. It is suggested that you take the matter up with the firm from whom the tickets are purchased and request them to obtain a ruling from Washington. In the meantime, to protect yourself, you should provide yourself with a rubber stamp "Tax Paid" and affix this stamp to each ticket sold or issued for free admissions."

Exhibitor Linton contends that if picture theatres are required to follow out the instructions as set forth in the Collector's letter it will be next to impossible for many exhibitors to do business. He points out that it is almost a physical impossibility to stamp tickets as the Collector suggests, as the majority of box offices are not arranged for more than one person, and then where a ticket is sold through a machine, as in Exhibitor Linton's two theatres, it must first be run through the machine and then stamped—a double operation.

In January a representative of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company went to Washington for the express purpose of getting a ruling on this point in question. Upon his return it was announced that the Government had decided the stamp was not required. In this connection MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in its issue of February 9, published the following under the heading of "Exhibitors Not Required to Stamp Tickets"; "E. S. Bowman, secretary of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, has returned from Washington, where he secured a decision from the Government of interest to all exhibitors regarding the Government requirements. Mr. Bowman has received written communication from B. C. Keith, Deputy Commissioner, Treasury Department, Washington, to the effect that moving picture exhibitors will not be required to have printed on tickets the legend 'War Tax Paid' for the reason that this applied only to those advance sale tickets purchased prior to November 1, upon which the war tax had not been paid."

You'll have to pay those extras for the day, over seven hundred dollars.

When can you have it ready for him, Knowitall?

Editor

Some time tomorrow.

Esemon

(Looks helplessly at editor—turns—shakes head sadly and exits.)

Editor

(To secretary.) Call Hackwriter in here, and tell him to rewrite the scene and any others which need it, so the star can be "closeup" nine-tenths of the time.

Secretary

What about the sense of the story?

Editor

Forget it. (He yawns and looks at his watch.) Eleven thirty—I'm going to lunch; I'll be back at four o'clock. (He exits.)

CURTAIN

THE CURE:—Employ for each director, a practical director-writer of experience; let these two work in conjunction with the star; let these three "dope" out their own stories, submit them for approval, as your money will pay for their production. If approved, let them make their own continuity; THEN THERE WILL BE NO COME-BACK. There will be no "commissions" from book publishers. No bad stories from favorite stars. No going over several hundred subjects in HOPE of finding something to suit. HAVE IT MADE TO ORDER, LIKE A SUIT OF CLOTHES. When one writer "wears out" with a certain director and star, move him to another director and star, and the writer from the other director and star to the first. One of the largest and successful producing concerns, at the suggestion of the author, adopted this policy, and it has PROVED THE ANSWER TO THE COMPLEX SCENARIO QUESTION. IT IS PRODUCING BETTER SURE-FIRE PICTURES AND SAVING THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS. NAMES AND PROOFS OF FACTS ON FILE AT THIS OFFICE.

Fuelless Tuesday Rumors Stir Baltimore

There is a great deal of unrest and indecision in Baltimore at the present time among the exhibitors regarding the heatless Tuesday order which has been put into effect recently. All of the men have gone to Washington, the headquarters for Maryland distribution, and have arranged their programs so that the big features falling on Tuesday could be switched to some other day in the week. The film branches also have been working under bad conditions, but now that they have practically rearranged their program to good working order, there is a rumor afloat that the fuelless Tuesday will be discontinued. Whether this will go into effect or not the exhibitors do not know, inasmuch as there is a great deal of indecision concerning the matter. The men have decided to sit tight and watch developments and in case the theatres will be allowed to open Tuesday, they will try to arrange their programs as near to the old working order as possible. Yet these men are mighty patriotic, and should the present plan be kept in effect, not one will grumble in view of the fact that it is meaning so much to the nation at the present time.

Trade Press Guests of Petrova Company

Members of the motion picture trade press were guests of the Petrova Picture Company at Murray's on Saturday, February 9, when "The Light Within," Mme. Petrova's second starring vehicle under the auspices of her own organization, was given a private showing. The presentation was followed by a luncheon. A leading Broadway orchestra was present and elaborate brochures dealing with the photoplay were presented to the guests as souvenirs.

Some of the prominent officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through which channel Madame Petrova's special features are being distributed, were present, together with many notables of the profession. Arrangements for the showing and dinner were in the hands of D. M. Henderson and Bert Ennis, advertising manager and publicity director, respectively, of the Petrova Picture Company.

New Producing Company Is Organized

Irving E. Goldstein, of the Superior Photoplay Co., has organized a new film producing company to be known as Gwendolyn Films, with headquarters at the Knickerbocker Theatre Building, the purpose of organization being, according to Mr. Goldstein, to "produce feature photoplays by the world's best authors."

Emil Johnson, former manager and director of Sunshine Films, Inc., will be manager of production, and Hugo Hamlin has been engaged as leading man.

The new organization's first production will be "For Dear Old Glory," and this will be followed by "Bleeding Belgium," "For Sale—A Woman's Heart" and "The Judge Higher Up."

HOW LOUD THE SILENCE SPEAKS!

J. M. WATERS until recently signed himself "Proprietor of the Lyric theatre, Sioux City, Iowa." For many weeks he had been writing Manager J. H. Calvert, of the Laemmle exchange in Omaha that the Lyric was soon to be closed and the building torn down by the owners.

Finally the time came when he knew the date on which he would have to close. Another message had to be written to Manager Calvert. It was a plain sheet of paper. At the top was written the date. Then: "Dear Curley—"

There the message ended. But, pinned to the sheet was—

A bunch of crepe, tied in a pretty funeral knot!

Cooley Heads Florida League

Tampa Man Re-elected at Annual Convention which Discusses Tuesday Closing Order and Other Problems

FOR the purpose of discussing the Tuesday closing order of the Fuel Administrator and many other matters of importance to the exhibitors of motion pictures, the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Florida was held in Jacksonville last week. The meeting was presided over by President C. D. Cooley of Tampa, assisted by Secretary Al. H. LaBelle of Tampa. A number of addresses were made by exhibitors, including H. T. Titus of Daytona, Jesse Clarke of Jacksonville, E. J. Sparks of Jacksonville, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises; James B. Kelley, general manager of the Southern States Film company, Atlanta; Robert Simlar, manager of the General Film Company, Atlanta; C. T. Gordam, manager of the Consolidated Film Company, Atlanta and Jacksonville, and Frank Chamberlain, manager of the Paramount Film Exchange, Atlanta.

Dr. U. T. Kook talked on "Film Leakage," telling the exhibitors that this very unnecessary evil now existing must be eliminated.

Among those attending the meeting were: Leo C. Garner, Washington, D. C.; H. T. Titus, Daytona; Carl Kettler, West Palm Beach; William P. Spivens, New York City; Al H. La Belle, Tampa; Lewis Kalbfield, Palatka; A. A. Tano, West Palm Beach; C. D. Cooley, Tampa; B. Beacham, Orlando; Reginald De Koven, Kassimmee; E. C. Behrens, Quincy; Harry Leach, Miami; L. P. Davis, Arcadia; Milton Jacobs, Ft. Myers; E. C. Bennett, Ocala; H. T. Pasish, Gainesville; Frank Genevar, St. Augustine; Bert Johnston, Titusville; T. S. Hays, Deland; J. E. Rivers, Green Cove Springs, and several prominent film men.

As a climax to the event a banquet was given in the evening at the Mason hotel by Judge Henry T. Titus of Daytona, and L. D. Joel of Jacksonville. During the evening many speeches were made, among which were several appropriate toasts given by motion picture stars, among whom were Harry Morey of the Vitagraph Company, who is at present producing a new feature picture in Florida, and Harold Lockwood of the Metro Company.

At the annual election of officers for the ensuing year C. D. Cooley of Tampa, was re-elected president; Al H. LaBelle of Tampa, was re-elected secretary and treasurer, and T. S. Hays of DeLand, vice-president. Another meeting of the association will be held in Daytona on May 18 for the purpose of further considering many matters of importance to the exhibitors, and a 90 per cent attendance is expected. The League will make every effort to secure the representation of every exhibitor in the state.

Review Secretary Studies Soldier Shows

Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, has returned to New York from a two weeks' visit to a number of cities near training camps made under the auspices of the Playground and Recreation Association of America for the purpose of studying commercial amusements provided for the soldiers and sailors. He visited Boston and Lowell, Mass., New London, Conn., and Philadelphia. In Boston, he attended a meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. A dozen of the exhibitors present offered to distribute free tickets to certain of the men in the Service Clubs, at the Navy Yard and elsewhere as their bit. The exhibitors were unanimous in expressing the desire that no films should be exhibited to soldiers and sailors which might be suggestive or improperly stimulating. It was suggested that a committee be appointed to co-operate with the Boston Camp Community Service in relation to commercial amusements.

Casey Retains Place in Boston

John M. Casey has been reappointed Mayor's License Clerk of Boston, it was announced this week by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The Board considers this an unusual tribute to Mr. Casey's efficiency.

The duties of Mr. Casey include the regulation of motion pictures, vaudeville, burlesque and musical comedy.

Gerard's Picture Ready Soon

Director William Nigh Finishing Cutting and Editing—Scenes Shot at Camp Upton Last Taken—German Intrigue Exposed

WITH the taking of the final scenes at Camp Upton, of ex-Ambassador James W. Gerard's book, the production, "My Four Years in Germany," was completed and is being cut, titled and assembled by Director William Nigh.

"My Four Years in Germany" is not a war film. It will tell with absolute fidelity, the whole inside story of Prussian intrigue against America, and the world, from the viewpoint of Ambassador Gerard.

The picture begins with the famous Zabern incident in Germany, when a Prussian officer cut down a lame shoemaker in the little German town. This incident crowned the feeling of resentment of the population against the militaristic Prussian system, which was beginning to take strong root, and one of the little known reasons for the war was the desire of the imperialistic element to keep the people busy with a short and profitable war.

From then, on the whole, story of the rape of Belgium, the entry of England into the arena, the scenes at the embassy, the sinking of neutral ships, and the violation of American rights and the entrance of America into the war is told.

Every notable character in this war is presented with a thorough knowledge of the autocratic motives that moved them to do the things they did, and the Kaiser is shown as he really is, a puppet, moved by stronger wills to build a world autocracy.

It is said that one of the most dramatic moments of the picture is the scene of the banquet given in Gerard's honor at the Chamber of Commerce. It was a love feast at which America was toasted and the Ambassador lauded.

Director Nigh said: "The picture is history, tense, dramatic, pictured as it was seen by the one eye witness who went through it all, and every scene and character has been so faithfully reproduced, that Ambassador Gerard stood amazed when he saw them before him.

"'My Four Years in Germany' is one of the most remarkable pictures that have ever been filed, and will be a remarkable state rights production because of the tremendous publicity given the book, and the vital importance of the picture to every American. This picture is the answer to the question of, 'Why America is in the War.'"

"Birth of Democracy" Opens Big

Export and Import Company's Independent Feature Makes Fine Showing at First Public Presentation—Story of French Revolution

"THE BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY" had its first public showing at Marcus Loew's New York theatre last week and played to crowded houses during its run. It was received by New Yorkers with a hearty welcome and was pronounced by many who witnessed the first public showing, to be one of the biggest productions of the current season.

"The Birth of Democracy" is in seven reels and reveals incidents which happened during the early part of the French Revolution, known as the Reign of Terror, when the destinies of France were swayed by Robespierre. It enters upon the screen at a particularly timely period and its reception at its premiere showing speaks well for its future successes. An official of the Export and Import Company, which firm is handling the exploitation of the feature, said:

"In this picture we see France crushed, yet triumphant, yielding to false prophets, but finally destroying those who led her into chaos. It is impossible to avoid the comparison between blood-stained Russia of the present era and France in a bygone age. Therefore, this film does something more than entertain—it teaches a lesson, one which Young America will do well to take to heart. For Democracy is now upon her bitterest trial, as exemplified in the street fighting in Petrograd, scenes in which the French Revolution lives again.

"In all the catalogue of emotional sensations there is not one item missing—scorn, irony, rage, despair, passion, love-enthralling—all are in evidence. Lydia Bordelli, the featured player, sways her audience with her dramatic power. A. Fabiani gives a capital performance in the role of Robespierre.

"But when all is said and done the fact remains that 'The Birth of Democracy' carries its chief appeal to those who delight in a magnificently presented spectacle, altogether apart from the exquisite acting which will win the favor of many critics. Finer photography has never been seen upon the screen. The lighting effects are simply faultless and several of the views have all the charm and irresistible lure of a tapestry formed by the hand of some great artist. Add to this, perfect direction, swift action, splendid grouping and unbroken continuity, and it is difficult to prophesy anything less than a great success for this really unique picture."

"The Birth of Democracy" has been booked in the various houses on the Marcus Loew circuit, as well as in those of the Independent Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and will begin its up-state showing in Shay's Hippodrome, Buffalo, where it has been engaged for an entire week's run. The Boston Photoplay Company has booked the picture for a week's run in the largest theatre in Boston, and the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange will present it for the same length of time at the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, the largest theatre in that city.

New Corporations

THE following new corporations within the industry were included in the records of the Corporation Trust Company, of Jersey City, for the week ending February 9:

NEW YORK

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY, INC.—General theatrical booking business and manufacturing of motion pictures; incorporated at Manhattan by Isidor Unger, A. B. Stupel and Della Rindskopf, all of 1475 Broadway, New York City.

LEVENTHAL AMUSEMENT CORPORATION.—To manage theatres and motion picture houses; incorporated for $5,000, at Brooklyn. Jacob Leventhal, Gussie Ieventhal, of 676 Riggs avenue, Brooklyn, and Rosie Silver of 507 Barbey street, are the incorporators.

LITERARY SERIAL AND PHOTO-PLAY CORPORATION, INC.—To manufacture motion pictures. Incorporated for $100,000, at Brooklyn. John J. Lavin, 532 Flatbush avenue, New York City; August Braun, 15 Sedgewick avenue, Brooklyn, and Arthur W. Liebers, 1914 Bleeker street, are the incorporators.

DELAWARE

LUNA PARK AMUSEMENT COMPANY.—Incorporated for the purpose of conducting places of amusement, in the sum of $500,000, at Wilmington. F. D. Buck, M. L. Horty and K. E. Longfield, all of Wilmington, are the incorporators.

Pettijohn and Rapf Take Western Trip

C. C. Pettijohn, who represents the Producers and Exhibitors, Affiliated, in company with Harry Rapf, one of the eight independent producers who are engaged in the "producers to exhibitors direct" plan, left New York February 10 for the Middle West to wind up their contracts with exhibitors and to make arrangements for the showing of the first production.

They will be gone about ten days. The schedule as far as has been mapped out comprises Cleveland, Monday; Detroit, Tuesday; Chicago, Wednesday, and Indianapolis on Thursday. The first positive print of Herbert Brenon's "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in the stellar role, will be shown to exhibitors who have gathered for that purpose in the leading cities. It will probably be the first production to be released through this direct booking method.

According to the present plans, the second picture to be marketed will be Florence Reed in "The Struggle Everlasting," a High Art Production, made by Harry Rapf.

"Tarzan" Gives Liberally to Fund

Through the spirit manifested by the National Film Corporation of America, sponsors for the new film, "Tarzan of the Apes," "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" has been enriched to the extent of $622.88. This check is given as a result of an arrangement entered into between Harry Reichenbach of the National Film Corporation and Bert Ennis of the Petrova Picture Company and McClure Pictures, who has handled the publicity for the fund. The ten per cent of the gross profits donated from the showing of "Tarzan of the Apes" at the Broadway theatre during the week of January 27, has helped to swell appreciably the total of the fund which is sending smokes weekly to the American soldiers in France.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Rothacker?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

EVERY now and then—frequently — the Twentieth Century glides into New York, smoothly reverses brakes and emits a pleasant breeze from the West—beg pardon, we mean Chicago.

The pleasant breeze take on the form of a well-tailored, well-barbered, well-shod—oh, well, yes, a well-looking, well liked, young man who circulates breezily and snappily in and out of the main arteries of the business and Twentieth Centuries smilingly homeward with a fat bundle of printing contracts under his arm.

His name is Rothacker.

Perhaps you think of "Rothacker" as an institution—a studio laboratory, modern, striking and solid like the advertising nameplate of "Rothacker."

He is an institution; a pretty solid one made by himself, but we and many others know him as "Watty."

So of Watty we would write.

With the memories of the Directors ball fresh in our minds we cannot help but speak of Watty's dancing.

Indeed we made a mental study that evening of film men as dancers. We picked R. A. Rowland as the worst dancer and "Watty" as the best.

R. A. Rowland starts off as if he wanted to see a man on business straight across at the other end of the hall. Every now and then he discovers that he has a partner attached loosely to his wrist whereupon he indulges in a slight attack of locomotor ataxia and then hurries straight on. (We spoke of this to Mr. Rowland, whereupon he told us very quickly and frankly to go to a certain place.)

But Watty dances.

Yet it was not his grace we admired so much as his rapid method of circulation. He danced with all the wives, aunts, sisters and cousins of all the men present with whom he is or may be doing business. He certainly covered the field. He was here, there and everywhere. All the wives, aunts, sisters and cousins smiled at him—and the male relatives smiled at him—and Watty smiled back—and everybody smiled. As for us, we stood around like a stick, and our only effort at conversation uncovered Mr. Rowland's profanity.

So as a business man we envied Watty.

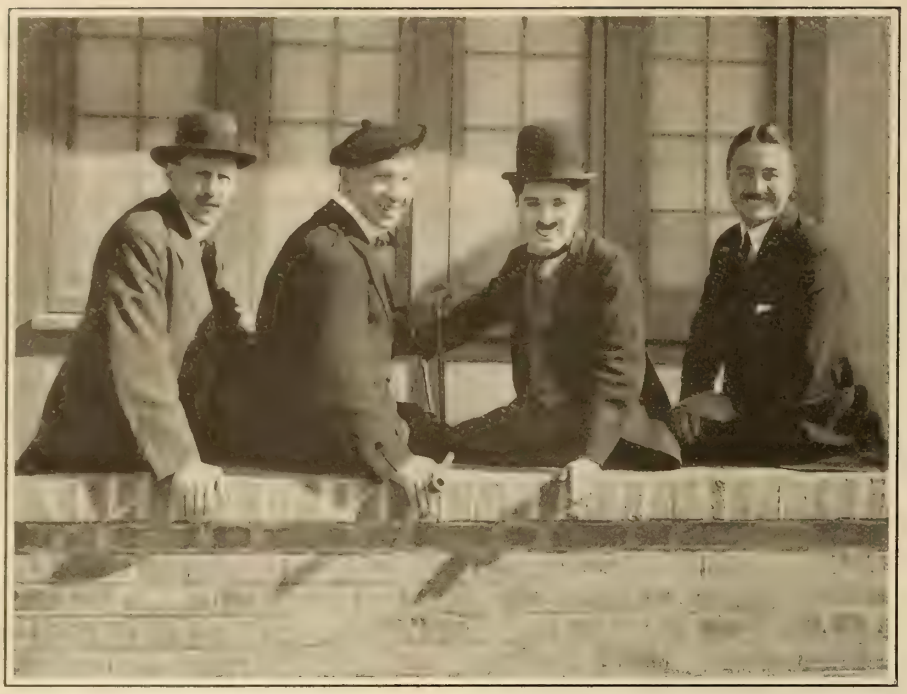
He has a way with him, which is another form of saying that he has personality.

His is politic. Yet he's blunt and straight to the point.

Probably he's blunter with us than others because he was once in the trade-paper business. It's almost embarrassing for two trade paper men to talk at each other in a polite or platitudinous manner.

But he's all business is Watty—with all his natty appearance, and good looks and smile and diplomacy. He's a darn good business man—is Rothacker of Chicago. He's a practical fellow.

He just wrote us a letter which opened and ended very politely and cordially, but which indicated in between in straight Chicagoese that he had paid Harry Palmer for the sketch of himself, and that he looked for a write-up and didn't want any nonsense about it—nor to pay for any lunches as Winik did.



He admits that he originated the moving pictures advertising business, was the first and only specialist in that field in 1910, and that to-day he has the largest laboratory-studio in America, housing among other large jobs, all of the developing and printing for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, including Madame Petrova, Master Charlie Chaplin, etc., pictures.

All right, Watty, you win. We'd much rather write about you. But if you insist upon these sordid business details why here they are.

We wanted to speak of your progressiveness and aggressiveness, the fact that young as you are you have been honored right along by prominent appointments within the industry,

Tom Vallance, Business Manager for Harry Lauder. the Scotch Comedian Himself, Charlie Chaplin and Sid Chaplin Were Caught by the Camera at Chaplin's New Studio in Hollywood

Chaplin in War Relief Picture

Appears with Harry Lauder in Short Reel for Exploitation Everywhere—Comedian Expects Big Results

COMBINING two distinct brands of comedy for the purpose of raising a million dollars or more, Charlie Chaplin and Harry Lauder, the world's laugh producers, have been filmed together in a five-hundred-foot subject which will shortly be exploited throughout this country and the other allied nations, and the net proceeds will be added to Lauder's $5,000,000 War Relief Fund.

The idea was conceived by the screen star when he was entertaining Lauder at his new motion picture plant in Hollywood. The plan so strongly appealed to the Scotch humorist that not a moment was lost in carrying it out, and two hours later the camera had filmed what is claimed to be the most unique comedy ever made.

Chaplin and Lauder comprise the entire cast and the story is a collaboration of these two performers. There is only one scene in the picture and during a large part of the pantomime Lauder has adopted the Chaplin style and the screen star takes a fling at the characteristics for which the Scotchman is widely known.

When the story was completed, the two comedians, with their personal business managers, Tom Vallance and Sydney Chaplin, took up the subject of turning the film into money, and it was decided that the entire Chaplin organization would be used to further the success of the venture.

Much depends upon the action of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the corporation holding the contract for Chaplin's exclusive services. They are the ones who will determine whether it will be a violation of contract to exploit him in the manner suggested.

Efforts will also be made to raise an additional sum of money through the sale of fifty thousand photographs of the two comedians. A dozen different poses were taken and plans for the sale and distribution of these will be arranged by the two business managers.

Chaplin is confident that the sale of the film will net at least one million dollars.

Crandall Theatre Roof Caves In

The roof of Harry M. Crandall's new Metropolitan theatre, at Tenth and F Streets, N. W., Washington, which house Mr. Crandall expected to open shortly, caved in January 30, carrying with it the balcony and causing damage to the extent of about $30,000.

Despite this handicap, Mr. Crandall is going ahead with the construction of the theatre and expects to open it about two months later than the time originally set.

that you are a leading citizen of Chicago, that you know more people and are known to more in the industry than almost any man, that you are self-made and needn't be criticized for the job—and any number of such things.

But now you see, we haven't room.

So long, Watty.

In and Out of Town

W. E. Drummond, Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., spent last week in New York looking at the current offerings. He took back with him several features for distribution in his territory.

O. D. Woodward, of Denver and Kansas City, came to New York last week for the purpose of completing plans for the production of special features in Denver. Mr. Woodward stopped at the Astor Hotel. He will start producing in Denver upon his return.

R. P. Madden, who has been the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation representative in Canada, arrived in New York last week. Mr. Madden will be assigned another territory to work in the interest of the same organization.

M. H. Hoffman, president and general manager of Foursquare Pictures, returned to the New York office last week after an extended trip through the country, which took him to every Foursquare Exchange.

Carlos Crombe, an exhibitor of Mexico City, Mexico, is in New York. Mr. Crombe is the owner of the Parisiana theatre, one of the largest in that city.

World's Free Service Appreciated

World Film Corporation's Chicago office has received the following communication from President Joseph Hopp of the Illinois branch of the Exhibitors' League:

Manager of the Chicago Branch of the World Film Corporation,
207 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.
Dear Sir:

Through you I commend the course of the World Film Corporation in recognizing that exhibitors are meeting unusual adverse conditions. In offering your patrons repeater service free of charge you are doing something practical. Actions speak louder than words. Instead of expressing sympathy your company is doing something material. It is the kind of aid worth while during these times when exhibitors find it difficult to make both ends meet.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH HOPP,
President Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America—Illinois Branch.

Fire Proclamation Used by Universal

The proclamation on fire prevention recently issued by Mayor Hylan, of New York City, has been illustrated in motion pictures by the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. This first link in an educational campaign of fire prevention is to be shown to the public in one of the early issues of the Universal Animated Weekly.

The campaign is receiving the personal attention of Harry Levey, manager of the Universal's Industrial Department.

INTRENCHED

Last week we announced the subscription receipts of MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be $480. This week, ending February 7, the total is $358 (complete records open to any advertiser at our office).

No other paper in this field can give such evidence of solidity.

Renewals play a large part in these receipts; and renewals are open, unanswerable proofs of a publication that gives service, that is read, and that is taken only for its intrinsic value—in other words, that is solidly and broadly intrenched.

The new subscriptions represent the new theatres just completed, and those received in our 100 per cent. circulation campaign through our local subeditions—the West Coast, the Central States and the Eastern (now in preparation).

Next week we shall tell how the NEWS "blankets" this field. It will be interesting.

Putting An Appeal In Programs

House Organs Offer Opportunity For the Intimate Talks To Patrons—Summarizing the Main Points

PERSONALITY should be the keynote of the ideal motion picture theatre program. By personality, we do not mean that the "I" spirit should prevail, but there should be something about it distinctive from the house organs in your section, something that radiates the atmosphere of your theatre, something that will be recognized by the reader as carrying something more intimate than the stilted printed appeal. Here is an essential that is hard to define, yet it is one of the things that divides the line between good and bad house organs.

Whether you have a two page folder or an ambitious twenty-four page booklet you should always strive for it to fulfill a special mission. Of course, the basic object of the house organ is to tell the people about your current show and to announce the future ones in such a way that your patrons will come again. But there is something further to be accomplished, and your house organ has not accomplished the most until it becomes a part of your theatre and therefore a part of the people who come to your house.

These generalities we use in beginning this last of the series of articles on programs because we want to warn everyone who has not started a program not to do so unless they intend to give it more than a mechanical interest. Conducting a house organ is not the same thing as sticking the one sheets in front of your house. At times it serves the same purpose, but it has got to go a good deal further and serve the spirit of the house. And how, do you ask, can mere printed matter be more than a formal affair?

This week we are using illustrations from three theatres, the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa.; the Mahaiwe, Great Barrington, Mass., and the Rivoli, New York City.

It is rather unusual that the program of the Auditorium should come to us as fulfilling every requirement that we laid down in the first articles for house organs of comparatively small cost and which did not carry advertising. Just for a moment we will recall that we told you that one page ought to be devoted to each different attraction, that the typography should be neat, that the full list of pictures shown should be given and that the cast of the feature should be given, with just enough about the picture to whet the advance interest. This program fulfills all of these requirements.

There are a few other things about this program which is printed on medium stock of varying tints, six by twelve inches and folds twice. In the first place the initial page is kept distinctive. While we have recommended that the name plate of the theatre be used, this house keeps a neat standing design. The cover is illustrated with a scene out of one of the week's attractions or of one of the stars. Another page is devoted to the next week attractions, supplying the "lap over" idea.

But the main point that we want to get to here is the human element that is put in the program by the page that is devoted to the theatre's talks to the patrons. It is impossible that one should read these programs week after week without getting the atmosphere of the house. Let's see the reason why. In one of these talks, under the caption of the "Coatesville Idea," the house organ says:

"Most people know that the Coatesville Auditorium is 'the only place of its kind in America.' We lay claim to that title, because no other Y. M. C. A. in the United States—or in the world for that matter—has utilized the motion picture to the extent we have. And no other user of motion pictures has built up his patronage along the lines we have adopted as our standards."

Yes, it is true; the theatre is run by the local Y. M. C. A. and that organization has so well put the spirit of the organization behind it, the spirit of the town, that it has become a part of the community, and in our opinion this program itself has been in a large measure responsible for this state of affairs.

This same effect can be attained in other ways. The Mahaiwe theatre, for instance, devotes its last page to gossip of the sort that gets close to the patrons, the sort that they get to look for each week. In short, there can be no formal line of procedure laid down for getting the spirit. As the old lady said, "It all depends." The appeal consists merely in reaching the ground on which the theatre's and the patrons' interest unite.

Mahaiwe also uses a scene out of one of the week's shows on the front cover, but maintains its standard appearance in other respects. We believe that this is a good idea for inexpensive programs for in nearly every case these cuts can be obtained from your exchange at a very small cost.

We regret that we have been able to find one of the perfect programs of larger size without coming to that of the Rivoli, New York's newest and finest theatre, for in the form that it is printed it is too expensive for any but a most limited few houses through the country. It is printed on heavy plate paper and in colors and contains no advertising in its sixteen 5¼ by 7¾ pages. But all that it does can be done on a smaller scale in other theatres, and there is no reason why advertisements can be included by following the advice given in the last week article.

The cover design remains the same permanently, only the color used varying from week to week to make the different ones distinctive. Especially where the theatre has a distinctive exterior design we like the idea of using this permanent design, for it adds a certain intimate touch. The original plate itself does not cost a great deal, but there must be assurance that you are going to have good printing or there will be a smudgy effect.

Week after week the Rivoli program is filled with intimate matter. There is always a talk from S. L. Rothapfel about some feature of the theatre or some policy. It is good "close up" stuff that makes people not only feel at home in the house, but causes them to go out and tell these intimate things to others, with something of the feeling that they are in on secrets that the public as a whole does not know. There is another page containing a talk with some noted musician and generally a little talk about the overture or some other musical number. Other pages are occupied with the program itself and the annnouncement for the coming week and with the program at the Rialto sister house. Two other pages we have reproduced. One of these is devoted to an excellent half-tone of some star that is regularly seen at that theatre, or who is to be seen soon and these generally bear a message to the patrons. Of course this makes interesting stuff for the fans to preserve. Two other pages, are devoted to "Screen Gossip."

Now aside from the high quality of the paper, the cost of the cover design, the color work in printing and the cuts, there is nothing about this program that cannot be followed by any other theatre and at the same time maintain the same intimate touch with your patrons, keep up the spirit of the theatre, make everyone who buys a ticket feel a share in your enterprise.

There is no reason why a portion of this space should not be devoted to advertising without seriously marring the appearance, though of course a program without advertising is preferable—but mighty expensive.

It is hard to conceive a theatre or a community where there is not something each week for one of these little talks. There are hundreds of things that will suggest themselves to you—that you try to have clean pictures, the courtesy of your employes, the care in your projection, ad finitum. We impress these little discussions because they make your patrons feel that you take

Pictures in War Time

In England, burdened as she is with the war the effects of which this country has hardly begun to feel, moving pictures are constantly increasing in popularity

The annual attendance at moving picture theatres in the British Isles is 1,075,000,000 or an average of one visit every two weeks for each person. Yet the British are not as enthusiastic "fans" as the Americans, for while picture theatres there average one house to nine thousand population, in America the average is one to every five thousand

There are good reasons why the moving picture should increase its hold on the public in time of war. First is the fact that it brings home speedily and vividly, war conditions through the news weeklies. Then, too, it is inexpensive and provides a greater value for a small sum than is obtainable in any other way

But greatest of all, is the social side. The motion picture theatre has become almost a part of the home: it has crept into the family life. It is the first thought of war-weary folks at home, who must have recreation, and yet who cannot endure the thought of entertainment that carries any suggestion of extravagance or boastful display

Ray Rides Red Racer

Of all the innumerable brands and varieties of gas-wagons that crowd the boulevards of Los Angeles and its environs, there is perhaps none more noisy or which can be seen further, owing to its brilliant crimson hue than the new car affected by Charley Ray.

It is recorded that when his car is heard and seen, it is stalked for miles by his admirers, who are occasionally rewarded by an off-screen 'close up' of the young star.

Ray felt disconsolate because he was unable to use the machine in his last picture, 'The Hired Man.' In the story his rival for the affections of the farmer's daughter drives a car to the annual village dance. Here was Ray's chance to get his car upon the screen, but because a farm hand would be somewhat out of place in a racer, Charley refused to have it driven by any one other than himself, and so another car was used.

An Appropriate Musical Setting

SOMETIMES the orchestral accompaniment to the photoplay reaches weird and incongruous heights of medley, as illustrated by an incident that happened recently. In a motion picture theatre in a Southern city the musical accompaniments were rendered on a hurdy-gurdy piano of the tin-pan variety. The drama had reached the point of tender pathos. The hero of the play was dying very slowly, very dramatically, while the others of the cast were weeping at his bedside. The callow youths in the audience looked on with Adam's apples bobbing, and the maidens were audibly sniffling. Just as the dying hero said his last words, the hurdy-gurdy burst forth in a perfect frenzy of the song 'Good Bye, Girls, I'm Through'.

AFTER we had seen the first show at the Rialto with Rothapfel Sunday, an argument came up about one of the two selections sung by the Rialto quartet. In the informal conferences that follow the first showing of a new bill there are always little things to be considered and possibly changed. One of those present didn't like one of the quartet numbers; he thought that it was too foolish.

"There's where you are wrong," said Mr. Rothapfel? "Did you notice the little laughs that it got? It was a relief to the audience after the more serious things. Of course, we want to maintain a high standard in our theatres, but don't get the idea into your head that you have to be 'educating' the public all the time and making them realize that you are 'educating' them. That is the reason that the symphony concerts are not packed these days. The public is human and the public likes the human touches—now and then a little of the 'foolishness,' if you want to call it that."

"Capriccio Espanol," the overture, is one of the most brilliant things that has been played at the Rialto in months and it got an avalanche of applause. The lighting effects for this were first in red and then with the ivory effect toward the middle of the number. Then followed two scenics, "Fontainbleau Forest" and "The Trianons," for which the "Trianon suite" was placed. And then the quartet number which we have just mentioned. The first selection was a little novelty, "Sally King," half sung and half spoken, and as Mr. Rothapfel pointed out, there were chuckles all over the house. This was sung with full lighting effect and then all the lights faded into red as "The Sandaman" was begun, then turning into deep purple to give the night effect. The audience was insistent that the quartet come back, but that never happens at the Rialto, for Mr. Rothapfel is opposed to encores and opposed to having the singers constantly coming back to make new bows. And that sort of a thing is tiresome to the audience. Rothapfel works on the correct theory that the artists should give the public the full value in the numbers that they are supposed to render, and that their duty is to please the audiences and not to kill time taking bows which may be genuine of the work of "Claques." And all of this lowering and raising of curtains and reappearance of the singers breaks into the continuity, prevents that smooth running of the evening's entertainment that is so marked at the "R." houses. This is a point that managers may well think over.

Rialto animated is unusually short this week, but remarkably effective. It opens with a Mutual picture of training French war dogs with some shots of them going into the battle lines to succor the wounded. "Our Great Little Army" march, together with battle effects made this particularly appealing and it got a big hand. Tommies and English nurses in snowball battles and a soldier's theatrical entertainment added a little human touch to the war activities. Then Lord Reading, the new British Ambassador was shown. Through these three "Walnut Tree" and English dance was played.

Hearst-Pathe showed pictures of King Gustav of Sweden, attending the Scandanavian conference, played with the Swedish national processional march. No better lesson of the influence of pictures in war times could be given than right here, for the audience sat silent through this, and there was not even the ripple of applause for a monarch whose sympathies are uncertain. Universal pictures of skiing, showing some remarkable falls, introduced for the humorous effect, was shown with a gallop, and pictures of the railroad wreck at Grainger, Ill., had the first few bars of "Undine" overture.

Then came one of the punchiest effects that we have seen in new pictures in many a day. First were shown pictures of the martyr ship, the Tuscania leaving New York. First there was a touch of "Finlandia" overture, the solemnly played music adding a touch that caused everyone to pay a silent tribute. This was turned into the "Terror Scene" as pictures of a German U-boat were shown. And then came the big punch, America's answer, showing a number of warships. "American Festival March" was played and there was wild applause and shouts all over the house, many people standing up and crying out. This Hearst-Pathe picture was one of the biggest hits in a long time.

Mlle. D'Espinoy, of the Opera Comique, appears again this week, singing the "mad Scene" from Hamlet with remarkable effect. As the result of her frequent and exclusive appearances at the Rialto, she is to-day one of the most popular artistes in New York.

Special music was prepared for the featured picture, Olga Petrova in "The Light Within," an intensely dramatic story. There was not a suggestion of a laugh and it was for that reason that there was as much comedy as possible in the rest of the bill which included "Watch Your Neighbor," a Mack Sennett comedy of the furiously funny sort with all kinds of trick photography.

"Procession of Bacchus" is the other orchestra number. One who studies audiences at the Rialto could see that many people, regular attendants were expecting the chorus to make its appearance at any moment, for that has been done at each of the three last bills, but no such thing happened. One of the secrets of Rothapfel's success is to "keep 'em guessin'." Any one who goes to the Rialto regularly will tell you that one of the elements that delight so is the fact that you never know what is going to happen. There is a difference between disappointing people and surprising them.

That is the reason why the public backs the "R's." That is one of the reasons why a squad of American marines are being sent by the Government to have a part in the bill at the Rivoli opening Monday—which will be reviewed in the next issue—because he has kept the standard up and because everybody knows that he never lends himself to anything of the cheap in exploitation, and, as we have told you before, the only kind of propaganda that he allows his houses to be used for is the propaganda of patriotism.

COMEDY and patriotism are the dominant notes at the Strand this week. And evidently the patrons at the Strand like the comedy features, for at 9.30 Sunday evening there were as great throngs waiting for admission as there were two weeks before when the first of the Goldwyn-Mabel Normand pictures was shown. This week's feature is Madge Kennedy in "Our Little Wife."

"Are Married Policemen Safe?" is a riotous Sunshine comedy with all sorts of trick photography that kept the audience in a roar of laughter. Further comedy was contributed by one of the Pathe "Analyses of Motion," this showing a horse in action. Although this is a more or less of a scientific study the results from the slowing up of the movements are comedy.

Patriotic effects dominate the Topical Review. It opens with the Pathe pictures of the Tuscania and the effect already described in the story of the Rialto, and then shows McAdoo issuing war insurance to soldiers and sailors. Striking pictures of the ice jams in the Ohio and Mississippi follow, and then a Paramount Bray, "Southern Mountaineers." Pictures of the Spanish mission at the French front brought cheers for the heroes of Verdun, and the audience went wild when the battle cry, "They shall not pass!" flashed on the screen. Then followed pictures of "Our Boys in France," and a flash of Roosevelt that brought cheers, followed by the pictures of Pershing returning from Mexico and others of the soldiers in France. Of course this got a big reception and it worked into the song that followed, Charles Semrof singing "Home ward Bound." There was an attractive special setting for this showing, a camp scene in France at night, which was highly commendable.

"Racamadour" is the scenic, and another interesting number is a Bray study of flying. "Orpheus" is the overture, and the other musical number, Anita Tagel and Anton Lescaut singing the duet from "Rigoletto."

Advertising for the Smaller Theatres

WITHIN the last month the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has examined and criticized newspaper display advertising, programs and handbills from more than three hundred different newspapers. Many of these have been reproduced in these columns together with the comment. In scores of other instances the replies have gone by mail.

Theatres from the largest in the country to the "little fellows" using the country weeklies have written to tell us the benefit that they have been getting from this constructive effort. They had been accustomed in the past to having their work praised indiscriminately; they have appreciated it when they realized that at last a genuine effort was being made to tell them what was wrong and thereby improve their business.

A CONSIDERABLE portion of these requests have come from the theatres in the larger cities. In several cases the exhibitor has written that he hesitated to submit his specimens because he did not believe that we had time to go into the trouble of the smaller showmen.

And this is just where they are wrong. THE MAN WE WANT MOST TO HELP IS THE MAN WHO NEEDS HELP MOST.

You are the one who is most entitled to it; you are not incurring any debt by asking.

NINE-TENTHS of the publicity aids of the producers work for the benefit of the theatres in the larger cities. The service heads like to reproduce half page spaces advertising their particular pictures.

But the man who needs this help is the man who cannot afford to go to the expense of handsome half tones, who hasn't the training in designing artistic advertising and whose newspaper facilities are limited.

The NEWS wants to help these exhibitors. Many of them feel hesitant, probably, about sending in specimens of their work because they know that they are bad and because they do not care to have this fact commented upon publicly. In such cases we will be very glad to send the criticisms by mail, and without any expense. When you wish a private reply you need only to so indicate.

NO theatre is so small that it will not get the same service from us that we would accord the biggest house in the land.

Most of all we want to help the little fellows. You are not TOO LITTLE and there is NOTHING TOO BIG for us to do for you.

Let us help you. All our resources, all our expert advice will be centered on YOUR case, and you will have our solution of your problems, governed by but one purpose—TO HELP YOU.

House Program Affords Theatre Chance to Get in Close Touch with Its Patrons

an interest in them. There are dozens of topics of civic or neighborhood interest that will be timely. But let us suggest here that you never enter into politics and factional matters. We have before us one house program in which the manager, in his belief that he is making his program "chatty," brings personal paragraphs on his patrons into his columns. That may bring a laugh from some of your people but it is a mighty dangerous ground on which to tread.

We know of one manager in one of the smaller cities, where there was a fast independent baseball team, who devoted a page in his program to talking about the local club. We were seated in a film office in the nearest exchange city when the discussion of the program arose. "Look at the idiot," said one supposedly wise salesman. "I'll bet he doesn't have ten people at his matinee the next time there is a ball game in town." But this man did not see that this baseball team was a part of the town, that the town's pride was in it. And he didn't realize that what this theatre manager was trying to do, and doubtless doing, was to make this theatre a part of the town and share in that civic pride.

The closer you can get to your people is a mighty good thing and we don't know any better way than through the house program.

We had intended in these articles to go further into the criticism of various programs that come to us, but in a way that would be more of repetition, a discussion of types and methods. We shall be very glad to take up under "Your Idea—and Ours" a discussion of any programs and point out the good and bad things, or to discuss them with you by mail. Here we have tried to discuss the essentials, dividing the programs into various classes. There are certain things that you should always remember:

Always try to make your house organ the best possible, but never get overambitious. Never try to do anything on a big scale that will turn out to be an apparent cheap effort. Better to have a four-page folder on neat paper with clean type and intelligently prepared than a half-hundred pages of matter that is simply thrown together.

Your program is to serve a double purpose. To give the people in your theatre the data for the present bill and at the same time to so present facts about the pictures that are to be seen later in the week in such an attractive form that the patron will want to see that feature.

Advertising will probably pay the expenses of your program, but there is no reason for your antagonizing your local newspaper and you should never let any advertising matter creep into your program that is not up to the standard of your theatre. Don't sacrifice either content of the display or the style of it to a few dollars. Better be without it for a short time than ruin your whole appearance.

To be of value to yourself and your advertisers your program must be one that the recipient, if he gets it through your mailing list, will preserve and read it during the period that it covers, or that the patron who gets it in the theatre will take home with him.

Your newspaper advertising might be described as the well-known "clarion call" for your theatre. Then just as truly the house program ought to be your intimate word to those same patrons. It ought to link you and your theatre closer up to them. It is the thing that represents you after the screen is dark, the sort of a program that the women folk glance over in miladi's boudoir and the men folk read as they smoke their goodnight cigarette.

Yes, there is a lot of difference between the mere printed folder and the program that stands for something. And when you get down to the very bottom of it all, it is the same old story that is true of every portion of your business—the difference of running a "movie show" or of conducting one of your community's institutions.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Your Idea---and Ours

WE have been preaching right along the value of cuts in your advertising, and here is a splendid example of how the use of a cut and with the reading matter in very small letters can produce the most distinctive and striking of displays. This is the work of the Strand theatre, Omaha, and occupies a space four columns wide by ten inches deep. The picture has been borrowed from the original distributor's advertising in the trade papers and has been cleverly adapted to the purpose of the Omaha house, with the result that not only on account of its size, but because of the originality this display stands out on the entire page of the newspaper as the ONE THING to look at. And that is the ideal result.

And here is a little thing that we want to call to your attention. This picture was to be shown through Wednesday. The designer did not take your attention away from this picture for a second by announcing, even in the smallest type, the bill for the last half of the week.

The "Gees" in exaggeration pull to the left. They put the "Haws" on you.

ROYAL THEATRE, Providence, R. I., scores a hit with the use of a distinctive design in each of its Sunday displays. These specially drawn displays are always attractive and they are of special importance where the advertisements of all the theatres are placed together and one strives for distinction. With the exception of one thing we would declare that this was a splendid idea of exploitation. We cannot get away from the theory that every exhibitor ought to sell his first show first. Now in Providence there is no Sunday showing, and so this rule would apply to Monday. We would follow the idea of the Royal, but we would base this display such as is given to "The Honor System" on the Monday and Tuesday attraction. The fact that "The Honor System" may be the stronger picture should not enter into the argument, for that is all the more reason why it will sell itself when the time comes. The Royal, we believe, makes the mistake of, in a measure, inviting the people to wait until Friday and Saturday by saying, in effect, "Yes, we are going to have a show the first four days of the week, but the real attraction comes Friday and Saturday." An ideal arrangement would be for the Royal to follow this policy in the Sunday papers, the display based on the Monday show; the same plan on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning based on the Wednesday show and again Thursday afternoon and Friday morning on the week-end show. We are sure the aggregate receipts would be larger.

We like the way that the name of the theatre is displayed and linked in with the sketch, but we would suggest that in all such cases the letters should be exactly the same shape, whether in black or white effect, in all the advertising.

The Royal also uses this style effectively on special occasions like New Year's week. These Sunday displays regularly occupy a space three columns wide by five inches deep.

Where you want the superlative in your exploitation is in the word of mouth advertising of the patron AFTER he has seen the show.

HERE is a convincing piece of out-of-the-ordinary advertising that was put over by the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn. Preceded by a liberal advertising campaign, the theatre was packed on the opening day to see "Womanhood." Certainly one of the best sales arguments that could be advanced was that a record crowd saw this picture and went away in praise of the production. So the display writer hit upon the idea of publishing the exact figures and inviting those who failed to attend to ask those who did. And the display puts the adjectives in the mouths of others.

The writer of this display is to be congratulated on having said just enough and stopping. He had a right to presume that the advance advertising had carried a lot of weight and he was correct in figuring on the psychological effect of his announcement of the 3,383 patrons. It would make anybody who didn't already know ask about the picture. It was simply a case of sweeping the current along the faster. The display is three columns by ten inches.

The smile of your cashier may be one of your best revenue stamps.

ACADEMY THEATRE, Selma, Ala., was one of the first of the theatres in smaller cities to get attention in these columns, and we are glad to say that the manager of this house has shown marked progress with his displays, considering that the resources of his city's newspaper are limited.

Here he has achieved a very effective result. The thing that we don't like about the display is the list of names of the supporting cast. The public is not convinced by a mere string of names; it suspects that this is all you have. We would have mentioned the name of Wallace Reid as playing opposite Miss Farrar, and then have used the entire space alongside the cut for some striking phrase descriptive of the production.

What Live Wires Are Doing

There are seven days in every week. Remember that in your think department, if it does not apply anywhere else.

RECENTLY we discussed here the system of the Alcazar theatre, Birmingham, Ala., which uses an entire page in the Sunday issue, getting a special rate because it devotes part of the space to reading matter At that time we said that, though this plan had been worked successfully in some communities, we did not like it as a policy.

Now here is a case that emphasizes one of our objections. The Alcazar played "The Crisis" for an entire week. The picture was largely made in Mississippi, the adjoining state. Birmingham is not simply a Southern city, for, because of its great manufactories, it has brought in a large Northern population. And so the way to have advertised this picture to have attained the maximum results would have been with a big smash. True a page is devoted to this picture, but a page is devoted to the Alcazar each week. So there was nothing striking about this, nothing that would call the special attention to those who did not ordinarily read this page. The display portion was far too crowded for the amount of matter it contains. With the whole page used for real display and the big striking features of the picture brought out in bigger type we believe the box office results would have been greater.

Clean the holes in your pepper box and give it a good shake; that'll start something.

CLEVER, chatty and interesting is the front cover of the house organ of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, for its anniversary fortnight.

Manager Edward L. Hyman has always been able to make his program attractive by the intimate manner in which he talks to his patrons through his house organ, but there has been no better example than this in which he cites the list of noted stars who have been assembled to amuse the patrons during those two weeks.

There's a swing to this: "Merry Mortals, Glum Gatherers? Peppery Papas, All You Kids, Meddlesome Minnies, Sob Sisters, Soldier Sons, War Workers, Gertie Gloom, Busy Businessmen and Grouch Grandpas, you are all invited, etc." It's good stuff once in a while and it's bound to pay, especially in the case of neighborhood houses. It has the added punch of being timely.

Don't wait for your patron to tell you how good you show; make him effervesce with the delight of it.

WHILE this display is very much better than the average, what is there that is really wrong with it? The manager has used a space five columns wide and nearly a page in depth. It had the advantage that it dominates the page on account of the space it occupies, but it still has the "crowded" effect and that means that less people read it than should have read it.

We have told you often not to divide interest in two different productions that you may have coming on two different dates. The same thing applies to a single picture. Do not leave the impression on the patron that you are trying to reproduce for him everything that the picture is going to show. Make one thing stand out as your central idea. This display of the Temple theatre could have been made much better by using one of the larger cuts of Miss Garden and then just a few striking sentences about the production. Here is a point to remember: When you increase the amount of space you are using, don't at the same time increase the amount of matter that you put in it. That doesn't put any more punch in your advertising.

Exaggeration is like the odor of onions—it may attract a lot of attention, but it is just as sure to drive people away from you when they get "wise."

THIS is a perfect display. Please note that Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, has included every possible essential in this advertisement, and yet the things that stand out are the names of the theatre, and of the star and the title, and, of course, the picture of Norma Talmadge. And then in smaller type neatly arranged at the bottom of the advertisement we are told that it is an adaptation of Rupert Hughes' book, and that the star plays the dual role. At the top the theatre carries its name plate, prices and hours.

It is rather seldom that one sees such a well balanced display. The man who designed this has an eye for the niceties and appreciated thoroughly the points that ought to be called to the attention of the reader and the things that the reader would look for. To use the slang expression, he "played both ends against the middle" with splendid results.

Training Eyes of the Women on Me

This is the sixth of our series of articles, "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," by an exhibitor who tells each week what he is doing to develop his house, the lessons that he learns and the errors that he discovers. It is a frank discussion of the pleasures and evils of exhibition in a town of 15,000, and the tips contained here will probably be of value to managers in all sections.

By a Successful Exhibitor

ONE of the early lessons I learned was to make an appeal to the married women of the community. Before I started my theatre, the other houses were largely patronized by the young folks and the men of the community. Of course many of the wives came with their husbands, but there were few instances when the women came alone. I found that I was getting the men folks and the children out of the best families, but that the women were not interested. So I determined to make a special effort to enlist these among my boosters.

Because I have already referred to the circular letter evil, don't come to the conclusion that I do not believe that there is a very good use for such letters when the picture justifies it. It was one of the first means I used of getting in touch with the mothers of my section. It required some trouble, but I had carefully prepared four lists of these mothers; one for mothers of boys over sixteen and under sixteen, and for mothers of girls of the same ages. The first picture on which I tried this experiment was one in which a famous star appeared. It was founded on a book which most of the mothers had read during their own girlhood. I had the personal letters prepared and typewritten, actually signing each one. After referring to the fact that this star would be seen in a certain picture at my theatre on a given date, I added:

"Here is a picture that will have an especial appeal to girls under sixteen. I know that they will all want to see it, and I am not writing this letter to draw their patronage, but to ask you to come to the theatre during this engagement and see the class of productions that we are offering, and to convince you that your children are always safe in my theatre. The play will interest patrons of all ages and I am sure that your attendance will convince you that the photoplay offers a great deal in clean and wholesome entertainment."

You will note that I did not stress the picture itself, but I laid the main emphasis on my theatre. The results were slow, but sure. When I had opened my house grown women rarely came to my house alone or accompanied only by other women. Within two months after I inaugurated this system my matinees were showing that the older women, without male escort, were in the majority at the matinees.

Before I had worked out a solution of this idea I had expressed my desire to get the interest of the women folk of my community to the traveling representative of one of the film companies. "Why here's just the thing," he suggested. "Have a matinee for women only and you will pack them in." I returned that I never meant to have pictures in my house which were so raw that I would have to separate the sexes. "That's not the idea at all," he explained. "But you know the curiosity of women. It gets them all excited and they'll come." Then he cited to me the example of another exhibitor and pulled a letter from his pocket showing that this exhibitor had broken his records on a certain picture—and one that was not extra sensational, by showing it to women only in the afternoon and to men only in the evening.

"I wouldn't give a hurrah to make a record for a single day," I told him. "I don't care a continental to get people to my theatre one day; I want to make them patrons." And that is the solution of the whole problem. Anybody can ballyhoo a crowd into the house, but what of the next day? And the next month?

Here is a point where some exhibitors may disagree with me, but in my opinion one of the biggest mistakes that I made was in connection with my determination to enlist the co-operation of the women. Representatives of the home missionary society of one of the local churches came to me and asked me to give a benefit. I agreed promptly, telling them that they could have all the receipts over my actual expenses, and not including my time. One of the first results was that I actually lost money, because I could not charge up the pro rata of standing expenses against them. The next was that every other society in the town, including a couple from every church and Sunday school, various charities, women's branches of fraternal organizations deluged me and I could not get away with it. Once I had started I had to go through with the list, for I could not afford to play favorites. You may know the jealousy that exists in small cities between different denominations, and all that. Although I appreciated that I had taken an unwise step, I knew that it would be still worse to antagonize any one of the societies. But the worst result of these benefit performances was that they not only hurt my business on the second day of my showing of the same films, but a great share of the patrons who were besought to buy tickets got the idea that I was getting some financial benefit out of it and really blamed me as the cause for their being solicited.

Once I was through with the list I made a firm determination. The fact that some of the societies had requested to put on their own programs with added numbers gave me the idea. When the next society came to me for its second benefit performance I offered the use of my theatre, lights and heat and the service of any of my employes at cost to them during the morning hours. I even volunteered to get the film for them if they wanted it—to get any pictures they sought at the cost price, but they were not to be the pictures that I was then showing. I also offered to contribute just as much as any merchant in the city, but I further barred the sale of tickets through my regular channels. At first there was some bitterness over this ruling, but it died away. My theatre was often used for meetings of various societies which were too large for the churches, and for such conventions as met in my town. I was always ready to grant such privileges, even anxious.

Now in cases like a benefit in these war times for the Red Cross, or something of that sort, I would not hesitate to make an excepion, but in my opinion it is a mighty bad idea to get into the benefit habit. Why, every time an old woman got sick and needed a few dollars some big, kind-hearted spirit in my neighborhood would suggest a benefit—at my theatre, and at MY expense. Now I do not believe that there is any one in my town who has the reputation of being more public spirited than myself, but the exhibitor is unwise, in my opinion, who allows his theatre to be used as a mere excuse to gather money for others. After this, cash contributions to worthy causes for me.

In addition to this I would display slides for these benefits, and by carefully explaining all that I would really do for them, I got by with my reverse policy, though not so very many of the societies used the morning idea when the full responsibility for the receipts fell on them. Then they realized that I had been bearing the full brunt of it.

I know that many exhibitors will contend that these benefits are a good way to get new people interested in your theatre. It may be in some communities, but not in

Probably You Have Made Them Worth While in Your House

SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITOR suggests that many may disagree with him on barring general benefits in his theatre, but he limits his recommendations to towns of his size. Many managers of neighborhood houses have found these good business builders where they were helps to raise money for organizations in their immediate neighborhood because it stamps the theatre as being a real part of that community.

We would be very glad to hear from exhibitors who have made successes through benefit performances. While we consider the articles by Successful Exhibitor most interesting and mainly intensely sound business we are always anxious to hear from those who disagree with him and to learn how they scored successes by different methods.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors

Mr. Rothapfel Will Answer Here any Questions Regarding Problems in Exhibition. The Only Conditions Are That the Questions Must Not Bear on the Merits of Particular Pictures or Services and That They Must Come Through the NEWS. Address Your Inquiries "ROTHAPFEL ADVICE, EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU, MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

XXXIII—Here is a point that comes up frequently in the dealings of a small town exhibitor with the exchanges. Recently I booked a big eight-reel feature and advertised it by hand-bills all over the county. I arranged to play this picture for two days, because I expected to get a number of people from surrounding towns. I had been following the various articles about increasing the appeal of the theatre and thought that this was an excellent opportunity. Now this picture was booked for Friday and Saturday. We cannot run Sunday shows. My town is five hours from the nearest exchange city and there is but one train a day from that city, the train that brings my pictures getting in about 1 p. m. when my show starts at 2:30. Now the morning of the day that I was to show the picture I received a telegram from the exchange saying that it had failed to receive the film from the town that had used it the day before and that in its place the exchange was sending me a five-reel feature, a two-reel comedy and a one-reel subject. It was too late for me to notify the people who had come from a distance, though I got the reel feature in time for Saturday's show. The result was that I put the Friday show back to the usual price and then played the feature Saturday without raising the price, paying the exchange accordingly, and not the amount I agreed to pay, because I really lost money on the deal. It was probably really not the fault of the exchange, but it certainly was not mine and under the circumstances not only hurt my receipts for the two days but blocked me in my efforts to widen my field. What would you have done under the circumstances? Now this is not merely a lone case. Some of the exchanges do not seem to care a rap whether they send you the picture you have booked or not, especially when they know you can get no other picture in time.—North Carolina.

THIS is not a point for me to answer.. I can't help you except to tell you that if your exchange does not give you service as exemplified in your grievance, and there seems to be no improvement or redress, make your case known to the president of the corporation for which the exchange works. All large corporations having exchanges are reliable and wish to see that the small exhibitor gets a square deal. Some hot letter would go to the exchanges that did not cooperate with exhibitors and give them good service.

XXXIV—When I took control of this theatre it had already been named after a brand of films. While I myself would not have tied myself down by selecting such a name, the house was still playing that brand of pictures when I took charge and I knew the difficulty of changing the name of a house, especially one that pulled business because it was known to be the best show in the section. Now for good reasons I threw out those pictures and one of my competitors is now showing them. His is a new house and he advertised the name of the brand in big letters in the place where the name of the theatre would usually hang with the added word "Films," in smaller letters below. I do not care to get into any controversy with him, but I do want to prevent the two houses from becoming confused. What steps would you advise toward changing the name?—Branded.

YOUR case is simply this: You have learned through bitter experience that unless you make the theatre the important thing you will suffer. Make people come to the theatre to see the pictures rather than to come to see the pictures at the theatre. Your theatre will prosper if you do this—regardless of what its name is. The theatre is the thing. Give it an individuality, an atmosphere. Let people learn what it is, where it is, what it does. Have them acquire the habit of coming to your theatre. The name is not as important as the individuality. In other words, make you and the theatre the dominant factors.

XXXV—I am starting a theatre in a town of a little more than 1,000, about one-fourth of whom are negroes and do not count. There is a fair population in my section to draw from. I have arranged to show but one day a week, on Saturdays, so as to get the farmer trade for my matinee. To show another day will only cost the charge for the film rental. Would you advise me to give shows two days a week, and, without entering into the merits of different companies' product, how would you advise me to make the programs on the two days so different that I would get the people twice. Other shows that have operated here in the past have not been successful, but I believe that I know some of the reasons and I am determined to run pictures with nothing of the suggestive about them.—Oak Grove.

I AM not sufficiently acquainted with the particular conditions obtaining in your locality, consequently it is a bit difficult to give you an answer with any emphatic assurance of its infallibility.

However I should say that if you can possibly run two different programs a week, do so. At first business may be poor, and you may lose, but keep at it. A patronage may be slowly acquired, but once acquired, if your work continues good, it is tenacious. It may be a little fight for you, but it's the struggles and pains and hard knocks that make the things you finally achieve worth while. The things which come easy are usually not worth much. I am glad indeed to learn of your intention to run pictures with nothing of the suggestive about them. It will pay you personally and financially.

I am indeed delighted with your determination and wish you success. I know you will achieve it if you do snappy effective work, and keep your shows clean and wholesome.

ANSWER COLUMN CHANGES

Many New Points to Be Added to Be Covered in Replies to Readers of the News

WITHIN a short time the Exhibitors Service Bureau will announce a most comprehensive plan for dealing with all possible questions from exhibitors.

Mr. Rothapfel announced originally that he would be glad to reply to the various questions, but he has no idea of the number of angles that these questions would cover. He is willing to give ample of his time, but some of these inquiries are outside of his present lines of work.

The NEWS is working out the plan to be followed and an important announcement will be made very shortly. In the meantime exhibitors need not hesitate about sending in their inquiries. They will be given prompt attention either through these columns or by direct letter. Mr. Rothapfel will continue to contribute his opinions regularly, but only such questions as really need his attention will go to him.

XXXVI—I understand that you started in your career in a town where the foreign element was large. I have a theatre in a section where the population, figures only considered, is large enough to support a theatre splendidly, but the fact is that three-fourths of these people are Italians. On occasions when I have had special Italian pictures like "Maciste" I have been able to put them over through special circulars in Italian. However, this is not practical in most of the pictures that I have to show. I would like to have some of your experiences in dealing with the foreign element.—A. N. G.

IN your case you may or may not be making a big mistake. It is a doubtful proposition—you have to have confidence in yourself. The case calls for good judgment all along. I showed melodrama—stuff with a particular appeal to the foreign element.

But I gradually worked them out of it into more beautiful things, and pretty soon the taste for hifalutin melodrama was on the wane. But it is important that you do not let the people know that you are teaching them. Wean them along and have them think your way, but don't make the teaching part of it obvious or apparent. I led my audiences to better things gradually. It is a good thing to announce your program in Italian.

Have an interpreter, but get a good one, one who knows the idiom and dialect, because a strictly literal—word for word—Italian translation, in an attempt to sell a show, may make the whole thing look insane.

Your interpreter must be a good one, a man who has a certain initiating resourcefulness, who knows how to sell a show to the Italians of your locality, and to appeal to them in an understandable, coherent, natural, colloquial way.

He must know not only Italian, but Italians; not only Italians, but Sicilians (who probably comprise the greater portion of your population).

He must know not only the popular dialect but the popular mind. He must be a man of the people. In my little five cent showhouse I had so many languages to translate, that I did it by signs.

Use plenty of photos—pictures are always universal. Now I presume Mr. Laemmle will send me a letter of thanks and a check which I will return, because I don't mean what he wants me to mean.

Five Popular Songs Used with Single Reel of Comedy for Joy Effect at Rivoli

"DON'T merely throw the pictures of lesser-known stars on the screen and expect them to equal in drawing power those who have been favorites almost since the beginning of pictures." That is what S. L. Rothapfel advised in the presence of a chief Paramount official after the first showing of Vivian Martin in "A Petticoat Pilot" at the Rivoli last week. "Music and the atmosphere around the presentation has everything to do with it," he added, and he has shown this by the sort of a bill that he has at "The Triumph of the Motion Picture"—a bill of unusual charm throughout, one that carries with it the delightful spirit of the feature.

A smooth-running program is one thing to talk about and another to achieve, yet such programs send the patrons away from the theatre with the "delighted feeling" that makes business. It takes a lot of work to do this. For instance, take the Drew comedy which closes the bill, "The Bright Lights Dimmed." During this one reel there were no less than five different airs used, and all of them popular, "My Wife's Gone to the Country," "Auld Lang Syne," "There'll Be a Hot Time," "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and "I'm Lonesome." Do you think anybody can get away from the theatre unless they're humming one of these and in a good humor with the world?

After the overture, "Il Guarany," the first of a series of films on "Hunting Big Game in the North" were shown. These were taken under difficult conditions, which sometimes makes them appear worn, but they contain some remarkable shots, including pictures of salmon in the water, and even greater things are promised in the reels to be shown. This was shown to the "Sigurd Josalfar" suite. Joseph Martel and the Rivoli male chorus, with the setting of a student inn, sang "The Stein Song" with excellent effect.

To the music of "Police Parade" the scenic opened with Universal pictures of New York policemen keeping in condition, which continued through pictures of New York first "city mother." Mutual pictures showed the new Quebec bridge, with Herbert's "World's Progress March," and then

Circle Stages Tableau in Celebration of the New Year

CIRCLE theatre of Indianapolis' New Year's stage spectacle, created and produced by S. Barret McCormick, was a beautiful tableau and curtain-raiser, entitled "The Muses Greeting of the New Year," and symbolized the waiting of the Muses of Music, Art and Dance for the birth of 1918.

The musical setting to the tableau was the majestic 1918 Festival March, presented by the Circle orchestra, under the conductorship of Max Weil. When the curtain rose to the first strains of the composition the stage was disclosed as a gorgeous garden in the centre of which, between two massive columns, stood a huge gate of gold and blue.

At a trumpet blast in the orchestra the big gates slowly parted and through a stage dimmed in blue one saw the broad vista of the heavens, with hundreds of stars twinkling and fleeting clouds passing over. In the midst of this was suspended a huge globe nearly twenty feet in diameter, with the map of the world outlined.

Below, on a large marble slab, stood three girls in Grecian dress, the three muses, Music, Art, Dance, with cymbals, pipes and pieces of sculpture, waiting to offer their gifts of gladness to the New Year. Another trumpet call and the figures, 1918, slowly dimmed through the surface of the globe, then as orchestral music reached its most majestic phrase the egg-shell-like covering in a part of the globe fell away and a tiny cherub, nude save for ribbon about his waist, peeped out from the top of the world to behold the waiting muses.

Among the many stage creations and tableau produced by Mr. McCormick at the Circle, nothing has been more fitting to the spirit of the season or more artistically done than this.

How an Exhibitor Got Interest of Women

mine. In neighborhood theatres in larger cities and in the smallest communities they may be a good thing. I contend that you should bring people to the theatre on the worth of the entertainment that you are going to give them, and on no other ground. That is the only way that you can build permanent business.

Week after week I was using more and more methods of exploiting my theatre, but I never used any but a legitimate showman's excuse for calling their attention to my house.

Other plans that I used to build up interest of the women especially I will discuss in the next article.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

followed some more of the delightful Finley nature pictures, while the orchestra played one of its original Indian compositions. Skiing scenes from Pathe were shown with a gallop, and there was a second gallop with Universal views of an auto race on the frozen Hudson. Then came one of those particularly clever Cornoet-Educational bits, "Confessions of a Money," which brought roars of laughter and which was shown to "Vanity Caprice." Universal pictures of the rodeo for the Red Cross and bringing in Fairbanks followed and there was played the original music prepared for the Fairbanks opening bill at the Rivoli. This was followed by a Hy Mayer cartoon showing despotism being snatched from the torch of the Statue of Liberty, for which the last sixteen bars of "Hail to the Spirit of Liberty" march were used. Then came splendid Pathe pictures of soldiers at Camp Upton, which ended with "The Girl I Left Behind Me," which led immediately into the next number, Miss Gladys Rice singing "My Hero," from "The Chocolate Soldier."

This young woman has made a big hit at the Rivoli, and with six members of the chorus all knitting sitting around her, the song got an ovation. The lighting effects for this were unusually striking, with the dome in red and the proscenium in green with green effects about the stage and the dome of the rose garden in green.

Then came the feature with the delightful musical score and the atmosphere of serene happiness to greet it. It got a big hand at the conclusion. Further delight was added to the bill by the appearance of one of the tiny pupils of the Helen Moller school, a child of eight, dancing "The Wood Nymph." While it was a splendidly executed number, the audience had caught the spirit of the "happy evening" that we have mentioned, and the result was that the number got one of the biggest receptions that we have ever seen accorded anything at a motion picture theatre. Unquestionably it was a case of leading the spirit of the audience up to this; of bringing the delight so strong that it insisted on an outlet in vociferous applause.

And then the final number, the Drew comedy that we have already mentioned. Is there any wonder that the young fellow snuggled his girl up closer to him as they went out and that the father and mother were all smiles?

PROGRAM? YES

Plenty of Times to Submit Yours for Criticism

WITH this article the general discussion of house organs closes, but we will be very glad to criticize the work on any theatre from time to time, either in the columns of the NEWS or through personal letters, as you desire. Of course this service, as all other services rendered by this paper, is free.

Where you send in copies for reproduction, send two as it is often necessary to use both sides. Always a more intelligent basis for comment is afforded when programs covering several weeks are included. We will be very glad to be placed on the regular mailing list of all houses and to notice the programs from time to time as they bring up new subjects of industry to the exhibitors as a whole.

Striking Posters Issued by Educational for Bruce Scenics

EDUCATIONAL FILM CORPORATION is putting out a remarkable line of rotogravure cards for the artistic decoration of lobbies of the theatres showing the Robert C. Bruce scenics released by that company. These are in addition to the one-sheets that are issued and are intended for use either in framed display panels especially prepared for them or in special arrangements in lobbies.

These posters are in tone effects, each one showing some actual "shot" from the production they advertise, and their dignity is in full keeping with the subject. Exhibitors who are paying especial attention to the scenics or who are trying to attract new patrons to their theatres through their showing will find these new poster cards of the greatest pulling power. The cards are 22 by 28 inches and are printed on very heavy stock, so that they will not be easily damaged. The lettering is a secondary matter and do not give the effect of the ordinary flaring poster.

It is pointed out that unusual charm can be given the lobby by the use of one of these pictures in a central position. If desired the effects from the picture can be further carried out in the remainder of the display. They are also of the class of pictures that merchants will be willing to have placed in their windows, for they are the absolute opposite of the circus effect that obtains in most such matter. A still further permanent use can be made of these by having them framed and placed around the foyer or in any part of the theatre. They are far more attractive than many of the scene pictures for which theatres pay large sums.

Ready Made Ad-Talks

Harold Lockwood in "Broadway Bill," Story of Lumbercamp Life in Maine

(Metro Five Reel Production)

"Broadway Bill" in five reels is the late picture in which Harold Lockwood is seen. It will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. In the supporting cast with Mr. Lockwood are seen Martha Mansfield, Cornish Beck, Stanton Heck, Raymond C. Hadley, Bert Starkey, W. W. Black, Tom Blake, William Clifford and Art Ortego. The story was written and the production made under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer. Bill Clayton is known the length and breadth of Broadway as Broadway Bill. Bill could drink more booze than the next fellow and could lick his weight in wild cats. Muriel Latham, the girl he loves, shows Bill the error of his ways and Bill determines to turn over a new leaf. He goes to his friend John Underwood and obtains permission to go to Underwood's lumber camp in Maine to work out his regeneration. On his way to camp Bill has his first encounter with his old enemy John Barleycorn. He gets the better of his enemy, however, and guided by an Indian trapper arrives at the camp. He is put to work as a lumber jack. The foreman, Hardigan, is suspicious from the first because he believes Bill has been sent from New York to investigate. Hardigan has found a lot of bird's-eye maple in the vicinity and has turned it over as his own without notifying Underwood. He plans to get rid of Bill and causes a tree to fall on him, but Bill escapes with a broken leg. Bill overhears a plot to get rid of him, and he confronts Hardigant and a fight follows. Bill whips the foreman and he is discharged. Underwood learns of the affair and decides to visit his camp. He brings with him his wife, Muriel Latham and her brother Jack. Bill has read an erroneous statement in a paper announcing the engagement of Muriel to an old contender for her hand. Bill gives up when he learns this and starts out for a regular time with his enemy John Barleycorn when Muriel arrives. The regeneration of "Broadway Bill" is complete.

Sennett Comedy, "Watch Your Neighbor," Charles Murray and Mary Thurman

(Paramount-Sennett Two Reel Comedy)

Mack Sennett's latest comedy production for the Paarmount program is "Watch Your Neighbor," with Charles Murray, Mary Thurman, Wayland Trask and Edgar Kennedy in the leading roles. The comedy is in two reels and is a roar from start to finish. It is unlike Mack Sennett's recent comedies. Victor Heerman directed. An undertaker, presented by Charles Murray, enters a partnership with a doctor, and for better efficiency the undertaker and doctor take adjoining offices. This proved to be a great scheme and business getter for both partners, but the doctor did not take into consideration the fact that his "better half" might be lost to him in the business rush which followed. The undertaker falls for the doctor's wife and the fun starts when he attempts to cover up his scheme to rid the world of the doctor so that his wife might be his and his alone.

"Watch Your Step" offers a laugh a minute. It will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

J. Warren Kerrigan in Second Paralta Picture—"The Turn of a Card"

J. Warren Kerrigan's second Paralta feature is titled "The Turn of a Card," written by Frederick Chapin and scenarioized by Thomas J. Geraghty. Every time a star comes out in a new picture it is customary for the producers to say that such-and-such a picture is the star's best. This statement can be made without any scruple in referring to Mr. Kerrigan's second Paralta picture. It's a corker and one that will please the most varied audience. There is entertainment every minute. The production is in seven reels and every one of the seven contains something new in the way of comedy situations and strong dramatic action. The action centres about Western oil fields and a country estate on Long Island. In the supporting cast with Mr. Kerrigan are seen Lois Wilson, who is seen in the principal feminine role and in chief support of Mr. Kerrigan; Eugene Pallette, David M. Hartford, William Conklin, Eleanor Crowe, Roy Laidlow, Clifford Alexander, Albert J. Cody, Wallace Worsley and Frank Clark. Oscar Apfel, one of the best-known directors of the photodrama, created the production for screen presentation. The comedy element which is brought out in this picture is some of the best that has been presented.

Winifred Allen and Earle Fox in "From Two to Six"—Mystery, Comedy

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

One of Arthur Stringer's most popular stories, "The Button Thief," has been adapted to the screen by Triangle under the title "From Two to Six" and will be presented on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with Winifred Allen and Earle Fox in the featured roles. Miss Allen is one of the most charming actresses on the screen and in this production she works to fine advantage. Earle Fox will be remembered for his work opposite Constance Talmadge in "The Honeymoon." In the supporting cast are seen Forrest Robinson, Robert Fischer, Margaret Greene, Clarence Handyside, Charles B. Wells, Madeline Marshall, Amy Somers and Riley Hatch. "From Two to Six" was produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan, who has been engaged to direct Douglas Fairbanks in his future pictures and who was responsible for the direction of Mr. Fairbanks' last big success, "A Modern Musketeer." Albert Parker directed, assisted by Thomas F. Tracey. Roy Vaughn was at the camera. The locale of the story is centered in New York and one of New York's famous hostelries is the seat of much of the action. The picture is essentially a mystery drama as presented on the screen. There are some nice bits of comedy thrown in, and altogether "From Two to Six" affords an excellent hour's entertainment. Miss Allen and Earle Fox are seen to fine advantage in this production The story tells of a young girl's adventures in recovering valuable plans stolen from her father by a band of German spies. She recovers the plans and wins a husband.

"The Thing's the Play," Late O. Henry Picture—Mildred Manning Featured

(Broadway Star-General Two Reels)

Mildred Manning, Jack Crosby and Rex Burnett are the principal players in the late O. Henry story to be adapted to the screen by the Broadway Star Features. It is titled "The Thing's the Play." It is in two reels and was produced under the direction of George Ridgewell.

When Frank Barry married Helen Mayo, John Delaney, who also loved Helen, became bitterly jealous. One-half hour after the wedding ceremony, while Helen was preparing to depart on her honeymoon trip, John Delaney stole into her room and begged her to fly with him. While he was kissing her hand in a last farewell the door was suddenly opened and Helen's husband entered the room. Delaney disappeared by way of the window and fire escape. Frank would listen to no explanation from Helen. Flinging her from him roughly, he rushed from the house like a madman.

Twenty years elapse. Helen conducts a little novelty shop and lets rooms. Ramonti, a bearded violinist, takes lodgings there and a strong attachment soon springs up between him and Helen. Then another lodger arrives, a man in the early forties with strange, haunting, mysterious eyes. He also displays great interest in Helen, but her preference is for the violinist.

One day Ramonti declares his love, telling Helen the story of his life. When a young man he had been found lying in the street with a deep wound in his head and taken to a hospital in an ambulance. His life up to the time of leaving the hospital was a total blank to him. He knows not where he is nor where he came from. His concert manager gave him the name of Ramonti. Now Helen loves Ramonti, but has become convinced that lodger number two is her husband who has come back after twenty years. And then lodger number two also declares his love to Helen, begging her forgiveness for the wrong he has done her, and she learns that he is John Delaney, and that Ramonti, the violinist, whom she really loves, is Frank Barry, her long lost husband.

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

Roy Stewart's late Western picture, produced by Triangle under the direction of Cliff Smith, who has created some of the best Western subjects for the screen, was written by Randall Parish, the famous short story writer and novelist. It is titled "Keith of the Border." In the supporting cast, with popular Western character men, are seen Josie Sedgwick, who presents the principal feminine role; Herbert Gills, Pete Morrison, William Ellingford, Wilbur Higbee and Alberta Lee. The story tells of the days when the Texas rangers were policing the Mexican border and when they held sway as the most feared body of policemen in the country. Their notoriety as rangers is next only to the Canadian Mounted Police. Mr. Stewart has the role of one of these rangers, Jack Keith. Keith is making his rounds when he comes upon a family of squatters some of whose members have been murdered by a gang of outlaws. Keith buries the bodies, and is seen by one of the band of outlaws, who carries the news to the next town that Keith is guilty of the murders. Keith rides into town to apprehend the murderers and is arrested on the charge of Black Bart, the leader of the band of outlaws, who actually did the killing. He escapes from jail and stops in his flight at an out-of-the-way cabin where he finds a young girl. Black Bart, who is in pursuit, comes to the cabin. Keith and he have a fight and Black Bart is worsted. Keith and the girl flee. He takes the girl to a distant town and finds lodging for her at the hotel. Later Keith turns up and tries to induce the girl to assist him in cashing a check made out to the order of Hope Waite, daughter of the man whom Black Bart thought dead. The girl is Hope Waite herself. Hope is looking for her sister, who has been missing for many months, and her father, who was one of the party which the outlaws had attacked. Both sister and father appear, Black Bart is arrested and Hope obtains her lost fortune.

"The Guilty Man" Adapted from Famous French Play—Gloria Hope Featured

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

"The Guilty Man," a Thomas H. Ince production under the direction of Irvin V. Willat, features Gloria Hope and a strong supporting cast of Paramount players. In the cast are William Garwood, J. P. Lockney, popular character actor; Charles French, Hal Cooley, John Steppling, Hayward Mack and Vivian Reed. The screen version was made from Francois Coppee's French novel and play. "The Guilty Man" was presented on the stage two seasons ago by A. H. Woods with Irene Fenwick in the featured role. The story is intensely graphic, bordering on the melodramatic and resembling in theme the much discussed Brieux plays. The story deals with the life of a betrayed Frenchwoman and her child who turns out to be a famous beauty The child, grown to womanhood, murders her stepfather to save her mother's life. The attorney who prosecutes the case is her own father. Marie Forgeat is in love with a promising young lawyer who betrays her. A child is born. Eighteen years later the mother, in order that the child may be given a name, marries Flambon, owner of a cafe in Paris. Flambon makes a household drudge of his wife. He insists that the child become one of the entertainers in the cafe. He hopes to marry Claudine to a creditor. Claudine, while an entertainer in the cafe, meets Gaston Marceau, a writer. Later Claudine sees Flambon maltreating her mother and she kills him. Claude Lesculer, the young lawyer who has betrayed her mother, is now prosecuting attorney. Claudine admits everything and is held for the murder of her stepfather. During the course of the trial Claude learns that the woman he is prosecuting is his own child. He denounces the man who has caused her downfall, and then, throwing off his robe, announces that he is the "guilty man." The jury brings in a verdict of not guilty.

Sessue Hayakawa in "Hidden Pearls" Scenes Laid in Hawaii—Strong Climax

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

Sessue Hayakawa in "The Hidden Pearls," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is, without exception, the best work that the Japanese actor has done since his big success with Fannie Ward in "The Cheat." George H. Melford, who directed the production, took his company of players to the Hawaiian Islands for many of the scenes—in fact, all of the exteriors (and nearly all the scenes are exteriors) were taken with the beautiful land of Hawaii as a background. In the supporting cast with Mr. Hayakawa are seen Margaret Loomis, Theodore Roberts, James Cruze, Noah Beery, John Burton, Florence Vidor, Jack Holt, Charles H. Geldert, and Henry F. Woodward. The picture is one of the finest examples of the long list of photodramas. The story holds from the flash of the title to the last scene and the suspense is kept to the last. Mr. Hayakawa does some of the best work of his career before the camera in this production because he has a part that was created especially for him by Beulah Marie Dix, who wrote the story. Miss Dix is one of the best writers for the screen and is responsible for some of Paramount's best dramas. Mr. Hayakawa has the part of Tom Garvin, son of an American pearl trader and a prince of one of the Hawaiian Islands. He has spent most of his life in America and has been educated at an American college. He loves Enid Benton, but when his allowance is stopped and his uncle informs him that he is to hustle for himself, Enid tells him that before she can marry him he must first show that he is capable of making a comfortable fortune. He leaves for Honolulu. His uncle has received word that a rich deposit of pearls has been found along the coast of one of the islands. He suggests to Tom that he try and get the collection that has been taken by the natives. Tom sets out and his adventures after stealing the pearls and his sacrifice to hold the good graces of his people and for little Tahona are recounted in this picture with entertainment of the highest order assured every lover of the motion picture.

Sessue Hayakawa in "The Hidden Pearls" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Smiling" George Walsh in "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal"

(Fox Five Reel Production)

"Smiling" George Walsh is the featured player in the screen version of George Horace Lorimer's widely read story, "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," which ran in The Saturday Evening Post. Dan Mason, Ruth Taylor and Robert Vivian are seen in chief support. Ralph Spence made the adaptation and the picture was produced by William Fox under the direction of Carl Harbaugh. Young Jack Spurlock is expelled from Harvard because of his many wild exploits around Boston. He capped the climax of these wild times when he returned to the dormitories one night after a hot time at the cabarets in Boston with a bear. All would have been well and the incident would have passed off as a joke, had not the animal insisted upon slapping one of the professors. So out Jack went. Jack's father is a wealthy business man and owner of a chain of grocery stores. When Jack announces that he has been expelled from college his father decides to put him to work. Jack is sent to the branch to assist in the purchasing department. At that time the Spurlock stores had a surplus quantity of onions, and Jack not being acquainted with this condition in the onion stock orders 150 more car loads. This brings on a strike among the Spurlock employes. Jack joins the strikers and when it is settled he finds himself out of a job and his father with 150 car loads of onions on his hands. Jack then tries his hand at a waiter's job in a silent restaurant. Too lively for the job, he is fired and goes to work as a physical culture demonstrator. He meets Colonel Jackson, who has perfected a "cure all" remedy, the chief ingredient of which is the onion. Jack arranges for the disposal of his father's surplus stock of onions and is placed in the good graces of the family.

June Caprice in "The Heart of Romance," Adventures of Rich Little Orphan

(Fox Five Reel Production)

June Caprice's latest picture is titled "The Heart of Romance," a William Fox production under the direction of Harry Millarde. The story was written by Frances Crowley and scenarioized by Adeline Leitzbach. Bernard Thorton, George Bunny, Joseph Kilgour, Lillian Page, Jack Martin and Jack Raymond are seen in the supporting cast. This picture is unlike anything Miss Caprice has done before. She does not appear in the rags of the street urchin or the orphan girl, but makes her appearance in rich gowns and is showered with everything that money can buy, for she is the daughter of wealth in her latest screen work. Eloise Jackson is an orphan and lives with Judge Stafford, her guardian. Harvey Greyson is a writer but his works have not met with great success and he find himself very often in hard straits. Eloise and Harvey meet and both become attached to one another. Judge Stafford believes that Greyson loves only the prospects of falling into a fortune by marrying Eloise and tries to discourage his ward from marrying him. Eloise finally agrees with her guardian that Greyson seeks only her money, and she and the Judge arrange to test his sincerity. A party is arranged and in the midst of the festivities two sheriff's deputies enter and announce that Judge Stafford is a bankrupt and that his property is attached. All his friends leave excepting Greyson, and he announces that he is ready to do anything to help. The next day Greyson turns over to the deputies two of his manuscripts on their promise not to attach anything belonging to Eloise. The deputies report to the Judge on Greyson's offer to assist. The Judge applies another test and has Greyson evicted from his studio. Eloise is sent to a cheap boarding school. Later Greyson gets Eloise a position as a musical comedy chorus girl. After many adventures during which Greyson's loyalty to Eloise is proved, he and Eloise are united with the blessing of the Judge.

June Caprice in "The Heart of Romance" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Intimate Talks to Your Patrons Worth While

IN the final discussion of theatre programs appearing in this issue the advice is given exhibitors to get in the closest possible touch with their patrons by talking through these house organs about things of mutual interest.

Certainly one of the chief things that may be discussed are pictures themselves. Suppose that you know that a certain star has the widest popularity in your section. You know that her admirers are anxious to know about the production in which she will be seen. Then don't you think that it would be worth while to devote a little space in your program—even a page of it to an intimate discussion of her coming play? It is the sort of information your readers will read and appreciate.

These Ad Talks furnish the basis for this. If you have the picture booked for the future and it is too early to use the story, index the Ad Talk, together with others on pictures that you will show, or clip them and file them until the day they are needed.

Alice Brady in Screen Version of Famous Stage Play, "The Knife"

(Select Five Reel Production)

Eugene Walter's stirring melodrama, "The Knife," has been adapted for screen presentation and produced by Select Pictures with Alice Brady in the featured role. In the supporting cast are seen Frank Morgan, Crauford Kent, Helen Lackaye, Paul Ducet, Alice Hollister, Jonnie Walker and Frank Evans. The picture was made under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. The screen version was done by Charles Maigne. Dr. Robert Manning (Frank Morgan) is a famous surgeon and legal guardian of Kate Tarleton, who has just come of age. Manning is in love with his ward. Manning, Kate and her younger sister go to New York, where the doctor returns to his hospital work. Kate meets with foul play at the hands of a fake fortune teller. Kate has been confined in a notorious vice den, and after a long search the doctor traces her to the place. He with the assistance of others breaks in the place and locates the hiding place of the drugged girl. He takes her to his home, wrecked in health because of a terrible disease which she has contracted. The doctor has been experimenting on such diseases and after many months has perfected a cure for the disease which Kate has contracted. She is cured and the doctor has discovered a cure for a disease which heretofore had been fatal.

"The Knife" is a gripping drama exposing the evils which linger in the dens of moral lepers. It is intensely dramatic and Miss Brady in the role of Kate Tarleton does some of the best work of her career before the drama. "The Knife" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Enid Bennett in "The Keys of the Righteous" —C. Gardner Sullivan Story

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

"The Keys of the Righteous," Enid Bennett's latest work for the screen, is one of the most powerful dramatic subjects that has been released by Paramount. It is from the story by C. Gardner Sullivan, considered one of the best writers for the screen, and was produced for Paramount under the direction of Jerome Storm and under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. There's a punch in every scene, a thrill in every action. Not of the sensational order but the truly dramatic enacted by artists. Miss Bennett has the leading role, and in her supporting cast are seen Earl Rodney, George Nichols, Joseph Swickard, Carl Forms, Gertrude Claire, Ludia Knott, and Melbourne MacDowell. Director Jerome Storm has created for the screen a production that will rank with the best that has ever been shown on the screen of the ——— theatre. The story opens in the North Woods of Wisconsin. Mary Manning lives with her mother and her grandfather. Her mother is an invalid and her grandfather is of the unrelenting kind who never smiles and rules with a harsh hand. Peter Manning's son Paul had been educated for the ministry and when he was about to commence his vocation he fell in love with a circus girl and married her. He feared his father and never returned home until late in life, and then he was an habitual drunkard. His wife he sent to his father's home and she became despondent because her husband did not return. Mary was born. She had never seen her father. Tom Gale comes into her life and she and Tom have merry times in the deserted wilderness of the Manning cabin. Mary's father, whom she had never seen, drifts, years after his marriage, into the town of Ore City, an outcast. He determines to return to his father's home even though it cost him everything. He does so. His father puts him from the house, but Mary, who has learned that the man whom her grandfather had put out is her father, goes for him and brings him back in time to see the wife he had left years before. Mary's mother dies and she promises to love her father, come what may.

Come to the ——— theatre and see how how Mary Manning brings a father, a son and a daughter together.

(Pathe Five Reel Production)

Ivan Mozukin, one of the best known actors on the Russian stage, is featured in a five-reel production of the Russian Art Film Corporation released on the Pathe program. It is titled "The Inner Voice." Mozukin has the part of a Russian student in the first scenes of the play. As a student he is popular with his fellows and made the treasurer of the students' club. He is possessed of a strong desire for gambling, and shortly after his election to the club he visits a gambling resort and, carried away by the fever of the game, he plays with heavy losses, including funds which belong to the club. In consequence he forfeits the friendship of his companions. Twenty years later, at the age of forty, he is successful in life but is discredited with a certain taint of dishonesty. In need of funds, he plans to get possession of a child relative of his wife. The child is taken sick and the doctor promises recovery if the patient is kept from all draughts. Ermoloff finds the sick child alone and throws open the windows. The boy suffers a relapse and dies. Ermoloff after the child's death acquires possession of his property. He obtains a position of power and importance in the government and uses his influence to graft. The time comes when he can no longer conceal his underhanded methods, and his defalcations are found out. He then comes to the realization that those who sin must pay the penalty.

"The Inner Voice," with Russia's most popular and talented actor in the leading role, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Ivan Mozukin in "The Inner Voice."

Goldwyn Gets Parsons Comedies

Agreement Entered Into Calls for Twenty-six Two-Reelers a Year —Production Work to Begin on the West Coast

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION this week announced that an agreement has been made between the company and William H. Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, whereby the latter will produce a series of two-reel comedies for distribution through Goldwyn. These laughmakers, it is announced, will be known as Capitol Comedies.

An item of chief interest in the contract is that Mr. Parsons, referred to by Goldwyn as "Smiling Billy," will be the star of the pictures.

The contract calls for twenty-six of these two-reel comedies annually, for distribution through Goldwyn in the United States and the rest of the world.

The contract for distribution was signed last week by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and Mr. Parsons as the head of the National. Mr. Parsons left at once for California to begin work in his studios in Los Angeles. A few weeks ago the Goldwyn executives were shown several of the "Smiling Billy" Parsons comedies and their enthusiasm for this new style of screen divertisement was so great that contracts were immediately drawn up and signed. Harry Reichenbach conducted the negotiations.

The story of Mr. Parsons' personal entry into pictures as a star is filled with novelty. Primarily he is a financier and producer of pictures, being producer and one of the owners of "Tarzan of the Apes." During the making of this picture there were idle moments in which Mr. Parsons read the scenarios of a number of two-reel comedies and racked his brain to think of an engaging male comedian available to be starred under his management, finally deciding upon himself.

Exhibitors will be invited to get in touch with the Goldwyn offices in the principal cities of North America and arrange for showings on or after February 18. The date of the release of the first "Smiling Billy" Parsons comedy has not yet been announced.

Elsie Ferguson New Picture Under Way

THE production of "The Lie," starring Elsie Ferguson, is now said to be well under way at the Famous Players-Lasky 56th Street studio. It is expected that the interiors will be completed this week, after which the outside scenes will be taken.

J. Searle Dawley is directing the production and pays a high tribute to Miss Ferguson's art. "Studio work is made a pleasure," says Mr. Dawley, "with a talented woman like Miss Ferguson."

"The Lie" was adapted by Charles Maigne from the play of the same name by Henry Arthur Jones. Miss Ferguson, as Elinor Shale, is surrounded by a supporting cast, including Betty Howe, Dave Powell, John L. Shine, Charles Sutton and Bertha Kent.

In Ft. Lee, N. J., Director Maurice Tourneur is heaping imprecations upon the weather man for the arctic weather with which he has surrounded the Famous Players-Lasky studio. The production of "Prunella," with Marguerite Clark as the star, is going on under difficulties, for the inclemency of the weather has made travel to and from the studio uncertain, and the shortage of fuel has caused the authorities to withhold electric power at inopportune times.

On the other hand, at the 56th Street studio, Director Edward Jose hailed the drop of the mercury with delight. He had begun the production of "The Resurrection," in which Pauline Frederick is starred, and had started on some interior scenes. The picture calls for some Siberian winter scenes and it had been planned to take the company to the extreme northern part of New York State to obtain them. The snow and zero weather arrived, whereupon Mr. Jose dropped the interior scenes and took his company out near Mineola, L. I., where the winter scenes were photographed.

Billie Burke was engaged on interiors last week at the 55th Street studio in the satire, "Let's Get a Divorce," of which Charles Giblyn has the direction. The company will go to Florida for the exteriors.

Tansey with Bushman-Payne

John Tansey, juvenile player, apears as a newsboy in support of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the Metro picturization of George England's story, "The Brass Check."

Will S. Davis is directing the production, the screen adaptation of which was made by June Mathis of the Metro Eastern scenario staff.

Gladys Brockwell Is Starred by William Fox in "The Moral Law"

New Fox Film with Gladys Brockwell

Gladys Brockwell has begun work on a new production at the William Fox coast studios, after a brief respite of only three days following the completion of "The Moral Law."

Edward J. Le Saint is directing the new picture, and included in the cast are William Scott, Bertram Bracken, Lucille Young, Georgie Woodthrop, T. A. Crittenden, Sarah Herman and Betro Buzi.

Rex Beach Company Back from Mexico

Members of the Rex Beach company, engaged in filming "Heart of the Sunset," have returned from the Mexican border, where they spent nearly three months on location in Southwestern Texas and Northern Mexico.

According to the Rex Beach Pictures Company's publicity department Director Frank Powell and his players made frequent excursions into the very lair of the Villistas at imminent peril of being potted by rebel snipers who were said to be lurking in the vicinity.

"King-Bee" Waltzes for Everybody

Billy West, who composed the "King-Bee" Waltzes and dedicated them to his admirers, has received at the Hollywood studio of the King-Bee Films Corporation requests for over five hundred copies of these waltzes.

Pathe Plans a New Serial Method

Practical Brains of the Organization Centered on "The House of Hate," Starring Pearl White with Antonio Moreno —Produced by Astra

A NEW method of handling a serial will be instituted by Pathe in the releasing on March 3 of "The House of Hate," starring Pearl White with Antonio Moreno, the company this week announced.

The practical business brains of the distributing organization, under the direction of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, are concentrated on setting this picture, which was produced by the Astra Corporation, before the exhibitors of the country in a way which retains the good points of the old system and introduces others which from experience Pathe has learned.

Prints Being Shipped

PRINTS of the first episodes are being shipped to the thirty branch offices where showings, preceded by a special reel, will be arranged by the managers of Pathe's sales force.

Mr. Berst issued this statement: "I sincerely believe 'The House of Hate' will outdraw 'The Iron Claw' two to one, and it has been conceded that 'The Iron Claw' played in more theatres in the United States than any other one picture. I believe 'The House of Hate' will make more money for exhibitors than fifteen releases of a feature program. During my trip to the Coast and back many exhibitors have told me that Pathe serials make more money for them than the average feature, and 'The House of Hate' is bigger and better than anything we have had."

The Pathe organization has released seventeen serial and series pictures, such as "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Perils of Pauline," "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army," "The Fatal Ring," "The Red Circle" and many others. Through her appearance in the first five named of these serials, Pearl White has become one of the best known serial stars.

Released March 3

Mr. Berst has set the release date of "The House of Hate" for March 3, because he contends this means big business for exhibitors following Lent, which ends March 31.

Details concerning "The House of Hate" will be given to exhibitors by means of the tradepaper advertising, the whole idea being to get to the busy showmen in the best possible way all the information they need to assure big business with this Pearl White masterpiece.

The releasing plan calls for many practical aids to exhibitors. The things that count in putting over a picture, Pathe says, are first complete information, strong patron-pulling paper, and plenty of press matter. To this end, the resources and energy of Pathe are devoted.

Written by Charles A. Logue and Arthur B. Reeve, creator of the widely read "Craig Kennedy" story; scenarioized by Bertram Milhauser, who went "over the top" with Miss White's last success, "The Fatal Ring"; produced by the same company that made "The Fatal Ring," the Astra Film Corporation, and the same director, George B. Seitz, known as the "George M. Cohan of motion pictures," "The House of Hate" starts off with a rush.

George B. Seitz, L. J. Gasnier, President of Pathe, and Bertram Milhauser, Have Concentrated Their Producing Efforts In Pearl White's New Serial, "The House of Hate"

Experience Considered

The men behind the production of Pathe's new serial, "The House of Hate," in which it is now announced for the first time Pearl White will make her appearance March 3 with Antonio Moreno, have been identified with serial successes in the history of the continued form of motion pictures, Pathe said this week.

They are Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Film Corporation; George B. Seitz and Bertram Milhauser, and each member of this triumvirate has drawn upon his long experience in a concerted determination to make this serial in every way a bigger and better box-office attraction than any that has gone before, it is declared.

"When the story of 'The House of Hate,' written by Charles Logue and Arthur B. Reeve, creators of 'Craig Kennedy,' whose exploits have been followed by the many readers of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, was turned over by Pathe to Astra for production," said Mr. Gasnier, "I determined to draw upon all the brains and talent at my command to make it a decided step ahead in serials, in order to keep pace with the great advance in the quality of the features now being released by Pathe.

"I sincerely believe that the best team for the writing and making of serial scenarios is Bertram Milhauser and George B. Seitz, who have proven their ability to gauge the public taste. They were given full sway with Pearl White, the serial star, and Antonio Moreno, one of the most popular leading men on the screen, as their feature players and they have succeeded."

Care in Picking Cast

"With Pearl White as the heroine and Antonio Moreno as the hero, I used great care in picking the supporting all-star cast. Paul Clerget, the French pantomimist who scored with Winthrop Ames, presented him on Broadway in 'Pierrot the Prodigal,' J. H. Gilmour, whom I consider one of the greatest character actors on the screen, and Peggy Shanor, an actress of the legitimate stage who I believe, will reveal an entirely new interpretation of a vampire role, were the three people we decided upon.

"We are especially proud of the stage settings and light effects in 'The House of Hate,' any one of which would do credit to a feature picture of unusual magnitude. I am rarely enthusiastic about my own work, in fact, I was the most surprised person in the world when 'The Fatal Ring' made such a hit, but from my knowledge of the public taste, I believe that in 'The House of Hate' we have made what will prove the most popular serial yet.

"Bertram Milhauser is another striking example of a young man who has succeeded in the motion picture business. To him comes a great deal of the credit for the success of 'The Fatal Ring' since it was he who wrote the scenarios from the original idea evolved by Mr. Seitz and Fred Jackson, the magazine author and playwright. Beginning to direct with the intention of also writing the scenarios, Seitz soon found that this was too much for any one man. Mr. Milhauser, who had done a number of other splendid scenarios for Pathe, was asked to take up 'The Fatal Ring,' and in doing so, while basing his scenarios on Mr. Jackson's idea, he is really the creator of a great deal of that story.

"Milhauser is a young man and is expected to go on developing into doing bigger things. When a few years ago, he was in Pathe's advertising department, he saw opportunity in scenario writing and grasped it. The whole Pathe organization is proud of his success. His work on 'The House of Hate' is another step ahead."

Fox Picture Well Advertised

Announcement That Plot Is Based on Well-Known Society Scandal Should Whet Appetites of the Exhibitors

SINCE it was announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS that the mysterious picture on which R. A. Walsh has been working is founded on a recent society scandal, killing and subsequent murder trial in New York City, the policy of reticence at first pursued by the William Fox interests has in part been abandoned. Mr. Fox argues that all the publicity the case received in the press will redound to the advantage of the exhibitor. In fact, Mr. Fox contends, it may be considered as just so much preliminary advertising.

"The profits which will accrue to the exhibitor through the interest aroused in this case by the newspaper accounts of it are incalculable," said Mr. Fox. "There is scarcely a home in the United States, or even in Canada, which newspapers do not reach, and there is scarcely a home in the United States where the case in question did not engender endless discussion."

Mr. Walsh was given a free hand in the production, Mr. Fox feeling that the high qualities of directorship which he exhibited in such photoplays as "Carmen," "The Conqueror," "The Regeneration" and "The Honor System" showed that he was eminently capable of directing even as great a picture as this promises to be.

"To the exhibitor," Mr. Fox states in conclusion, "this production presents an opoprtunity, I think, such as he has never been offered before. Every column of news, every editorial discussion—and the number of them is legion—has been equivalent to a direct advertising drive undertaken for his benefit. This picture should make a record."

Rinehart Story for De Luxe Star's Debut

DE LUXE PICTURES, INC., announces that its first feature, starring Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, will be "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. President Theodore C. Deitrich concluded negotiations with Mrs. Rinehart last Wednesday for the motion picture rights to the story, which appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post and later attained a sale of 250,000 copies in book form. It is estimated that fully 12,000,000 persons in the United States have read the story.

As soon as Mrs. Rinehart learned that the story was intended for Miss Kenyon, she enthusiastically agreed to the sale of the rights to De Luxe Pictures, Inc., declaring Miss Kenyon to be ideal for the part. The heroine of "The Street of Seven Stars" is a musician and Miss Kenyon's well known musical talent well fits her for the role.

"Miss Kenyon's beauty, her girlishness and her personal charm, together with her marked dramatic ability, will be important factors in lending success to her appearance as the heroine of "The Street of Seven Stars," declared Mrs. Rinehart. "I consider 'The Street of Seven Stars' my most artistic story."

The purchase of the rights of "The Street of Seven Stars" follows the announced policy by Mr. Deitrich for presenting Miss Kenyon in clean, wholesome and artistic productions.

One of the best known directors in the country, John B. O'Brien, will produce the picture and a notable cast will be engaged to support Miss Kenyon, it is said.

Cabanne Ready to Start Production

Work will be started within the next few days on the first Cabanne Super-Picture. William Christy Cabanne has completed negotiations for lease of the Bernstein studio, on the West Coast, and is completing arrangements for making the first scenes within the next few days.

E. K. Lincoln, who is to be the star of the Cabanne Pictures, arrived in Los Angeles last week.

Marguerite Snow Awakes Fifth Avenue

Marguerite Snow, who plays the role of "Dixie Mason," a Secret Service operative, in Chief Flynn's expose of the Imperial German Government's spy system in America, "The Eagle's Eye," created a sensation on Fifth avenue at an early hour one morning during the past week. Dressed in a chauffeur's military costume, with knitted helmet and goggles, she came down the avenue in a runabout with a young man in full dress and silk hat sitting beside her. Turning in at one of the Fifties, she drew up in front of a fashionable apartment house. Her companion jumped out and ran into the entrance. She speeded toward Madison avenue. The presence of four camera men with their machines, posted on Fifth avenue and on the side street, told the onlookers that a motion picture incident was being filmed.

Mary Miles Minter Starts New Picture

"A Bit of Jade" is the working title of a new play in which the American Film Company, Inc., will feature Mary Miles Minter. The story is said to abound in mystery, the same being centered around the theft of a green jade necklace from a Hindu goddess.

Gowns in conformity with the Hindu settings will be worn by Miss Minter in the production.

"Smoke" Nearing Completion at Triangle

Gloria Swanson has the leading role in "Smoke," a new society romance, which is nearing completion at the Triangle studios under the direction of Jack Dillon. "Smoke" is a picturization of Norman Sherbrook's recent magazine story of the same title, adapted for the screen by Charles Mortimer. It shows the initiation of a young girl into the ultra "smart set" of a large city, and the triumph of her ideals over the pitfalls and temptations which beset her.

George Irving Directs Lockwood Pictures

Hereafter George Irving will alternate with Fred J. Balshofer, under the dual director system, in the production of Metro features, with Harold Lockwood as the star. Mr. Irving has affixed his signature to a contract calling for this position and he is now in Florida with the Lockwod company beginning the production of Metro's screen version of Holman Day's romantic fiction story, "The Landloper." Mr. Irving began his career as a motion picture director with the All Star Company, for which he produced "The Nightingale," with Ethel Barrymore, and "The Jungle," with Gail Kane. For the Frohman Amusement Company he brought Mary Miles Minter before the public in her first picture, "The Fairy and the Waif." He afterward produced many other pictures for the same firm.

Nazimova's First Metro for Loew Houses

"Revelation," in which Mme. Nazimova, the Russian actress, makes her initial appearance as a star under the Metro banner, will be shown at all the Marcus Loew theatres, beginning February 25. Half of the Loew houses will show the picture the first half of that week and the others will present it the second half of the week.

Hollywood Ranch for Hart

In order that it may be possible to erect large sets without going a great distance to find the necessary space, sixteen acres in the heart of Hollywood, Cal., have been secured five blocks from the studio of Wm. S. Hart for the use of the Thos. H. Ince star in Artcraft pictures. The property lies in a basin and it is hoped to secure some fine distance effects through the camera.

Metro Names Supporting Casts

Viola Dana Will Be Presented in "Breakers Ahead"—Lockwood Feature Started and Edith Storey Film Is Chosen

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION this week announced particulars concerning the casts of three feature productions forthcoming shortly, in which Edith Storey, Harold Lockwood and Viola Dana will be presented, respectively. Several well-known Metro players are included in the line-ups of supporting players for the three stars.

With Viola Dana in "Breakers Ahead," directed by Charles J. Brabin on the West Coast, is Clifford Bruce as leading man. He has the part of a young seafaring man who ships as first mate on board The Wasp. Mr. Bruce has recently appeared in leading roles with Miss Dana, including "Weaver of Dreams" and "Blue Jeans."

Russell Simpson in "Breakers Ahead" has the part of a sea captain. His make-up is said to be excellent. T. H. Gibson-Gowland, Mabel Van Buren, Eugene Pallette, Sydney Deane, Lorena Foster and Helen Jerome Eddy are others in the cast.

In the leading feminine role with Harold Lockwood in "The Landloper," directed by George Irving in Florida, is Pauline Curley, who appeared with the star in "The Square Deceiver." She also has a prominent part in "Her Boy," with Niles Welch.

The "heavy" in "The Landloper" is Stanton Heck, who had the same type of role in "Broadway Bill." Bert Starkey has been selected for a character part. William Clifford is also cast.

Edith Storey is supported by a distinguished cast in the forthcoming Metro production, "Revenge," which is a picturization of Edward Moffatt's novel of the West, "Hearts Steadfast." H. P. Keeler and William Parker adapted the book for the screen, and it was directed by Tod Browning, who produced Miss Storey's first picture, "The Eyes of Mystery," under her new alliance.

Wheeler Oakman is her leading man, playing "Dick" Randall. Oakman has signed a long-time contract to appear opposite Miss Storey. "Revenge" is the first Metro picture in which he appears in this capacity.

Ralph Lewis, the well-known heavy, plays "Sudden" Duncan. He has played for Fox, Fine Arts, and other companies. Some of his pictures are "The Children Pay" and "A Sister of Six."

Terhune Novelizes "Son of Democracy"

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE, the newspaper and magazine writer, has commenced a novelization in serial form, of "The Son of Democracy," based on the Paramount series of the same name, written, directed and produced by Benjamin Chapin.

Mr. Terhune's novelization of Mr. Chapin's series of dramatic film stories of America in the making, will present a fiction article of some 30,000 words which will appear from day to day in the New York Evening World, commencing February 4. This novelization will also be syndicated to other newspapers throughout the country by the New York World Syndicate, which supplies material to a list of thirty-five publications including the Boston Post, Philadelphia Inquirer, Pittsburgh Press, Buffalo Times, Chicago Journal, Minneapalis Journal, Cleveland News, San Francisco Bulletin, Seattle Post Intelligencer, Washington Post, Los Angeles Tribune. Salt Lake Telegram, Denver News, New Orleans States, St. Louis Post Dispatch, Ft. Wayne Journal and Gazette, Mobile Item, Tacoma Tribune, Baltimore News and others.

In connection with its publication of this story in serial form, the New York Evening World will conduct an extensive exploitation campaign in which thousands of dollars will be spent boosting "The Son of Democracy." One-sheet posters of the film will be used on delivery wagons, news stands, etc., announcing the story by Mr. Terhune, the publication of which will be tied up with the film, thus creating wide advance publicity for the subject.

Albert Payson Terhune is widely known among the American public. His serial stories have been read throughout the length and breadth of the land, among his stories which have appeared in the Evening World and its syndicated papers being, "Fifty Failures Who Came Back," "Americans Under Fire," "Famous Children of History," "Stories of Great Novels," "The Story of the Presidents," "Stories of the Operas," "Great Love Stores of History," "World's Greatest Events," etc. In addition to this, Mr. Terhune has been active in the scenario field, some of his scripts being "Years of the Locust," produced b y Famous Players, "Dollars and the Woman," and "Happiness of Three Women."

Mullin Tells of O. Henry Film Problems

"THE O. Henry stories have been both the most pleasant and the most difficult stories to picturize I have ever known," said Eugene Mullin, editorial supervisor of the Broadway Star Features manuscript department, in discussing the work of creating a living library of the works of the humorist. "I have adapted stories for the screen from Dickens, Thackeray, Hall Caine and nearly all of the American and English writers, but I have never found one writer whose works required the same care and forethought as have the O. Henry stories we have filmed up to the present time.

"There are several reasons for this, of course. One, and to my mind the chief problem, is that O. Henry represents a great literary cult. His stories stand head and shoulders above anything else we have ever attempted to do. Their motives revolve about the phenomena of human nature as it really exists, and almost every fan knows the difficulty of translating real life into reel life. Then, too, the O. Henry stories provide some of the most skilful characterization ever done in modern literature. It is always easy for the camera to catch action, but it is extremely difficult to visualize for the screen the clever play of words used by the writer in depicting his intensely human characters," continued Editor Mullin.

"Our scenario writers have put a great deal of time and thought into the adaptations of the original stories for the screen in order that their original atmosphere might not be lost. We have stuck closely to the story and have only wandered afield when it has been necessary to develop what seems to have been the author's thought at the moment. As many as five and six writers have been engaged in preparing the O. Henry scripts for the director, and each has been selected for his ability to read and delineate human character that he may more vividly and truly depict them.

Director Crane Comments Upon Petrova

THE recent completion of the final scenes for "The Life Mask," third of the starring vehicles presenting Madame Olga Petrova, has been marked by a tribute to the artiste by Director Frank Crane, producer of the picture. Mr. Crane returned shortly from Miami, Florida, where, under his direction, all of the exteriors for "The Life Mask" were filmed. In the course of a recent interview he had the following to say regarding the artiste now appearing in pictures bearing her own name:

"Madame is a unique actress in that she realizes that the director is, after all, only a human being. She expects good work and perfect results but is also willing to aid her director in the achievement of these ends. Because of her intense interest in the details of the production she is a constant source of inspiration to the producer and his every little problem becomes with her, a personal problem. During our stay at Miami, where the exteriors for 'The Life Mask' were recently filmed, the Polish star assisted even in securing the locations. The average photoplayer imagines that desirable locations 'just happen'; his or her interest extends only to the brief visit when the actual scene is made. Madame Petrova not only toured with us in the search of suitable locations but rendered most valuable assistance and cooperation in the selection of same. Her interest in the various productions in which she appears does not cease when the film has been made. It extends right into the cutting room where many valuable hints and suggestions aid materially in the delicate operation of trimming and cutting the various scenes to the proper point. Never during the time spent in making 'The Life Mask' did I see her lose her enthusiasm."

Uncle Sam's "Eagle's Eye" Was Open

Leopold D. Wharton, supervising director for The Whartons, who are producing Chief Flynn's serial photodrama exposing the Imperial German Government's spy system in America, "The Eagle's Eye," learned something of Uncle Sam's protective system during the past week. He had brought the entire company appearing in the Flynn serial to New York to film incidents on the water front for three episodes in "The Eagle's Eye." With D. H. Turner, his assistant, he went to his first location last Monday morning. The temperature was below zero and the wind blew a gale along West street and around the steamship piers.

Mr. Wharton crossed West street and had hardly got under lee of one of the pier fronts when men came running toward him from several directions. Four different authorities wanted to know. Papers were all right, but even papers had to be identified, and they all had their own way of going about it. Each authority telephoned to his own headquarters for information, and fully three hours passed before Mr. Wharton was permitted to proceed with his work.

Hurst Assists in Directing Serial

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, announces the engagement of Paul Hurst, well-known director and leading man, as co-director with David Smith in the production of "The Woman in the Web," the fifteen-episode serial in which Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon are to be starred. He assumed his duties at Hollywood last week with the beginning of work on the third episode.

Senior Director David Smith, who is a brother of the Vitagraph president and who produced many of the O. Henry stories and Blue Ribbon features, has notified the Vitagraph Eastern offices that "The Woman in the Web" is moving along more rapidly than he had anticipated. The story was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, and Vitagraph officials predict that it will prove even more thrilling than "The Fighting Trail" or "Vengeance and the Woman."

Two New De Mille Stories for Artcraft

Temporarily relinquishing the megaphone and director's stand for the typewriter, Wm. C. De Mille will soon start work on two original photoplays for Artcraft, which will be produced under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

Chaplin Makes Progress

Reports from the West Coast indicate Charlie Chaplin is well into his first comedy for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The Chaplin new plant in Hollywood is said to be a veritable bee-hive of activity.

Enid Bennett Is Presented by Thomas H. Ince In "The Keys of the Righteous," On the Paramount Program. Excellent Direction Is Said to Be a Feature

Lasky Praises Blackton's "Wild Youth"

In a telegram to Walter E. Greene, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president and head of productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, wires from Los Angeles as follows:

"Having witnessed J. Stuart Blackton's production of 'Wild Youth,' I have to express my words of tribute to a brother producer. Mr. Blackton has secured a remarkable story on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel. The picture has a wonderful cast. Miss Huff as the youthful girl of the story never has done a better performance than in 'Wild Youth.' Theodore Roberts is unsurpassable as old Mazarine, and Jack Mulhall carries the role of the youthful lover with rare skill. The character of the Chinaman played by James Cruze presents a wonderful bit of acting, and I cannot be too enthusiastic in praising this production of Mr. Blackton."

Diando Releases Through Pathe

Through an error in press copy furnished Motion Picture News for the issue of January 26, it was stated in an article referring to Bryant Washburn and the Paralta Studios that the Diando Film Corporation makes Baby Marie Osborne subjects for Paralta. The Diando Corporation produce the Baby Marie Osborne pictures for release through Pathe, and there is no connection between the company and Paralta.

In an announcement Diando states the Pathe Company made arrangements with Diando to use the studios of the latter for production of Washburn's "Kidder and Ko." After the star purchased a home in Hollywood, he moved his studio to be closer his residence, Diando says.

Thornton Remains in Films

Bernard Thornton has decided that his success in pictures has been great enough to justify his remaining in "the films," and this week brought the announcement that he will not return to the legitimate stage.

Two Ince Pictures Are Named

William S. Hart Will Be Presented by Artcraft in "The Tiger Man" —Dorothy Dalton in Drama Directed by Neill

THE titles of two new Thomas H. Ince productions on which work is now in progress, were received at the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., last week. Wm. S. Hart's new vehicle following "Blue Blazes Rawden," which will be released by Artcraft on February 18, has been named "The Tiger Man." In this production Hart is presented as Hawk Parsons, an outlaw of the desert who is redeemed by the love of a good woman. The story is by J. G. Hawks, who also wrote "Blue Blazes Rawden."

Dorothy Dalton's newest Paramount picture, on which she has been working for the past few weeks, has been titled "Tyrant Fear." This story is being staged by R. William Neill under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, from the scenario by R. Cecil Smith. John Stumar is responsible for the photography. The story is one of primitive passions unloosed and a woman's struggle against fate, with her triumph when she has once thrown off the shackles of fear. Work on this film is now rapidly progressing at the Ince studio and is expected to be completed shortly. "Tyrant Fear" will be released by Paramount after "Love Me," the next Dorothy Dalton offering to the public.

The new Charles Ray photoplay following "His Own Home Town," to be released by Paramount in the near future, is now nearing completion at the Thomas H. Ince studio.

"Naughty, Naughty!" Enid Bennett's second Paramount picture now being produced under the direction of Jerome Storm and supervised by Thomas H. Ince, will present a comedy of the rare and delectable sort from beginning to end, it is stated. The locale is "somewhere in Kansas," a parody on the narrowness of the country town and the people who are sometimes found in rural communities far from the "madding throng." C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story which is expected to prove as great a success as Miss Bennett's first Paramount picture just released, "The Keys of the Righteous." Jerome Storm is directing.

Bogus Empey Arrested and Deported

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, reports the arrest and deportation last week of an alleged impostor who impersonated Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, author of "Over the Top" and star of the big Vitagraph production which is being made from the American fighter's war book. The man was first noted in Albany, later on a train from the New York capital to New York City and finally in Philadelphia, where he was arrested.

It is announced that, owing to the progress that has been made in taking the interiors for "Over the Top," Sergeant Empey last week was able to take four days away from the Vitagraph studio in order that he might make a tour of Eastern Pennsylvania filling lecture engagements, which were made before he had signed the contract to appear in the Vitagraph production of his book. During his time away Empey addressed throngs in Scranton, Altoona, Reading and Lancaster, in each case rousing the throngs to high enthusiasm. In addition to his usual story of the need for men—American men—on the other side, he made an especial appeal for smokes for the soldiers.

Madge Kennedy Rests

For the first time since Madge Kennedy started work for Goldwyn in "Baby Mine," the comedienne is taking a brief vacation. It is her first rest since last summer, and lasts but two weeks.

Virginia Pearson Has Been in William Fox Pictures Two Years

Virginia Pearson Starts War Drama

Virginia Pearson has begun work in what will be one of the most stirring war dramas yet made for the screen, according to an announcement from the William Fox offices. The tentative title is "A Daughter of France," and Edmund Lawrence, whom Mr. Fox recently acquired, makes his directorial debut with the Fox forces with this production. Hugh Thompson, who plays opposite Annette Kellermann in the marine spectacle, "Queen of the Sea," and who had the leading male part in "The Forbidden Path," will appear in a similar role in this picture. Mr. Fox states that it is his purpose to release the drama as a Special Feature for the week of March 24th.

"A Daughter of France" is being filmed at the former Victor studio. William Zollinger is in charge of the photography. The settings are said to be noteworthy. Especial emphasis is laid on the interiors of the French chateau where most of the action takes place. At the Fox offices it is declared that because of the depth of the scenes in the chateau living room, more lights of all kinds are being used to insure the recording of detail than have been required at the studio for months.

Prominent in Miss Pearson's supporting company, in addition to Mr. Thompson, are Herbert Evans, George Moss, Ethel Kaufman, Anthony Merlo, Maude Hill and Naida Gary.

MacGowan Moves Up with Goldwyn

Kenneth MacGowan, until recently director of Goldwyn publicity, has been appointed aid to George Loane Tucker, with headquarters at the studio in Fort Lee. His official title is Editor of Production.

Triangle Pleased with Policy

General Manager Freeman Announces That In "Treating Exhibitors Right" Company Is Being Rewarded Satisfactorily

"IT is very gratifying to find," said Y. F. Freeman, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, "that our new policy toward exhibitors has proven so successful. We believed it to be a commendable one, and results have more than substantiated our belief. The proof lies in the numerous letters that we have received and are receiving from exhibitors all over the country praising Triangle service.

"The policy is not radical. We simply resolved to give exhibitors the best possible service at a minimum cost, and consequently adopted definite measures—all based upon efficient service. We knew that the one way in which the exhibitor could earn more money was for the producer and distributor to save it for him and so we laid our plans to economize wherever possible and give him the results of more efficient and economical business practices.

"First—the War Tax threatened the exhibitor, and he began to fear for his profits. Triangle did not attempt to shift the responsibility, but faced the matter squarely, saw the predicament of the exhibitor, and cheerfully paid the tax. Only absolute efficiency in every branch of its service could have enabled Triangle to shoulder this increased expense.

"Then Triangle inaugurated an innovation on its program. Every month a seven-reel feature of standard quality is furnished to exhibitors at no extra charge. Many letters testify to the enormous pulling power of these pictures. They are a big advertising asset to every exhibitor, and offer him an opportunity of increasing his box-office receipts at no additional cost.

"Every exhibitor receives our personal attention. No complaint is insignificant. Every criticism is followed up and satisfaction is the only antidote. Triangle branch managers and salesmen are made to feel that their work is only begun when a picture is booked. Co-operation with the individual exhibitor and solicitous consideration for his needs are matters for attention.

"Co-operation and specialization have been our watchwords. Concentrated and whole-hearted effort in every department have made possible the execution of a policy which has at heart the welfare of the exhibitor.

"And," concluded Mr. Freeman, "the exhibitor's approval and testimonial are adequate rewards."

Universal Serials Bring Four Accidents

FOUR accidents in as many serials being filmed at Universal City occurred during the last week as the result of the directors' efforts to provide the thrills demanded by film fans.

Nevertheless, serial production is proceeding at full blast at Universal City. With the Ben Wilson-Neva Gerber aggregation still hard at work unravelling the story of "The Mystery Ship;" Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed just commencing to get warmed up in their efforts to dodge the snares and pitfalls lying in their path in "The Bull's Eye," and Jacques Jaccard busily engaged in directing Marie Walcamp in the first episodes of "The Lion's Claws," the new Universal serial, this particular phase of studio work is going along without let-up.

According to the players taking part in the Universal serials, the past week has been particularly replete with hair-raising experiences for them. Ben Wilson is trying hard to forget an involuntary plunge into the river as the consequence of an auto accident. Eddie Polo is nursing a lame shoulder that is the result of having been thrown and trampled upon by a frightened horse. Vivian Reed and Noble Johnson complain of still suffering from the shaking up they received when a runaway stage carried them down an embankment, while Marie Walcamp is just returning to her normal self after a particularly exciting encounter with a lion during one of the scenes in the serial in which she is featured.

The accident in which Wilson was mixed up was due to bad judgment on the part of the man who was driving the auto used in the latest episode of "The Mystery Ship." The car was to have been halted at the edge of the dock. The chauffeur applied his brakes too late, and before the auto could be halted it took a header into the river. Wilson saw his danger and without stopping to argue the matter jumped clear of the car as it toppled over.

Zoe Rae, Universal Star

Miller Will Direct Alice Brady Picture

In order to accommodate Charles Giblyn in a conflicting engagement which this director had with another company, Select Pictures Corporation, finding it could secure Norma Talmadge's director, Charles Miller, has released Mr. Giblyn from his agreement to direct Alice Brady in her new picture. Miss Talmadge is in Palm Beach for a month's rest. This made Mr. Miller available, and it was quickly taken advantage of. He already has started on the picture in the Fifty-sixth street studio.

Miss Brady plays the role of Vera Souroff, a young music teacher, who is giving instruction in the family of a countess. However, this character is shown from the age of seven years, and Tula Belle plays the part of the star in her childhood.

Heading the capable cast which appears in Miss Brady's support is Frank Morgan, her leading man, who also played opposite this star in her last completed Select Picture, "The Knife." Mr. Morgan's part is that of a Russian nobleman, Count Nico.

"The Shuttle" Nears Completion

Out at the Morosco studios in Los Angeles final touches are being placed on Constance Talmadge's recently completed Select production, "The Shuttle."

In this, her first picture to be made since her arrival in the West, Miss Talmadge is said to have combined the lighter touches of comedy with the heavier demands of drama, as in her earlier release, "Scandal." Unlike "The Honeymoon" and "The Studio Girl," "The Shuttle" provides her with an impersonation of unusual force in which her deeper vein of dramatic ability is given ample opportunity for expression.

Work on "Up the Road with Sallie," Miss Talmadge's next Select production, is well under way and promises a return to her lighter comedy vein. All of her pictures are distributed by Select.

Trench Scenes at Regular Army Camp

The trench scenes for "Over the Top," the Vitagraph super-feature, which is being made from Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's war book with the soldier-author-lecturer as the star, are to be made at Camp Wheeler, the national army camp at Macon, Ga. Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, announces that by special permit of the War Department the company has been granted leave to use the big southern camp as a location, and Sergeant Empey, with a party of more than fifty players and officials left Monday, February 11, for the location.

Whitman Gets a Rest

Alfred Whitman, after the completion of "The Home Trail" for Vitagraph on the West Coast, was rewarded by getting a rest of four days. Most of this time was spent in posing for the "still" camera.

J. A. Berst, Surrounded by Members of the Rolin Company, Bids Farewell to the Coast and Returns to the Ice and Snow of New York

Pathe Busy at Coast Studios

Bessie Love, Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward and William Duncan Are Ready to Start Work on New Productions

WITH the arrival at Los Angeles last week of Bessie Love, who will immediately begin work on "A Little Sister of Everybody," by William Addison Lathrop, at the Paralta studio, Pathe's West coast producing forces received another notable augmentation. Miss Love had already been preceded by Frank Keenan and his director, Ernest Ward, who on January 28 turned the crank on the first Keenan Pathe Play to be made on the Pacific coast. Fannie Ward, who has just made the biggest success of her career in Astra's production of A. H. Woods' "Innocent," made under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, will shortly leave for the coast.

Miss Love left New York immediately upon her return from Charleston, S. C., where final exterior scenes for her comedy-drama, by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, were taken. This completes the picture which was all ready for showing with the exception of the brief parts missing and it is scheduled for release on March 10.

Frank Keenan, fresh from "Loaded Dice," first of his Pathe Plays, released February 10, is beginning work on one of Sir Henry Irving's stage successes. This will be under the direction of Ernest Ward, who produced "The Vicar of Wakefield," and also Mr. Keenan's second picture, a final title for which has not yet been selected, but which, however, probably will be released as the second of his Pathe Plays.

Fannie Ward will join Pathe's Pacific coast colony immediately on the completion of "The Yellow Ticket." This is an Astra production under the direction of William Parke, with a well balanced cast including Warner Oland, Milton Sills, Armand Kalitz and Helene Chadwick, and is reported to be even better than "Innocent."

William Duncan will shortly start work on a new type of Pathe serial by Gilson Willetts at one of Pathe's West Coast plants.

At the Glendale Studio, the Diando Company is putting finishing touches on "A Daughter of the West," with Frank Whitson, Marion Warner and Morris Foster in the cast.

The Bryant Washburn Company, directed by William Worthington, with Gertrude Selby as leading woman, is putting the finishing touches on "Twenty-One" by George Randolph Chester.

Chinese Scenes in New Lasky Production

A Chinese New Year celebration in which three hundred Celestials take part is announced as one of the big scenes which Cecil B. De Mille took recently for "The Whispering Chorus," the forthcoming Lasky production. A replica of a village in China was constructed and the scene was photographed at night. Lanterns hung from the rafters, and were strung across the street on streamers, and Chinese dragons, spitting fire, were dragged along by prancing Celestials.

Metro Uses Hotel Set

An elaborate and spacious hotel lobby set was built recently at the Metro studio in New York for the staging of scenes in "Good Will and Almond Shells," starring Emmy Wehlen. This picturization of Kenneth L. Roberts' Saturday Evening Post story is being directed by George D. Baker, who also made the screen adaptation.

Smashing Advertising for "Tarzan"

ONE of the biggest campaigns that has been put over in New York City for a motion picture production is that being conducted by Harry Reichenbach for the National Film Company's big feature, "Tarzan of the Apes." The widespread publicity that has been given the feature has resulted in most liberal patronage at the Lyric theatre.

Newspaper advertising was the basis of the local campaign, but aside from this an immense herald was sent out in advance to exhibitors through the country and this was followed with reproductions of the trade paper advertising so as to miss no one who might have failed to see the original displays. Up to the time of the newsdealer's strike, Mr. Reichenbach used two, three and four column displays in the various papers and got column after column of news space, because of the novelty of the production. One of the big things in putting over the picture so well was the fact that the Evening World ran the story serially, thus attracting the attention of thousands who had read it in original form. Under its own bills were placed ads of "Tarzan" at the Lyric.

When the strike came along Mr. Reichenbach cut down the display in the newspapers to the six line minimum and proceeded to reach the people in another way. Through using the registration lists he began to circularize every home in Manhattan, the Bronz, Richmond and Westchester, and was just starting in to do the same in Brooklyn when he learned that the paper there was not seriously affected. He estimated that 600,000 of these circulars were put out and at an expense of over $1,200. In addition to this the big sign strung across Broadway and the unique lobby display attracted the attention of new thousands.

Five Companies Busy at Astra Studios

PATHE directors and their companies have just put in a busy week at the Astra studios at Jersey City and Fort Lee, no less than five organizations being engaged in producing Pathe pictures at the New Jersey plants.

George Fitzmaurice is doing "The Grell Mystery," by Ouida Bergere, starring Irene Castle—a Pathe Play.

William Parke is directing the final scenes of "The Yellow Ticket," starring Fannie Ward with a cast which includes Milton Sills as the hero, Warner Oland as the villain and Armand Kalitz and Helene Chadwick in other important roles. In this picture Miss Ward appears in a makeup entirely different from anything she has ever been seen in before, creating the role of a Russian peasant.

George B. Seitz is at work on the serial, "The House of Hate," starring Pearl White with Antonio Moreno, and including in the cast Paul Clerget, the French pantomimist; Peggy Shaynor, an actress of the legitimate stage, who reveals an entirely new type of screen vampire, and John Webb Dillion, as the juvenile heavy. Thrills are numerous, it is said, and Joe Cunney, Floyd Buckley and Morgan Jones are kept busy with stunts in which Pearl White and Antonio Moreno figure prominently. This serial will be released on March 3.

Albert Parker has just finished "Annexing Bill," a comedy drama, starring Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale, and is now getting ready for another production, while Fred Wright has taken these co-stars for the making of Fred Jackson's famous play, "For Sale."

Mildred Harris, Steadily Aadvancing Toward Stardom, Is Presented by Jewel In "The Doctor

Von Rintelen Is Character in "The Eagle's Eye"

Captain Franz von Rintelen, who, with ten other Imperial German plotters, was convicted in the United States Court on Tuesday, the 5th inst., before Judge Harland B. Howe of conspiracy to destroy neutral shipping sailing from this port, will be one of the Kaiser's spy army prominently identified in the fourth, fifth and sixth episodes of Chief Flynn's moving picture expose of the Imperial German spy system, "The Eagle's Eye." Von Rintelen was sentenced to eighteen months in the Federal Prison at Atlanta, fined $2,000 and assessed the costs of his trial. This sentence will begin at the termination of one year he is now serving on conviction of inciting strikes in munition plants.

The part of von Rintelen in "The Eagle's Eye" will be acted by Wellington Playter, who as closely resembles him in appearance as the players who impersonate von Bernstorff, Dr. Albert and Captains von Papen and Boy-Ed resemble these Imperial German plotters.

Hoover Schedule Followed a U. City

Actors and other employes at Universal City, Cal., last week got their first strong reminder that President Carl Laemmle meant business in his recent order concerning the observance of meatless and wheatless days, when, attempting to order their favorite meats at the U. City restaurant, on Tuesday, they were told to study the bill of fare.

As is well known, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has been devoting considerable space in its Animated Weekly, Current Events and Screen Magazine releases to the forwarding of Mr. Hoover's requests for the saving of food. When the fact that the restaurant at Universal City was not entirely observing the "less" days reached Mr. Laemmle's ears, action was promptly forthcoming.

Scenes in "The Claim" in Frontier Hotel

A frontier hotel of the sort that is "all things to all men," around which the life of a little Western mining town centers, furnishes the background of much of the action in Metro's forthcoming production, "The Claim," a screen version of the Broadway success of the same name by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare.

Edith Storey is the featured player in "The Claim," which is being produced at Metro's West Coast studio at Hollywood, Cal.

Kenneth Harlan Opposite Miss Clifford

Kenneth Harlan, whose most recent screen appearance was in Lois Weber's "Price of a Good Time," has been engaged by H. M. Horkheimer as Kathleen Clifford's leading man.

Miss Clifford has written her own production, a five-reel drama, which Howard M. Mitchell is directing at the Balboa Studio.

Glaum Subject Promises Timeliness

Details regarding the first production in which Louise Glaum will be presented as a Paralta star, which have just been given out at the studio in Los Angeles, indicate that the production will be a particularly timely one. The story has been prepared especially for Miss Glaum by Monte M. Katterjohn, and, according to the announcement, concerns the "insidious kultur as forced upon a liberty-loving people by the Wolf Nation of the World." The working title of the production is "Intelligence," and the leading role is said to give Miss Glaum opportunity for many intensely emotional scenes. To facilitate production without making a corresponding sacrifice in quality, two directors—Wallace Worsley and Elliott Howe—will work simultaneously on the picture, one of them producing the scenes in which Miss Glaum appears and the other attending to the various exteriors in which no action is provided for the star. In this production Miss Glaum is doing her first work before the camera since August 12 of last year, when she completed the final scenes in "Idolators," which was also written by Katterjohn.

Drews Take Vacation in Florida

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have gone to Florida for a vacation, after completing their second year as creators and co-stars of Metro-Drew comedies.

Forty-seven one-act Metro-Drew comedies were written, produced and released during the year of 1916, and forty-two one-act Metro-Drew comedies, with a five-act "thriller" to complete the quota, were done in 1917.

Mr. and Mrs. Drew will remain in Florida until March 1. Following their return to the North they will vary their work by an excursion into the realm of the legitimate stage, appearing during the Spring under the management of Richard Walton Tully.

Jewel Cites Lois Weber Advance

The publicity department of Jewel this week draws a comparison between the first picture produced by Lois Weber and her most recent one, in order to show the development Miss Weber has obtained as a director. Her first picture was "The Dragon's Breath," a one-reeler made for Universal in 1913, and her latest one is "The Doctor and the Woman."

Paralta Has Alaskan Story for Hickman

William E. Wing, the author, has provided Paralta with a photoplay for Howard Hickman, entitled "The Golden Thread." It is an Alaskan story, said to be teeming with rugged life, but dealing with a delicate subject, which has constituted a problem for the law ever since the creation.

"The Golden Thread" will be one of Paralta's regular releases.

Madame Olga Petrova's Particular Style of Screen Artistry Has Made Rapid Rise Since the Star Began Operations at the Head of Her Own Organization

Petrova Begins Fourth Picture

Story by George Middleton Is Used, Under Title of "The Great Star"—Ralph Ince Directs the Feature

WORK on the fourth special starring production in which Madame Olga Petrova is to appear has been started at the Petrova Studios under the direction of Ralph Ince. The story selected for this picture is from the pen of George Middleton, who wrote "Polly of the Circus."

The title chosen for Madame Petrova's latest picture is "The Great Star" and in it she interprets the role of Lucille Caruthers, daughter of a Southern gentleman of the old school, with strong femininistic ideas of her own and the individuality to place them into effect.

Petrova announces a particularly strong and capable cast has been assembled to support her in her fourth special production. Thomas H. Holding, who has appeared opposite Madame Petrova in previous pictures, "Daughter of Destiny," "The Light Within" and "The Life Mask," will portroy the leading male part, while J. Herbert Frank, well known screen "heavy," will handle a character said to be especially suited for the display of his peculiar talents. Mr. Frank has been seen in various pictures of Goldwyn, Famous Players, and other companies. Matilda Brundage and Edith Hinkle, both of whom have appeared in former film plays with Madame Petrova, will occupy parts in her latest subject, together with E. J. Radcliffe, who comes from the legitimate stage to fill one of the roles in "The Great Star."

Ralph Ince, who has been engaged by the Petrova Picture Company's president, Frederick L. Collins, and Madame Petrova herself to produce the latest picture scheduled for release on her special calendar, is responsible for "Today," in which Florence Reed appeared, and for many years directed the starring productions in which Anita Stewart appeared for the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. Ince is a pioneer in the staging of film productions, having begun his career over twelve years ago with the original Vitagraph forces.

Turner & Dahnken Place Chaplin Films

THROUGH the First National Exhibitors' Circuit this week it was announced that Turner & Dahnken, of San Francisco, have closed a deal with the Hippodrome theatre of that city for Chaplin's "Signature Protected" Comedies released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The consideration is said to be $2,500 for seven days' run of each release.

The deal was made by E. M. Asher, manager of the Turner & Dahnken Film Exchange. Speaking of it, he said: "So far as we know, it is the biggest price ever paid for a two-reel subject in the history of the picture business. When it is remembered that the Hippodrome is primarily a vaudeville house, the true value of camera comedy will be more fully appreciated. The Hippodrome Circuit books some big, high priced acts and can give them very good time. That its management can afford to pay such a price for a motion picture top-liner bespeaks more eloquently than words the popularity of screen entertainment. It certainly disproves the contention of those who say that pictures are losing their hold on the public, for at the Hippodrome Chaplin's Comedies are bringing higher prices than any of the regular acts and are in direct competition with them."

Sam Harris and Irving Ackerman acted for the Hippodrome Circuit.

Betzwood Starts Well Equipped

Plant Near Philadelphia Is Considered One of Most Complete in Country — Louis Bennison and Tsen Mei Have Leads

THE entrance of the Betzwood Film Company, of Philadelphia, into the industry, as announced last week in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is marked by several instances which are considered unusual in a new organization of the kind. To begin with, the new company, of which Clarence Wolf is president, has bought outright and for cash the Betzwood plant twenty miles from the Quaker City from Siegmund Lubin. Over 400 acres are included in the grounds, and as the plant stands now everything is ready for production work to begin.

Of practical import is the series of factories comprising the film developing and printing plant, in which are patented machines and machinery for film printing employed exclusively at Betzwood. These patents were secured from Mr. Lubin. Eighty per cent of the Betzwood printing process is accomplished mechanically. There is one machine that will automatically detect and stop itself on a variation of a thousandth of an inch from the true.

Having put the printing factories into perfect order for immediate operation the Betzwood Company is now devoting attention to its plans for producing. In this particular it proposes to reach for quality instead of quantity. With no schedule demanding hurried releases it will seek the exceptional and novel in screen material. The story or play that offers no more inducement than the fact that there is no reason why it could not be made into a picture will have no chance with the Betzwood Company.

Louis Bennison has been engaged as leading man, and Tsen Mei, a Chinese girl, has been secured to handle the feminine end of the stellar combination. Thus far these two players are the only ones who have been announced by the new companies. It is understood that no nationally known stars will be engaged, as quality in production will be made the keynote of the organization and not sole reliance upon a star of renown.

Paramount to Release "The Guilty Man"

THE screen presentation of A. H. Woods' legitimate stage production, "The Guilty Man," produced under the supervision of Thos. H. Ince, Inc., will be released by Paramount February 18, it was announced last week. The screen version, it is stated, varies but little from the original stage production.

Written by Ruth Helen Davis and the late Charles Klein, author of "The Lion and the Mouse," "Daughters of Men," "Next of Kin," "The District Attorney," etc., Mr. Woods' production was conceded to be one of the strongest plays ever staged. The story deals with the life of a Parisian dancer and her illegitimate daughter, who, murdering her stepfather, is prosecuted for the state by her own father. In view of the several great murder cases that have held the attention of the entire nation even in these days when war news usually chokes out everything else, Paramount thinks "The Guilty Man" is an exceedingly timely and intensely interesting subject.

The picture was directed by Irvin V. Willat under the supervision of Mr. Ince and the cast includes Gloria Hope, Vivian Reed, William Garwood, J. P. Lockney, Charles French, Hayward Mack and others. The outdoor shots depict scenes in Southern France before the war and the details of the French interiors have caused considerable comment among those who have already viewed this exceptional picture.

Red Cross Endorses Metro-Drew Comedy

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION is authority for the statement that "Help Wanted," a Metro-Drew comedy starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, is the first motion picture to receive the official sanction and endorsement of the American Red Cross. "Help Wanted" has already been shown at the Rivoli theatre in New York and has now been booked for a tour of the entire country.

Combining Red Cross propaganda with the genial humor of a regulation Drew comedy, "Help Wanted" has been seen and approved by Henry P. Davison, chairman of the American Red Cross War Council, by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President of the United States, and by Ethan Allen of the American Red Cross, and has been officially recognized, passed and adopted by the Red Cross organization.

The production and release of "Help Wanted" is directly in line with Metro's policy of aiding the government in every possible way. The Drew comedy, "The Patriot," advocated food conservation, and won the approbation of Food Administrator Hoover. "Gas Logic," a coming Metro Drew comedy, deals with the fuel situation. Among Metro's feature patriotic productions have been "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet and now playing at the Lyric theatre, New York; "The Slacker," "Her Boy" and "The Legion of Death." All of these have been special productions with the exception of "Her Boy," which is an All-Star Series production.

GEORGE LARKIN
Featured in "Zongar," the Daredevil of Romance

"Zongar" Marks Up Point for Larkin

George Larkin, in front of whose name Physical Culture Photo Plays, Inc., uses the sobriquet "Handsome," and who that company explains is known to a large coterie of feminine admirers as an "Apollo of the Screen," has added another mark to his record by his portrayal of Zongar in the feature of that name. The picture was produced by Bernarr Macfadden.

In speaking of Larkin, Physical Culture Photo Plays said: "Clear grit to the backbone, combined with unusual dramatic ability and artistic inclinations, have earned for him the name of 'Gentleman Unafraid.'"

Former pictures in which Larkin has appeared are "Trey o' Hearts," "Grant, Police Reporter," and others.

Another Chambers Story for Alice Joyce

Alice Joyce, who has just finished "The Song of the Soul," her third Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature since she went under the direction of Tom Terriss, last week began work on "The Business of Life," a Robert W. Chambers story, which will be made into a five-reel feature. Supporting Miss Joyce in this picture will be Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Templar Saxe and Betty Blythe.

The Chambers characters seem to be particularly adapted to Miss Joyce's type and dramatic style, and she is credited with having given some of the best work of her career to their interpretation.

Madge Kennedy at Strand

Madge Kennedy is the star at the Strand theatre, New York, the week of February 11 in her newest Goldwyn production, "Our Little Wife."

With Shirley Mason In "Weaver of Dreams," Produced by Edison, Inc., Are Native Japanese Players Who Have Won Recognition in This Country

Lee Children Start New Production

Jane and Katherine Lee have commenced work on a new production, their fourth as stars, under the direction of Kenean Buel. The scene this time is laid in a city of about 100,000 population and the children, orphans, under the guardianship of an aunt, are kidnaped. Eventually they succeed, with police assistance, in breaking up a band of yeggmen. The supporting cast has not been completed, but, except for Jane and Katherine Lee, will be composed of adults.

The latest completed Lee picture, "American Buds," will be released February 24. The one now under way, which has not been titled, probably will not be ready before April.

Beban Completes Paramount Feature

George Beban's newest production for Paramount release, titled "One More American," has been completed at the Hollywood, Cal., studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The scenario was prepared by Olga Printzlau from Wm. C. De Mille's play, "The Land of the Free." Included in the supporting cast are Marcia Manon, May Giracci, Helen Jerome Eddy, Raymond Hatton, Jack Holt, H. B. Carpenter, Hector Dion, May Palmer, Ernest Joy and Signor Buzzi. Wm. C. De Mille directed the production.

American Film Employees Do Their Bit

The employees of the factory and offices of the American Film Company, Inc., in Chicago, have pledged themselves to abstain from meat at breakfast and wheat at dinner for a period of sixty days. The young women of the factory have further pledged themselves to eliminate candy from their bill of fare. Not to be outdone, the male employees have agreed to taboo swearing, under penalty of being called upon to contribute five cents to the Red Cross for each and every cuss word uttered.

Edison Makes Mason Feature

Production Is Described as Novel Japanese Picture—Matt Moore Has Strong Part, with Japanese in Cast

MISS SHIRLEY MASON, the heroine of "Seven Deadly Sins," and the erstwhile "Appletree Girl," is being starred by the Edison Company in what is said to be a novel Japanese production now nearing completion in their Bronx studio.

Provisionally called "Aliens" or "Weavers of Dreams," the play is not yet finally titled. The story deals with a pretty Japanese bride who is obliged to forsake her white husband, a young American, because of the conflict arising from difference of race. Miss Mason takes the principal role, Matt Moore being the American husband, Frank O'Cononr his chum, Ormi Hawley a belle in the Tokio foreign colony, Thomas Tomomoto the child bride's father, and Messrs. Oskima and Wada other Japanese characters.

L. W. McChesney, the author, and Bernard J. Durning, the director, believe that the new play will have an even stronger appeal than "Madame Butterfly," first, because the racial struggle is said to be more evenly divided, and, second, because picture artistry has so greatly improved in its methods. For example, the Edison firm didn't fill up the picture with white actors dressed as Japs, but secured real Japanese for all the native roles except the stars. Miss Mason herself passed the most exacting series of tests which were suggested by an art advisory board, it is said.

Settings and costumes were designed by a prominent artist of New York's Jap colony. Antique furnishings, paintings, vases and other objets d'art were secured to lend a thoroughly native air.

For the winter months Edison's glass-roofed studio in the Bronx, just beyond the terminus of the Third avenue "L," has been turned into a veritable corner of old Japan.

There has been no restriction on footage, Edison insists, so the six reels when completed will represent the careful selection of the best photography, more than 12,000 feet having been already taken. The play is scheduled for early release by Perfection Pictures. Before its release date, however, it is likely to be introduced by a metropolitan run at a Broadway theatre. The scenes are laid in "plum blossom time," and it is in the spring that New York will see it.

Miss Pearson Celebrates Anniversary

NEXT week will mark the second anniversary of Virginia Pearson's joining the William Fox film forces. During that period Miss Pearson has made thirteen feature programs and is now engaged upon a war photodrama, "A Daughter of France," which Mr. Fox declares will prove to be the most notable production of her entire career.

Miss Pearson's first Fox picture was "Blazing Love," released May 1, 1916. Her most recent film was "Stolen Honor," a story of intrigue in Washington society. Although she was already an actress of distinction on the speaking stage (coming to pictures from a season as the vampire in Robert Hilliard's "A Fool There Was"), she has won even greater fame in photoplays. Another important role which she had in the legitimate was that of leading lady for William Faversham in the original production of "The Hawk," following Mme. Dorziat.

Miss Pearson is a member of the Galloways family of Kentucky. She was born in Louisville, and lived there until she left to accept a small part on the stage. Her photoplay record under William Fox's management includes starring roles in the following productions: "Blazing Love," "Hypocrisy," "A Tortured Heart," "The War Bride's Secret," "Daredevil Kate," "Bitter Truth," "Sister Against Sister," "Royal Romance," "Wrath of Love," "When False Tongues Speak," "Thou Shalt Not Steal," "All for a Husband" and "Stolen Honor," in all of which she acquitted herself most creditably.

Metro Promotes Director Baker

Is Made Manager of Productions at West Coast Studio, with Supervision of All Products Made at Hollywood Plant

GEORGE D. BAKER, one of Metro's directing staff de luxe, has been appointed manager of productions of Metro's West Coast studio at Hollywood, Cal., and will leave soon for the Pacific Coast to enter upon his new position. Mr. Baker will occupy a similar position in the Western studio to that filled by Maxwell Karger in Metro's New York studio. He will have complete supervision of all the Metro productions made in the West, making decisions upon proposed productions and passing judgment upon the finished product. The success of this plan, as evolved at Metro's New York studio, with Mr. Karger in charge, is responsible for the extension of the same arrangement to the West Coast studio, in accordance with the ideas of Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president.

Mr. Baker will leave for California as soon as he has completed the production of "The Shell Game," with Emmy Wehlen as star, upon which he is now engaged. "The Shell Game" is a screen version of Kenneth L. Roberts' story, "Good Will and Almond Shells," originally published in the Saturday Evening Post. With Mr. Baker will go his assistant director, Charles Hunt, who has been associated with him ever since he began working for Metro. Both men will remove their households to California, Mr. Baker taking his sister, who presides over his house, and Mr. Hunt being accompanied by his family.

In his new affiliation, Mr. Baker will work in co-operation with B. A. Rolfe, Metro's Western representative, with Joseph W. Engel, Metro's treasurer, who has gone to California for an extended visit, and with the directors already installed there. He intends to give his directors a free hand. "I have always had a free hand myself, ever since I came to Metro," says Mr. Baker, "and the results seem to have been satisfactory. I do not believe in demanding for myself privileges I am not willing to extend to others."

Mr. Baker came to Metro from Vitagraph, where he had been most successful in the direction of Edith Storey, now a Metro star. He will again be associated with Miss Storey in Metro's Western studio. He also directed the late John Bunny in the famous Bunny comedies.

Film Exploits Defense Measures

Vitagraph Has Co-operation of State Defense Council in Production in Which Governor Whitman and State Troops Appear

THE patriotic production which Vitagraph is making in conjunction with the New York State Council of Defense is now reaching its final stages, President Albert E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company announces. All of the exterior scenes have been completed and many of the interiors, in some of which Governor Charles S. Whitman appears, also have been finished. Mr. Smith declares that the picture, the story of which was written by Robert W. Chambers, will be one of the most thrilling melodramas ever screened, although in the background will be the more serious story of a State's protective measures. Corinne Griffith, Webster Campbell and Marc MacDermott appear as the featured players.

Brigadier General F. De Forest Kamp, in command of the Third Provisional Brigade of the New York Guard, has been an active factor in the State's defensive measures and he has given co-operation to the Vitagraph officials in the making of the picture. He was greatly interested in the picture, in which he is to appear, and was particularly gratified with the way his troopers behaved before the camera.

"I am sure that as a result of our efforts to promote the success of the production, the people will get an excellent idea of the manner in which our troops are working in this State, and also of their appearance," said Gen. Kamp. "We could not present, of course, a picture of the entire New York Guard [illegible] approximately 15,000 men. They are the successors of the old National Guard which has been called into the Federal service. But the picture will show, however, a sufficient number of our new State troops to give impressive proof of what we are doing to protect the waterways, the industries, and private and public property throughout the State during the war."

General Kemp is only thirty-five years old. He entered the State service as a private and has served in practically every capacity of the military organization. He has a commanding, attractive personality and a smartness of action which the Vitagraph officials declare will be evident in the screen production.

New Blue Ribbon on February 18

Gladys Leslie and J. Frank Glendon are the featured players in "The Wooing of Princess Pat," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, announced for release the week of February 18 by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America.

This drama, which marks the second appearance of Miss Leslie as a Vitagraph star, and the first appearance of Mr. Glendon on the Blue Ribbon program, is the tragic story of a politico-convenience marriage, and is said to be one of the best efforts that William P. S. Earle, director of many artistic successes, has put forth in the three years he has been making Vitagraph productions. In addition to the featured players, there are in the cast Charles Kent, Templer Saxe, William Dunn, Bigelow Cooper and Carlton King.

The Dolly Sisters' Film Progresses

Leonce Perret, the French director, who made his American debut as director of Captain Robert Warwick in "The Silent Master," and who wrote as well as directed "The Mad Lover" and "The Accidental Honeymoon," with the same star, is now actively engaged in the production of a series of features at the Biograph studio in which the Dolly Sisters are making their bow to the motion picture public.

Following the production of the Warwick features, M. Perret wrote a story commemorating the sinking of the Lusitania and the entry of the United States into the war in "Lest We Forget."

The Dolly Sisters, appreciating the ability of M. Perret as an author and director of note, sought his services for their first joint appearance in pictures. Their first picture has already been completed, the title, cast and nature of which will be announced by the Misses Dolly shortly.

General Announces Completion of Serial

The work of assembling, titling and printing the final chapters of "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," General Film's new serial, is now well under way at the Providence studio of the Jaxon Film Corporation, the twelfth and final episode having been completed a few days ago.

Although the first episode was only released January 19, General Film announces that the early chapters have proved great drawing cards, according to reports received from exhibitors.

Terriss's London Home Is Bombed

Tom Terriss, director of Alice Joyce in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features, was completing the production of "The Song of the Soul," in which Miss Joyce is featured, when he received word that his home in England had been bombed by the Germans in their last air raid. The house, which is located in London and was partially destroyed, was formerly the property of his father, the celebrated William Terriss, and contained many interesting theatrical relics, the loss of which is irreparable.

Society Girls See "A Son of Democracy"

Under the guidance of Miss Rose Tapley, special traveling representative of Paramount, a private showing of "The Son of Democracy" was given to a large party of young society women last week at the executive offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Benjamin Chapin, who interprets the role of Lincoln and who wrote and produced the series of features, addressed the audience on incidents connected with the production of the film. The party later accepted the invitation of Adolph Zukor to visit the Fifty-sixth street studios where Billie Burke was making some scenes for "Let's Get a Divorce," and Pauline Frederick for "The Resurrection."

Big Moments, in Recruiting, Fighting and in Saving the Heroine Are Said to Be Numerous in "Over the Top," Vitagraph's Patriotic Feature in Which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey Is Featured

Louise Glaum Starts Work with Paralta

Louise Glaum has started work on the production in which she will make her debut as a Paralta star. The title of the play is "The Snapdragon" and it was written especially for Miss Glaum by Monte J. Katterjohn. It is a drama of international intrigue and unlike Miss Glaum's former productions affords the star an opportunity to display her ability in the realm of straight emotional drama rather than as a vampire.

Two more productions starring Miss Glaum have already been arranged for by the Paralta scenario department, one being the work of Thomas J. Geraghty and the other by Julian Louis Lamothe.

"Jack" O'Brien to Direct Doris Kenyon

John B. ("Jack") O'Brien has been chosen by De Luxe Pictures, Inc., to direct the production of "The Street of Seven Stars," the first picture presenting Doris Kenyon as the head of her own company. He expects to start actual work on the feature, which is to be of seven reels, on or about March 10.

Mr. O'Brien directed a number of pictures with Mary Pickford, including "Hulda from Holland," "The Foundling" and others considered among her best. He has also directed Blanche Sweet, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Alice Brady, Charlotte Walker, Emmy Whelan, Bessie Love, Louise Huff, Olive Tell, Edna Goodrich and many other stars.

Mary Pickford Writes Her Life Story

For some months Mary Pickford has been quietly engaged in writing the history of her career, and it is expected that "Mary Pickford's Own Story" will ultimately go to the public in serial form.

The date of the appearance of the first instalment as well as the name of the medium of publication have not been announced. It is planned to issue the story in book form, and arrangements are already being made to have it translated into all languages.

Gambling Crusade Theme of World Film

WORLD FILM CORPORATION will release on March 4, on its regular program, "Spurs of Sybil," with Alice Brady as the featured player. The picture deals with the subject of gambling and is regarded as particularly timely right now when New York city is in the throes of a sensational gambling crusade.

A scrutiny of past releases will bear out the contention that the value of timeliness has been always emphasized by World Pictures. Contemporaneous with the news of the fall of the Romanoff monarchy and the story of the monk Rasputin, first discredited and then spread broadcast when verified, "Rasputin, the Black Monk," was released on the World program, which picture incidentally had an extended run at the Park theatre in New York city. Coincident with the renewed interest on the part of the American public in the tragic fate of Belgium as a result of this nation's entry into the war, an Alice Brady picture was screened, called "The Maid of Belgium."

Again, in line with the organized efforts to bring the public to a realization of the importance of a rejuvenation of patriotism, World Pictures produced a screen drama revolving about the career of Alexander Hamilton, titled "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," with Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and an all-star cast. A future release in March is "The Cross Bearer," which is concerned with the career of Cardinal Mercier as the protector of the oppressed Belgian people.

"Mickey" Meets Demand for Light Comedy

AN official of the Western Import Company, in commenting upon the need of good comedy, quotes the editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in a recent editorial. He said:

"In a recent editorial, William A. Johnston, president of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, stated that comedy and society dramas were wanted of the 'best seller story' variety, and supported by heart interest, and that particularly for light dramas, there is an unusual demand; that people will want to be amused this year, and that producers would do well to bear this fact in mind.

"The foresight of the Western Import Company along these lines is clearly shown when they acquired the rights to Mabel Normand in 'Mickey,' the officials pronouncing it her masterpiece.

"There is not much about ancient history or blood shed in 'Mickey'—just a sweet charming love story about a little girl you will never forget, a story with a lot of action and 'go,' and Mabel Normand in a part that gives full scope for her beauty and charm. Her characterization of this lovable child shows a depth and an incisive appreciation of art that Miss Normand has never had a chance to show before. 'Mickey' confirms her right to be known as the greatest comedienne on the screen, also as one of the prettiest girls in America—and that means the world."

Hoffman to Distribute Rothacker Film

M. H. Hoffman, Foursquare Pictures, announces that in addition to making arrangements to distribute for the Naval Relief League a film entitled, "Our Boys and Our Boys," showing the work that is being done at the Great Lakes Relief Training Station, Illinois, he has arranged with W. M. Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, to distribute the one-reel subject, "Food Will Win the War."

Commenting upon the intention of the last named subject, Mr. Hoffman said:

"People are just beginning to awake to the fact that food is one of the vital elements in our combat with the enemy. Food and munitions and men—all are of the utmost value. Foursquare Exchanges everywhere are getting behind this film with push and vim. We will put it in every motion picture theatre in the country which has a management that has a vestige of patriotism—and that means nearly all of them."

Advance Offerings of the Programs

Forbes-Robertson Feature Ready

Arrangements Made with Producers to Exhibitors, Affiliated, to Release "The Passing of the Third Floor Back"

PRODUCERS to Exhibitors, Affiliated, will distribute "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," the Herbert Brenon production featuring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in the stellar role, according to an announcement by Mr. Brenon. This is the first Brenon production to pass through the new organization of eight independent producers with which Mr. Brenon has aligned himself.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back" was completed about one month ago at the Brenon studios. It presents Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in the role that he played so successfully on the stage and marks his American debut in the film world. The eminent English actor came to America for the sole purpose of transferring to the screen his beloved characterization of the Stranger. The supporting cast includes Molly Pearson, who created the role of the Slavey in the original London production, in which part she will again be seen; George Le Guere, Ketty Galanta, Augusta Haviland, Ricca Allen, and others.

In the screen production Mr. Brenon has somewhat elaborated on the original play, endeavoring to develop wherever possible the underlying purpose of the drama in accordance with the possibilities presented by the screen.

The Forbes-Robertson feature will probably be the first production to be released through the new plan of Producers to Exhibitors, Affiliated, which, Mr. Brenon contends, embodies in the main all that he has stood out for so uncompromisingly, namely, the elimination of the middleman and the bringing of producer and exhibitor in direct contact with each other.

Fox Completes Divorce Propaganda Film

A TELEGRAM received at the William Fox offices from the western studios at Hollywood, Cal., announces that Director Frank Lloyd has completed the divorce propaganda production on which he has been engaged for some time. The film is now en route to the Eastern offices and the present expectation is that it will be released about March 10 as the Standard Picture following the Jane and Katherine Lee feature, "American Buds."

Bertha Mann is cast in the Lloyd play as Ethel Langdon, the neglected wife of a rich man who is divorced by him and subsequently becomes Claire, the proprietor of a fashionable gambling resort. The role of John Langdon, her husband, is played by Charles Clary, and Rhea Mitchell has the part of the couple's daughter, Florence, who has been raised in the belief that her mother is dead. Bertram Grassby as Stanley Merrill is a former sweetheart of Mrs. Langdon and the unnamed corespondent in the husband's divorce case. Fred Church appears as Bruce Livingston, the district attorney, who marries Florence Langdon and who tries later to divorce her. Others who have prominent roles are Edward Davis, Willard Louis and Al Fremont.

The production, the name of which has not been announced, represents Director Lloyd's development of his own idea, he having written the scenario and had entire charge of the picture from the outset. His other recent dramas include "Les Miserables," "The Heart of a Lion" and "When a Man Sees Red." William Farnum productions, and Jewel Carmen in "The Kingdom of Love."

Mr. Lloyd now possesses one of the best known names as a director in the motion picture business. "Les Miserables," no doubt, is his best piece of work, and it seems destined to live always.

Peggy Hyland's First Picture for William Fox Is "The Debt of Honor"

Fairbanks Picture Held Over Again

A telegram received at the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that Clune's Auditorium has started on its third week's run of the Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture, "A Modern Musketeer," which was produced under the direction of Allan Dwan several months ago in the Grand Canyon. It is stated that the Auditorium will perhaps hold the feature over for four weeks.

General Film Names One-Reel Comedies

Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby are featured in a one-reel Selburn comedy, "His College Proxy," released this week by General Film Company. This is the fourth of the Selburn Comedies and is said to maintain the high standard set by the previous releases.

General Film also announces another Jaxon Comedy for release this week, the title being "Marooned." This will be followed by "Sherman Was Right," a farce of domestic life.

"The Unbeliever" Shown in Baltimore

A preliminary showing of "The Unbeliever," the new production by the Perfection Pictures Corporation, was held at the New theatre, Baltimore, February 3. All the exhibitors of the city were invited to view the film, which had attracted wide attention among the Baltimore picture men.

Marguerite Courtot has the leading role. The showing was arranged by R. Berger, manager of the Washington branch of Perfection pictures.

Mastercraft Begins First Production

Work has been started in the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, on the first Mastercraft production which will be a screen version of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The One Woman." The scenario was prepared from Mr. Dixon's book by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. The picture is being directed by Reginald Barker and the management of the production is in charge of F. Eugene Farnsworth, who has charge of the Mastercraft interests in California.

"The One Woman" is the first of the series of special productions to be issued by the Mastercraft company, which will be taken from the best of Mr. Dixon's literary works.

Triangle Arranges March Program

Schedules Eleven Pictures That Promise Unusually Diversified Bill—Olive Thomas Heads List in "An Heiress for a Day"—Roy Stewart Feature Included

ASSERTING that "diversity" is the keynote of its releases for the month of March, just as the idea has been followed out in former Triangle programs, Triangle Distributing Corporation this week announced that the new schedule includes eleven pictures. "These should in every way," said Triangle, "substantiate our policy of diversified program features."

Several well known Triangle stars will be presented in the March line-up, among them Olive Thomas, who heads the list; Roy Stewart in a Western, Myrtle Lind in "Nancy Come Home" and Dorothy Dalton in a two-reel feature.

"Heiress for Day" Opens

Olive Thomas opens the month's program in "An Heiress for a Day," a new comedy drama directed by Jack Dillon, in which she is supported by Joe King, a leading man new to Triangle colors. Miss Thomas, who is said to equal, if not surpass her clever work in "Indiscreet Corinne" and "Limousine Life," has a charming role, according to Triangle, as a little manicurist with whom fickle fortune trifles.

The second feature for the week of March 3 is "The Shoes That Danced," an adaptation of John A. Morosco's American Magazine story dealing with life on the fringe of New York's underworld, in which Pauline Starke, Wallace McDonald and Dick Rosson are featured.

A Saturday Evening Post story by Frederic Bechdolt, "The Hard Rock Breed," is the first release for the week of March 10, showing J. Barney Sherry and Jack Curtis as the two typical hard rock men, and including in the cast Margery Wilson and Jack Livingston. The other feature is "The Sea Panther," an elaborate costume picture with William Desmond in the title-role, as a swashbuckling pirate of the days of Captain Kidd. Mary Warren, who has been with the Triangle forces for some time, makes her initial appearance as leading woman, with Mr. Desmond. The Clara Morris wardrobe was utilized in providing costumes for this play.

New Two-Gun Production

For the week of March 17, Roy Stewart stars in a new Western thriller, "Faith Endurin'," by Kenneth B. Clarke—said to be the strongest vehicle for a two-gun hero in which Stewart has ever been cast. Supporting the cowboy star are Miss Fritzi Ridgeway and a carefully selected cast. "The Answer," a socialistic drama starring Alma Rubens, is the second release. Joe King enacts the role of John Warfield, Socialist, and the supporting cast also includes Claire Anderson, former Triangle-Keystone ingenue, Francis McDonald, recently seen as the highwayman in "The Gun Woman," Jean Hersholt, Wilbur Higbee and Betty Pearce.

"Nancy Comes Home," Jack Dillon's latest subject, features Myrtle Lind, late of the Triangle-Keystone bevy of beauties, and Jack Gilbert, who has recently returned to the Triangle fold. Myrtle Rishell, a newcomer at the Culver City Studios, appears as a society matron. The adventures of a young school girl, who, neglected by her society mamma, cultivates the acquaintance of the family chauffeur are divertingly portrayed in this comedy-drama.

Winifred Allen, In Triangle Plays

Pauline Starke Featured

The second release for the week of the 24th is "Innocent's Progress," a society drama featuring Pauline Starke, and numbering in the supporting body Lillian West, Jack Livingston, Charles Dorian and Curley Baldwin. Little Miss Starke, who is featured for the third time under the direction of Frank Borzage, enacts the role of a young country girl, who is driven from home by the false accusations of narrow-minded parents, and seeks her fortune in a large city.

Dorothy Dalton is presented in a two-reel feature, "The Unfaithful," released March 31, a play with a dramatic plot, which affords Miss Dalton opportunity for emotional acting.

In "The Marriage Bubble," a three-reel comedy-drama, William Desmond appears in a dual role. "Another Foolish Virgin" completes the month's program. This picture is based on W. Carey Wonderley's story of the same title, and has been adapted for the screen by Charles J. Wilson, of the Triangle staff. It is described as a society drama offering an unusual theme for a dramatic production, and included in the cast are: Margery Wilson, Texas Guinan, last seen in the title-role in "The Gun Woman"; Mildred Delfino, Francis McDonald, Lee Hill and George Pearce.

Hodkinson Announces Paralta Releases

Three new releases, carrying the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's distribution calendar for Paralta Plays up to March 15, were announced last week. The new releases are "The Turn of a Card," with J. Warren Kerrigan, which is released February 15; "Within the Cup," with Bessie Barriscale, released March 1, and "Humdrum Brown," with Henry B. Walthall, released March 15.

The fortnightly release plan would have moved all of these plays up two weeks, as the third of the Paralta Plays, with Henry B. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor," was released January 15. Owing to the shutdown of industry for the conservation of fuel, however, the printing of the second Kerrigan picture, "The Turn of a Card," was held up so that it was decided to move the whole series ahead two weeks to give the laboratory ample time for thoroughly good work. There will, however, be no further postponement, as the other pictures announced are already in work.

Pathe Devotes Attention to Short Reels

Pathe has recognized the importance of short subjects to the exhibitor by putting on its weekly program one-reel and split-reel subjects of wide diversity, with the result that their true value is now recognized by the best houses. There is now issued each week a one-reel scenic or educational, and quite often the scenic is colored in the famous Pathe color; the Hearst-Pathe News; an animated cartoon by one of the artists of the Hearst organization (two of the subjects are the Katzenjammer Kids and Happy Hooligan), generally split with an educational; and a one-reel Lloyd comedy. Every other week is issued the Argus Pictorial covering art, science and industry. Once a month comes a two-reel Toto comedy.

Pathe believes that if particular attention is paid by exhibitors to films of this class the results will more than compensate for the effort.

Judge Brown Stories Changed Around

Because of delays in the production program of the Boy City Film Company at Los Angeles, there has been a slight change in the order in which the subjects already completed are released. The new order, as announced by General Film Company, the distributor of these two-part "Stories of Youth," is: "Tad's Swimming Hole," "Marrying Off Dad," "The Preacher's Son," "Thief or Angel" and "The Accusing Toe." With this new alignment the release of the Judge Brown Stories will be continued without interruption.

Reproduces "Main Street"

Main street in Ouchgosh, the hitherto sleepy village that is expected to wake up in Fatty Arbuckle's forthcoming Paramount comedy, "The Bell Boy," is said to be a perfect replica of the usual town's chief thoroughfare.

Ann Murdock in Unusual Role

Will Show a Dazzling Array of Gowns in "My Wife," Next in Mutual's Star Production Series

"WEARING some stunning gowns of the ultra-fashionable mode, one of which is said to be the ultimate word in decollete," to quote from an advance announcement of the Mutual Film Corporation, Ann Murdock will shortly be seen in a screen production of "My Wife," which is to be released by Mutual in its star production series February 18. The picture was made under the direction of Dell Henderson at the Empire All Star studios.

"My Wife" is an adaptation of the play by Michael Morton, which had an extended run both in America and London and achieved a tremendous stage success with Billie Burke when first produced in New York. Originally it was a starring vehicle for John Drew, but in the film version the play was altered to provide a stellar part for Miss Murdock as Beatrice Hammond, who is "My Wife."

The story presents the amusing and interesting complications developed by a marriage of convenience entered into by Beatrice who, in order to comply with the conditions of a codicil in her wealthy aunt's will, in which she is left a million dollars on condition that she marry before she is eighteen, marries her guardian "in name only," with the intention of securing a divorce when her lover returns from the front.

Billie Rhodes, In Mutual-Strand Comedies

Rex MacDougal, whose work in "The Three Bears" will be recalled, has the part of the husband, and others in the cast are Amy Veness, who has appeared with Mme. Nazimova, Tyrone Power, Ethel Barrymore, and other stars; Ferdinand Gottschalk, who plays "Gibby Gore," the part he created in the stage version; Hubert Druce, Grace Carlyle, Dudley Hill and Carl Sauermann.

Mutual Weekly is released February 18 and "Miss Cinderella," a Strand comedy featuring Billie Rhodes, is scheduled for release the 19th.

Ten Paralta Plays Await Distribution

IN an announcement this week Paralta made known it has already completed and ready for release ten productions, all in seven reels. These pictures, with stars who have previously been announced, were made at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles under the supervision of Robert Brunton.

Henry B. Walthall has finished two more pictures, "Humdrum Brown" and "With Hoops of Steel." Each of these productions, it is said, presents him in widely differentiating characters.

Bessie Barriscale has five completed pictures ready for the exhibitors. They are, "Madam Who," a mystery story; "Within the Cup," an emotional drama dealing with the life of the artists in the Paris Latin Quarter and in Bohemian Washington Square, New York City; "Rose o' Paradise," an adaption of Grace Miller White's American novel; "Blindfolded," a story of the underworld, and another production yet unnamed, which has just been completed under the direction of Raymond B. West.

J. Warren Kerrigan has two pictures, a melodrama and a comedy-drama which are now booking. The first is "A Man's Man," which is a screen version of Peter B. Kyne's novel of the same title.

The comedy-drama is "The Turn of a Card," written by Frederick Chapin and directed by Oscar Apfel. Mr. Kerrigan is about to start on his third Paralta Play, a romantic comedy-drama which combines plot intrigue with light humorous touches.

While these ten features are awaiting release dates, the entire organization at the Paralta studios, including the three stars above mentioned and Louise Glaum, who has just started work on "The Snapdragon," her first production under the Paralta banner, is busy preparing other plays.

Edward Earle in Timely Comedy

Edward Earle, star of the Vitagraph comedies, has finished his work in the one-reeler, "Coals for the Fire." As may be imagined from the title, the story is built around the extraordinary coal situation that has existed in the country for many weeks past. Earle, in his role of a faithful husband, is hard put to it to get coal for his home, so he hires out as a coal wagon driver and each load of coal he is ordered to deliver he puts in his own cellar.

Triangle Reissues in Boston

It was announced this week that Boston Photoplay Company has bought the rights of the Triangle re-issues of the Triangle Distributing Corporation for New England, and all the re-issues will be on the regular Boston programs.

Harry Carey Appears as Owen Wister Hero

With "A Woman's Fool" scheduled for early release, film fans are shortly due to see Harry Carey in the role of one of Owen Wister's most popular heroes.

"A Woman's Fool" is based upon Wister's Western romance, "Lin McLean." Originally published in 1903, the book ran through several editions and, next to "The Virginian," of which it is the sequel, is considered the most popular of the Owen Wister romances.

Harry Carey is said to be excellently cast in the role of the cowpuncher. The production was directed by Jack Ford, who is responsible for all the recent Harry Carey pictures. The cast surrounding the Universal star includes M. K. Wilson, as the gentle "Virginian;" Ed Jones, as "Honey" Wiggin; Vesta Pegg, as Tommy, the Western Beau Brummel; Betty Schadek, as Katie, the "biscuit shooter;" Roy Clark, as Billy, the orphan, and Molly Malone, as Jessamine Buckner.

Chapin Second Episode Changed About

An announcement from Al Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, calls attention to a change in the release schedule of Paramount's Ben Chapin series, "The Son of Democracy." The first episode entitled, "My Mother," will be released February 11 as originally announced. The second offering, however, will be "A Call to Arms," in place of "My Father." The second release will be presented to the public commencing February 18. The third offering will be "My Father," on February 25.

The first three releases as mentioned above, are now finished and have already been shipped to the various exchanges throughout the country.

"Broadway Bill" Has Northern Setting

"Broadway Bill" is the title of Harold Lockwood's newest Metro all-star series production, released February 11. The scenes are laid in northern Maine. A characteristic Metro cast appears in Mr. Lockwood's support, including Martha Mansfield, Stanton Heck, William Clifford, Bert Starkey, Cornish Beck, W. W. Black, Raymond C. Hadley and Blanche Davenport. The story was written by Fred J. Balshofer, who also directed its production.

Fox-Lehrman Satire on Human Nature

Another of the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine comedies will be released February 17. It is titled "Are Married Policemen Safe?" and is said to be a satire on human nature as evidenced in the administration of justice. A crusade against women wearing clothes which are more abbreviated than the law allows results in policemen and jurists being captivated by their captives. A railroad train running straight through a station is one of the incidents of the action.

Goldwin's Whim Girl, Mae Marsh, Is Said to Add Even Another Enigmatical Twist to Her Personality In "The Beloved Traitor"

Lowry Film Claims Good Record

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces that up to the close of the first week in February, Ira M. Lowry's production of "For the Freedom of the World," which is released by Goldwyn as a special, had been played to capacity business by more than a thousand exhibitors in the United States and Canada. Moreover, according to Goldwyn, new contracts are coming in at the rate of more than 100 a day, many exhibitors who played to capacity business calling for repeat dates.

Goldwyn also states that "The Manxman" has set new records for special production bookings, and that business in the smaller towns is correspondingly as great as that recorded in the larger centers.

"Song of Songs" February Artcraft

The initial offering for February under the Artcraft banner is Elsie Ferguson's newest screen production, "The Song of Songs." The screen adaptation was made by Charles Maigne, and the production was directed by Joseph Kaufman. The cast includes Cecil Fletcher, Craufurd Kent, Frank Losee, Robert Cummings, Corinne Uzell, Gertrude Berkeley and Henry Leone.

The release date is February 11.

Underworld Seen in New Triangle Drama

In "The Shoes That Danced," the Triangle drama scheduled for the week of March 3, many angles of life on the fringe of New York's underworld are presented. The play has been adapted from the magazine story by John A. Moroso. Pictures of gang killings, views of corners on the East Side and gambling and cabaret scenes have been reproduced. Wallace McDonald and Pauline Stark are the featured players, and the supporting cast includes Dick Rosson, Anna Dodge, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Anne Kromon, Edward Brady and William Dyer. Frank Borzage has the direction.

Four New Goldwyns Announced

News That a Second Mary Garden Production Is Completed, Expected To Be a Surprise for Goldwyn Exhibitors

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION, making public the names of four new productions for immediate release, will no doubt take exhibitors by surprise with the announcement that it has a second Mary Garden production fully completed and includes this among its regular releases at the same price that Goldwyn exhibitors pay for all other Goldwyn Pictures.

The title of Miss Garden's second picture is "The Splendid Sinner," from an original story by Kate Jordan—a melodramatic society story.

The next four Goldwyn releases following Madge Kennedy in "Our Little Wife," which has just been released throughout the world, are:

February 24, Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor," from the successful novel of the same name by Frank L. Packard; March 10, Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below," by Elaine Sterne; March 24, Madge Kennedy in "A Dangerous Game," by Roy Somerville; April 7, Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner," by Kate Jordan.

"The Beloved Traitor," Mae Marsh's next production, is claimed to rank with "Polly of the Circus" and "Cinderella Man" in the opportunities it gives this star. It is exploited by Goldwyn as being "the story of the good girl who whipped a vampire." "The Floor Below," Mabel Normand's second Goldwyn Picture, is also a mystery story of a different type, and besides being packed with dramatic action and incident, it is said to contain a tremendous amount of fun, laughter and pathos, with a corking love story thrown in for good measure. To date Madge Kennedy's screen productions have been farce comedies, but "A Dangerous Game" is an entirely different type of dramatic picture—a type of role that Miss Kennedy has never had before, either on the stage or screen.

Last Fall, while "Thais" was still being assembled and arranged for showing, Mary Garden plunged into the making of her second Goldwyn picture. Not more than one hundred persons in the entire industry—and most of those were on the Goldwyn pay-roll—knew that Miss Garden was to make a second Goldwyn production so quickly. This second picture was completed even in advance of the release of "Thais," and has been held back as a surprise for Goldwyn customers. The production was directed by Edwin Carewe.

In addition to having these next four pictures complete and ready for shipment to all of its branches throughout the world, Goldwyn also has completed three more releases, these being the release for the third Sunday in April and the two releases for the month of May.

Buffalo Theatre Hits High Mark

Mutual Film Corporation this week announced that Keith's theatre in Buffalo has hit a high mark with the series of twelve Mutual-Chaplin comedies. The entire series, it is said, has been repeated eight times in the Buffalo house, a total of ninety-six runs from twelve releases.

Figures from one territory, Mutual says, show that fourteen theatres have run the whole series of Mutual-Chaplins an average of thirty-four times, nearly three times for each release.

MacLane Picture Opens in the Loop

Mary MacLane's "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," opened Sunday, February 3, for an indefinite run in The Band Box, Chicago.

Since the picture's premiere in the Orchestra Hall, this George K. Spoor Ultra feature has been widely advertised and commented on, and early reports from the Band Box indicate that the picture is drawing splendid patronage.

"Gripping" Is the Term Used In Describing Moments In "Keith of the Border," a Triangle Play, With Norbert Gills and Josie Sedgwick

Roy Stewart in Triangle "Border" Picture

AS one of its releases for the week of February 17 Triangle offers "Keith of the Border," a picturization of Randall Parrish's story of the same name. Roy Stewart, Triangle's cowboy star, is presented in the leading role, which gives him opportunity to display his horsemanship and fistic prowess. He appears as a Texas Ranger, who routs the notorious leader of the "wolves" and rescues the Southern girl whom the bandit has kidnapped. Josie Sedgwick is given her first opportunity in a dual role, playing the part of a typical daughter of the South, as well as that of a dancing girl.

Director Cliff Smith is said to have secured unusually good atmosphere for this picture and some of the scenes have the picturesque Mohave desert as background. The trick photography, necessitated by the dual role Miss Sedgwick plays, is considered remarkable, and in the closing scene she is seen clasped in her own arms. Several spectacular feats of horsemanship are worthy of comment. An ancient prairie schooner, surrounded by many historical associations, was used by Triangle and is seen ablaze on the prairie.

The second Triangle release of the week is "From Two to Six," featuring Winifred Allen, and presents a theme dealing with the adventures of the heroine in trailing a female German spy. Many of the cast supporting Miss Allen have appeared on the legitimate stage, among them being Robert Fisher, Forrest Robinson, Earl Fox, Reilly Hatch, Clarence Handysides and Margaret Greene. The production was directed by Albert Parker under the supervision of Allen Dwan.

The Keystone comedy, released the week of February 17 is "His Double Life" and features Ray Griffith, Claire Anderson and Dorothy Hagar. "Their Undercover Capers" and "A Full Dress Fizzle" are the week's one-reel Triangle Komedies.

Fox Juvenile Stars Support Tom Mix

"Six Shooter Andy," starring Tom Mix, is announced as one of the William Fox March releases. The cast includes several of the children who had roles in "Jack and the Beanstalk" and similar Fox productions, among the juvenile stars being Georgie Stone, Virginia Lee Corbin, Violet Radcliffe, Buddie Messinger, Lewis Sargent, Raymond Lee, Beulah Burns and Vivian Plank.

Double Exposure Kiss by Gladys Brockwell

Photography of a decidedly unusual nature, a feature of which is a double exposure kiss, is claimed for "The Moral Law," a William Fox Special Feature released February 17, starring Gladys Brockwell. Miss Brockwell has the dual role of half-sisters of very dissimilar dispositions and decidedly different conditions of upbringing. The two appear on the screen at the same time on numerous occasions. The kissing takes place when the two girls meet in South America and is declared to be done with such exactness as to register perfectly and realistically.

Changes in Schedule of Fox Specials

Three changes in the schedule of Fox Special Features releases were announced last week. The Tom Mix production, "Six-Shooter Andy," originally set for February 24 and later moved along to March 3, has been restored to its original place on the calendar. The March 3 release will be "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes," in which Jewel Carmen is the star. This had been set for February 24 and now changes places with the Mix drama.

The third change is the elimination from the present schedule of a George Walsh comedy, titled "The Kid Is Clever," and set tentatively for March 31 release. There are no changes in the other March releases. "The Debt of Honor," Peggy Hyland's first picture for Fox, will be available March 10; "Woman and the Law," an R. A. Walsh production having an all-star cast, March 17, and Virginia Pearson's drama, "A Daughter of France," March 24.

Southern House Uses Mutual Films

Walter Crosby, resident manager of the Byers theatre, the Fort Worth house of the Interstate Amusement Company, is said to be pleased over the quality of Mutual productions which have been showing on his screen.

"I can only speak the highest of your pictures," he said in a letter. "Everything that goes to make a feature is embodied in your film, and I dare say they are second best to none. In fact, they are so far ahead of anything yet shown in this city, I feel that I am giving my patrons the cream of motion pictures. I dare say again that I believe the Byers theatre in Fort Worth is now showing the greatest program for the money in the State of Texas."

Metro-Drew Comedy at Food Meetings

Twenty-seven food conservation meetings recently have made use of the Metro-Drew picture, "The Patriot," starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. "The Patriot" is said to be a real "Hoover" picture, which is credited by Food Administrator Hoover as being of the utmost importance in interesting the households of America in this important subject.

One of the largest meetings, at which "The Patriot" was used as the climax of the program, was the recent food conservation meeting of the Patriotic Food League at the Century theatre, New York. A Power projecting machine was installed in the theatre for the express purpose of showing "The Patriot."

Draws Like a Magnet

Agnes Ayres, co-star with Edward Earle in Vitagraph Comedies, drew the folk in the vicinity of her home town, Carbondale, Ill., into the local theatre in great numbers at a recent showing of "His Wife Got All the Credit."

"The Woman Between Friends" Ready

ALICE JOYCE'S first feature of the new year, "The Woman Between Friends," is announced for release February 11 by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. This Blue Ribbon feature, Mr. Smith says, is one of the most pretentious five-reel subjects put forth in many months and one of the strongest dramas in which Miss Joyce ever has appeared. The play was adapted from the Robert W. Chambers novel, "Between Friends," and was produced under the direction of Tom Terriss. Marc MacDermott appears opposite Miss Joyce in the principal male role and the cast includes among others "Mother" Mary Maurice and Robert Walker.

"The Woman Between Friends" was several months in the making and is said to be one of the most expensive five-reel pictures ever produced by Vitagraph. To start with, the rights to the Chambers story are said to have cost in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars, and for one episode, a scene of revelry during the carnival at Nice, France, more than five hundred persons were employed. Fresh flowers costing $1,000 were used in this scene, and the set is declared to be one of the richest obtainable.

Many of the scenes carrying the action in the South of France are actual reproductions, made under the direction of Mr. Terriss, who was a regular visitor to Nice during the carnival period.

It is in this production that Alice Joyce portrays for the first time since her advent into motion pictures a role that was hers in real life—that of a model.

President Smith declares without equivocation that in "The Woman Between Friends" Miss Joyce appears more beautiful than in any picture she ever made. In the early part of the production she is a demure flower girl in Nice, later is transported to Paris as a sculptor's model and there, as the object of the love of two boyhood friends, is the pivot on which revolves a drama of great intensity.

"The Thing We Love" Released by Paramount

Paramount will present Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams in its next release, "The Thing We Love," a picturization by Harvey Thew, of the story by H. B. and M. G. Daniel. The story sounds a patriotic note, and is said to embody a series of sensational incidents.

Mr. Reid and Miss Williams were the co-stars of "Big Timber," a previous Paramount release. The supporting cast includes Tully Marshall, Mayme Kelso, Charles Ogle and Billy Elmer. Lou Tellegen directed the production.

Barclay Comedy Scheduled

"Check Your Hat, Sir?" a one-reel Essanay comedy, featuring the comedian, Don Barclay, has been completed, and will be released on the General Film program February 16.

"House of Glass" Comes Soon

Select Will Present Clara Kimball Young in Prison Garb—Star Begins New Feature with Costly Gowns

SELECT PICTURES this week announced that Clara Kimball Young in prison garb is the novel sight which will greet this screen star's many admirers when the "House of Glass" is released by Select Pictures Corporation within the next few weeks.

Miss Young has created many roles during her life on the screen, but it remained for "The House of Glass" to present her in stripes and lock step—or the modern equivalent which present-day prison reform has substituted for those time-honored earmarks of the jail bird.

In "The House of Glass," the first view of the screen version of which was had by Select officials during the last few days, Miss Young plays the part of a young girl who, believing herself on the threshold of a happy marriage, finds herself landed in the Tombs so charged with complicity in a major robbery that proof of her innocence is impossible. It is while serving the resultant prison term that Miss Young—discarding for once the habiliments in which she has made so many screen pictures—appears in one reel in the drab garb of a Blackwell's Island inmate. It is said to be a novel view of Clara Kimball Young.

The cutting of "The House of Glass"—which is a screen version following closely the story of the play of the same name by Max Marcin—is progressing rapidly under the close attention of Miss Young and Emile Chautard, who directed the piece.

Meanwhile, however, the star is engrossed in the preparations for her next Select production, a screen version of Elinor Glyn's serial, "The Reason Why." The gowns for this production, which is to be most lavish from a sartorial point of view, are now being made.

"The House of Glass," Through Select, Presents Clara Kimball Young As a Prison Inmate

"The Reason Why" will be directed by Robert G. Vignola, and Louis Physioc will do the camera work. The actual filming of the piece has begun in the New Rochelle studios.

Comedy Dominates Universal New Program

"WILD WOMEN," a five-reel feature on the order of the old Harry Carey subject, "Love's Lariat," is Universal's lead off card in the program scheduled for release during the week of February 25. It tells the story of the adventures which befall Cheyenne Harry and his pardners, following a wild and woolly celebration of the former's victory at a Rodeo. In the cast surrounding Harry Carey are Molly Malone, Martha Mattox, Vesta Pegg and Edward Jones.

"Watch Your Watch" is the Nestor comedy for the week. It features Eileen Sedgewick and Ernie Shields, who have appeared in many Universal productions. The plot revolves about the efforts of a girl to keep from her fiance the knowledge that another admirer has presented her with a watch. This comedy is said to be one of the most amusing released under the Nestor brand.

The L-KO Komedy is entitled "Ambrose, the Lion Hearted," and features Mack Swain. Swain was identified in former days with the Keystone organization. He has the role of an enormously powerful, but tender-hearted, blacksmith, who takes it upon himself to right the wrongs inflicted upon the heroine by a black-hearted "villun." This comedy is in two reels.

The serials for the week include Episode 14 of "The Mystery Ship," and Episode 4 of "The Bull's Eye." In the first, "The Masked Riders," the Man of Mystery continues to exert his efforts on behalf of Betty Lee, as enacted by Neva Gerber and Miles Gaston, as portrayed by Ben Wilson. As in previous episodes of this powerful serial, a number of unusual photographic effects are introduced. "Still in the Ring" is the title of the fourth "Bull's Eye" episode. In it, Cody is seen following up his pursuit of Sweeney.

The Universal Animated Weekly, the Universal Current Events and the Universal Screen Magazine are also included in the week's program. A one-reel special is a Finley Nature Study Subject entitled "Rambles With a Naturalist." A naturalist takes a party of children on a ramble and shows them through a telescope the things they cannot see with the naked eye. First comes the life of a frog from the egg stage to the development of the full grown frog. Other subjects are the spotted sand piper and the baby night hawk, commonly known as the bullbat.

Film Specialties

Brown, Camera Chief of Screen Telegram

JOHN R. FREULER, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has announced the appointment of Harold P. Brown as chief of the camera staff of Screen Telegram, Mutual's new twice-a-week news reel.

Mr. Brown is a news camera operator of several years' experience. He started turning a crank on news subjects in Minneapolis after he had worked on many of the large newspapers of the Middle West as a photographer. He was for a time the editor of the Northwest Weekly, a moving picture news reel distributed throughout the northwestern states.

He joined the forces of the Hearst International Film Service two years ago, in Chicago, and during that period has contributed negatives of excellent quality to the various Hearst news films and the Hearst-Pathe News.

Some of Mr. Brown's most notable work was done along the Mexican border and in the interior of Mexico at the time of the Pershing Expedition into the southern republic. He made some remarkable moving pictures of the Pershing troops in Mexico from the observer's seat of an army aeroplane. While on the border Mr. Brown obtained exclusive pictures of the family of Francisco Villa, at the time the noted Mexican bandit was being hunted by United States troops.

Mr. Brown will assist Blaine McGrath, editor of the Screen Telegram, in the direction of the staff cameramen who contribute to the make-up of the news reel.

Screen Magazine Shows War Bread

Universal Screen Magazine announces for a forthcoming number scenes showing May Irwin, the stage comedienne, making "war bread." She follows the Government receipt for this new kind of bread, and shows clearly on the screen how "it is done."

The U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Is Distributing "The Belgian," Sidney Olcott's Production

Something New in Song and Picture

The resourceful Cohn family, of Universal Weekly fame, is responsible for what looks like an extremely popular and profitable novelty, the Popular Song Picture.

Here's the idea. A thread of story, or a series of scenes paralleling in sentiment or action the words of one of our popular songs, appears on the screen. At the same time the song itself is sung by someone off the stage. The novelty and cleverness consist in the fact that the film is so timed that the action fits the words to a second.

As there is nothing like getting your audience to take part in the performance, all are invited to join in the chorus, the words of which stand on the screen, while below them, through the means of double printing, actions in the spirit of the stanza itself are enacted.

Young Harry Cohn, who conceived the idea and directed the pictures, is to be congratulated on his enterprise and the cleverness with which he has carried it out.

Arrangements are in progress to circuit these Song Pictures, with an artist to furnish the musical accompaniment.

Draft Troops in New Mutual Weekly

In No. 7 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, released February 10, the 308th Infantry, National Army, is shown in its march, February 4, down Fifth avenue, New York. Five months ago these soldiers were civilians, but are now trained to the point of near-perfection.

Scenes in this number from the war zone show how Pershing's men were taught to handle big guns.

Other foreign views show how the French and Italian soldiers have stopped the Prussians on the Piave River; the training of war dogs at the front; and ex-Premier Caillaux, who conspired to overthrow France, and his wife, who gained unwarranted sympathy when she killed the editor of Figaro, one of the first to accuse Caillaux of villainy.

Bray Helps Train U. S. Soldiers

The Bray Studios, Inc, which for some time past has been doing considerable work for the United States Government, have been assigned to produce for training purposes in nearly all branches of the service a series of animated diagrammatic drawings, through which the Government expects to facilitate training and make clear many points which the screen is best adapted to illustrate.

J. F. Leventhal, of the Bray Studios, has been assigned to Fort Sill, Okla., where he is gathering data for coming productions. The present work deals with artillery, and it is the belief of the Government that by means of this work the theory of big-gun fire can be made so clear that the period of training can be materially reduced.

WHAT THE NEWS WEEKLIES OFFER

Each company that produces a news weekly pays due respect to the entry of the British and French troops into Jerusalem, a picturesque and a historically interesting sight. Another international aspect of the Great War is shown by Mutual Weekly, No. 6, and Universal Animated Weekly, No. 10, in pictures showing the Japanese fleet maneuvering in the Mediterranean in search of the deadly U-boat. Weekly No. 10 and Hearst-Pathe News, No. 11, reflect the spirit of winter in picturing the astounding feats of expert ski-jumpers, who perform the almost impossible without even twisting a toe. And an event of almost national significance, the farewell of well-loved "Bill" Snyder, chief attendant at the Bronx Zoo, is the occasion of very amusing snapshots in Universal Current Events, No. 39, and Hearst-Pathe News, No. 11.

Mutual Weekly, No. 6, is notable for two unusual "shots," the pulling down of a church steeple for the sake of the copper that sheathes it, and the launching of one of our new ships built in 60 days. As it slides off the ways, the first girder of a new keel is lowered in place, followed by a panorama of the yards which shows a battalion of ships in process of completion.

Universal Animated Weekly, No. 10, has an interesting and instructive subject in the wreck of the Omaha flier, where steel cars save the lives of all but four passengers. The cars, absolutely overturned, are nevertheless practically undamaged. The number of the Weekly adds a bit of spice by "speeding up" New York far beyond that lively burg's fastest speed.

Hearst-Pathe News, No. 11, starts with a fine shot of a wagon train reminiscent of the 40's, but as serviceable to-day as it was in the time before the motor truck was even dreamed of. Views of the erstwhile "Vaterland," now rechristened and carrying our troops abroad, and glimpses of happy British soldiers exchanged from a German prison camp, are pleasant topics in this reel, which rises to a climax in a remarkable set of pictures taken at Guatemala City during the recent volcanic explosion.

C. DE L. B.

WHERE SEA BIRDS SWARM

Away off to the surf-drenched shores of the northwest coast, Mr. Finley, in the fifth issue of his Nature Studies (Universal), carries us and introduces us to islands where sea gulls swarm like snow flakes, and the murres are so tame, never having been harmed by man, that they submit to stroking like a cat.

Mr. Finley was fortunate in being able to get very near the birds and has obtained interesting and amusing close-ups of cormorants with their young, of the gulf chick, spotted over with black and white polka dots, and of a baby murre painfully pecking its way out of the shell. The creature reaches this world in a state of collapse, but "gets there just the same." Artistic title cards and clever wording add to the interest and pleasure evoked by the subject.

Closing the reel is a short length, "Gems of the Adriatic," giving views of the beautiful country along the Dalmatian coast, with its reminders of past Roman greatness.

FISHERS AND NETS

Every visitor to the Metropolitan Museum, and many who know it only by reproductions of its paintings, recalls the magnificent picture by the Spanish artist Sorolla, showing men and horses tugging at the heavy net which must be drawn ashore. In his fourth release, "Salmon Fishery" (Universal), Mr. Finley of the Oregon Fish and Game Commission presents views of actual scenes on the Pacific coast astonishingly like the painting, and quite as beautiful. The great seine net, which requires twenty-one men and nineteen teams of horses for its handling, is only one of the methods employed to catch the valuable salmon. Mr. Finley shows and explains the gill-net, the trap-net, and the salmon wheel, presents many views of fishermen at work along the shore, and contributes through well-written titles, interesting information on this important and profitable industry.

A short length showing the Drum Dancers of Java completes the reel.

NATURE STAGE-MANAGER

Taking us with him over the high trail that furnishes him with so many humorous adventures, which include a combined horse-and-land slide that would daunt many an exper rider, Robert C. Bruce, in his current release, "Where the Clouds Come From" (Educational Films Corporation), brings us to a lofty peak around whose summit vast masses of clouds stream, and pile up, and dissolve into thin mist in a "transformation scene" staged with a grandeur impossible to the cleverest human skill. Such a scenic, presented with fitting musical accompaniment, lends unique distinction to a program planned for audiences of exacting standards.

Short Subjects in Review

Peculiar Pets in Bray Pictographs

Particular people have peculiar pets, and it is these people and their pets that the Bray Studios, Inc., have sought out in the 106th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "the magazine on the screen." Royal Dixon, author and naturalist, maintains an aviary in New York City, high up in one of the towering apartment buildings.

"Magic for Home Use" shows how to produce a hundred yards or so of varicolored streamers, a dozen or more balls, a rabbit and a cannon ball out of an apparently empty silk hat. The magician shows clearly how the tricks are performed and no doubt every small boy after seeing this series will become an accomplished magician.

Martin Johnson Gets Some Scenics

Martin Johnson, of 300 West Forty-ninth street, New York, writes MOTION PICTURE NEWS from Sydney, N. S. W., that he expects to return to the States about the first of March with 40,000 feet of South Sea film. Mr. Johnson is president of the Martin Johnson Film Company, Inc.

BIRDS AS LIFE SAVERS

The intimate knowledge of birds possessed by Royal Dixon, lover and student of nature's secrets, is being put to a patriotic use, as shown in Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 105. Birds are more susceptible to poison gas than are humans, and are being raised in large numbers for service as indicators of danger in the trenches. However, as the song of the male bird would betray the army's presence to the enemy, only female birds are raised for the purpose. Mr. Dixon has discovered a surprising test to discover the sex of the bird before it is hatched, and is shown applying it, as well as playing in loving intimacy with his feathered friends.

One of the resourceful women who has blazed her own path is Mrs. Ida Kuhl Smith, who utilizes the long, strong needle of the pine as material for fashioning beautiful baskets, trays, and the like. Mrs. Smith has been so successful that she is establishing schools all over the country to teach the new art, which, as illustrated in the Pictograph, is easy to acquire and yields most artistic results.

Mr. Hereward Carrington continues to show us "how it is done" by the professional magician, while "Goodrich Dirt" tries a trick of his own to supplement the meat supply. The bear, however, who is to furnish the steaks and chops, is no believer in non-resistance and uses his pugilistic skill to good advantage.

250,000,000 POUNDS OF MUTTON FROM UNCLE SAM

The United States Department of Agriculture contributes a most interesting film to the fifty-ninth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine showing how the government is offering the hospitality of grazing land to 12,000,000 sheep, thereby increasing the meat supply by 250,000,000 pounds and adding vast stores to much needed wool. The work of the dogs in rounding up a big herd, the clever device for separating the ewes from the lambs, and the quick eye work of the men who literally "count sheep going through a gate" are points to be noted.

Incidents in the life of an artilleryman, the making of a delicious cheese souffle, which is an excellent substitute for meat, and the strange performances of a "human bowknot," whose body seems made of gelatine and gutta percha, are other features of the issue. "Miracles in Mud," by Willie Hopkins, supplies the concluding element of humor.

SUPERB IN LIGHT AND SHADOW

Notable for its remarkably beautiful and startling light effects is Universal's scenic, released February 18, "Mount Hood," photographed by William L. Finley, of the Oregon Fish and Game Commission. Pictures taken during the ascent to the eleven-thousand-foot summit, the last thousand feet of which is a sheer climb over the snow, disclose range after range of dark and distant peaks against which gleams the glistening summit of Mt. Jefferson, like a tip of foam on the bosom of a stormy sea.

In the midst of this stupendous grandeur live the Forest Rangers, whose task it is to guard against insidious forest fires. The tiny cabin, with its observation tower, resting on the very summit of Mount Hood, is built by them, each man, as we see, climbing up the final trail with a hundred-pound plank on his back.

Pictures taken at the mountain's base, where the Columbia River rushes through its narrow gorge to the sea, form a fine conclusion to an impressive and interesting reel.

FAIR TIME DOINGS IN PIKE COUNTY

Far away in the dim, prim ages of a Puritan past is the County Fair of quince preserve and crazy quilt contests, and a decorous brush between the local trotters. At least, so it seems, when one looks at "The Bull Thrower," from the camera of Robert C. Bruce, and released by the Educational Films Corporation. The corral discloses not one single "hay-burner," being a mass of big and little automobiles, but the equines have their day in the marvelous stunts performed by them and their riders when the party is on. There are rapid relay races, and a four-horse team effect in best Roman style. And for a good, exciting wind-up there is that gentle Western pastime known (literally) as "throwing the bull." You know the trick, of course. The rider runs the bull against the fence, leaps from his horse, seizes the creature around the neck, and throws him. Then he raises one hand, still holding the bull down, just to show how easy it is—if you know how. You need not bother to classify this picture. Just book it for "the fun of it." There will be plenty, and lots of laughs.

C. DE L. B.

THE BEAUTY OF ANCIENT FRANCE

The beauty and historic interest of Central France is well shown in the Pathe split reel, "Around Central Auvergne," and "Clermand-Ferrand," an unusually attractive scenic in color.

The first subject is characterized by views of the lovely Vezere Valley, with its high-perched castles, some of them only ruins, and the curious caves which pit the face of its lofty walls, inhabited in remote antiquity by a race now vanished. Not so far removed in structure are the modern dwellings nestling like toy houses under the eaves of the huge cliffs.

Clermand-Ferrand presents a prosperous modern town, pleasant to view, and in interesting contrast to the very ancient village of Montferrand which adjoins it. Here the houses almost meet over the narrow, winding streets and the family washing is brought on ox carts that might well have come out of Homer's Odyssey.

ASPHALT

That asphalt really comes from a lake in Trinidad, which constantly renews itself, is amply proven by Argus Pictorial No. 8 (Pathe Exchange) wherein are views taken at the lake itself. The hard, gumlike substance is dug out in chunks like peat, melted and refined in a crude method that seems sufficient for the purpose, and shipped in barrels for paving purposes. A man walking on the surface of the softer portion of the so-called lake leaves no trace, as the asphalt is seen to rise immediately and fill up the depressions.

Views on a Peruvian sheep ranch, 16,000 feet above the sea, offer interesting pictures of the herding and shearing of the wool bearers. A study of the beaver in his native haunt shows him detecting a break in his dam, and the vigorous and powerful methods he employs to remedy the defect.

Through the microscope we glimpse those minute forms of life inhabiting a drop of water, which when thrown on the screen in dimensions measured by feet, appear as the ferocious monsters they really are.

"Films Are Selling Too High"

W. E. Shallenberger Makes the Assertion and Adds That Producer Who Sells at Inflated Prices Is Murdering Business

THE motion picture producer who sells his product to the buyer at inflated prices is not only murdering his own organization, but he is forcing the buyer into film suicide, according to W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, and one of the best-known independent film men in the country.

According to Dr. Shallenberger, the majority of the film buyers throughout the country are paying too much for their pictures and all of them are overbuying. "The trouble," said he, "can be traced directly to the producer and the inflated prices he has been placing on his negative. The producer comes into the market heralding the fact that his picture cost him so many thousands of dollars to make. This is the cream of his selling talk, the amount of money he has spent in completing the film and the larger he can make this amount the more pleased he is. He places an exorbitant price on the picture and expects to make a handsome profit for himself. The point is he doesn't. He blankets himself.

"If the producer would be satisfied with selling his picture at a fair and equitable profit the entire business would be on a much better basis and there would be less failures reported in the producing field, but he isn't. Too large a number of producers are trying to squeeze every penny they can from every picture they make and in this squeezing process they are not only murdering their own organization, but are forcing the buyer to commit film suicide.

"The buyers today are paying too much for their pictures. This is apparent to anyone who watches film conditions throughout the country intelligently. There is too much competition and too much overbuying, and because of this and the inflated prices, buyers are not only killing themselves off, but are clogging the industry.

"It is possible today to manufacture, sell and exhibit pictures so that everyone along the line will make his fair share of the profits. That this doesn't happen more frequently is due to the inflation of prices. Economic conditions, due to the war in general and the motion picture industry in particular, is bringing about a new state of things which will automatically eliminate the man who inflates prices.

"The intelligent buyer who knows what pictures to buy and when to buy them, and who isn't forced to pay exorbitant prices, has an opportunity to make a 'turnover' and get his second picture from the profits he made with the first one.

"Conditions will readjust themselves, but in the meantime, more intelligent attention will have to be given to prices placed on pictures if the industry is to be kept on an even keel."

Titan Company Is Formed in Spokane

THE Titan Feature Photo Play Company, with Ernest Shipman as New York representative, has been formed in Spokane, Wash., for the purpose of producing state rights features. It is the intention, according to announcements from Mr. Shipman's office this week, to make at least six super-pictures a year.

"The company," reads the announcement, "is capitalized at $500,000, and the organization contract says: 'It is further agreed that not a move will be made towards production, until the entire $500,000 is fully subscribed and paid into the treasury.'"

Present at the first meeting were J. Don Alexander of the Alexander Electric Co., president; Eugene De Smeth, city engineer of Spokane, vice-president; R. E. Musser, of the Scotch chain of woolen mills, treasurer; H. G. Twomley, attorney, secretary; C. L. Mayo, financier, trustee, and many others active in the business life of Spokane.

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars were paid in by voluntary subscription at this meeting, and C. L. Mayo, who is official underwriter for the corporation, states that the entire stock issue will be oversubscribed by April 1.

The plans for discerning the market needs—the co-operative methods to be inaugurated between the Titan Company and the state rights buyers—and the ultimate terms of release will be the subject of a later announcement.

A board of advisers will be selected from among the film buyers and exploiters, who will act in an advisory capacity in the choosing of stories, stars and directors, thereby largely influencing the nature of the product which they will be handling at a later date. Ernest Shipman will serve as chairman of this board and supervise the advertising methods of the Titan Company.

A plan is already under way whereby the first release will be shown simultaneously in seven or more of the world's most important capitals

Mollie King, Star In Ivan's Production, "Human Clay"

Ivan Comments Upon Miss Mollie King

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., this week in an announcement concerning "Human Clay" and its star, Mollie King, said: "Miss King, who stars in 'Human Clay,' is the youngest actress who has ever played the lead in a feature of this kind. Despite the fact that she is one of the most popular artists and has established what can easily be called world-wide fame through the serial pictures in which she has appeared as the lead, it was not expected that 'Human Clay,' the first complete big feature starring her, would prove as great a drawing power as it does.

"It seems but only just that Mollie King get the reward due to her untiring efforts. When we realize that she is not quite twenty and has been on the stage for eighteen years, one can well look upon her as a seasoned actress. From very babyhood she breathed the atmosphere of the stage, and when motion pictures came into their own she took the position that is properly her own. It is hard work that counts with Mollie King. 'Temperament,' says the star of 'Human Clay,' 'has no place in moving picture work. Generally we are so busy that we have no time for foolishness. There are many people who have an idea that posing for the pictures is all pleasure and no work. If I were not so interested in my work that I considered it play I would say that just the reverse is true. Working for the motion pictures is all work and very little play. Frequently we have worked from sunrise and sunset and were then really ready to retire."

Entire United States Is Sold for "The Whip"

Hiller and Wilk announce the sale of the Maurice Tourneur photoplay, "The Whip," in Louisiana and Mississippi to the True Film Company of Dallas, Texas. The success of the True Film Company's exploitation of "The Whip" in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas has caused their decision to go beyond their normal territory and secure Louisiana and Mississippi.

With this sale Hiller and Wilk can announce that all the territory in the United States has been sold for "The Whip," also the majority of foreign territory.

The following is the first complete list of "The Whip" buyers in the United States: New England states, American Feature Film Company of Boston, Mass.; New York, Marcus Loew; Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, J. Frank Hatch of Newark, N. J.; Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and North Carolina, Sidney B. Lust, Inc., of Washington, D. C.; New Jersey, Civilization Company of Newark, N. J.; Michigan, Dawn Masterplay Company of Detroit, Mich.; Indiana, H. Lieber Company of Indianapolis, Ind.; Kentucky and Tennessee, Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky.; Georgia, Florida and Alabama, Special Features Company of Knoxville, Tenn.; Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, True Film Company of Dallas, Texas; Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, Yale Photoplays of Kansas City, Mo.; Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin, Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn.; Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, De Luxe Features of Seattle, Wash.; California, Nevada and Arizona, All Star Feature Distributors of San Francisco, Calif.; Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico, Supreme Photoplays Corporation of Denver, Col.

Information Committee Sees Serial

Saturday, January 26, the first three episodes of The Whartons' new serial photodrama, "The Eagle's Eye," for which Chief Flynn is standing sponsor, were run before the Committee on Public Information in Washington and were passed. The episodes were shown exactly as they were run at the Strand theatre January 18.

The reels were taken to Washington by Earle J. Hudson and Courtney Ryley Cooper, representing the Wharton Releasing Corporation. While the films were in the hands of the Committee on Public Information they arranged to present the episodes before the National Press Club.

"Crucible of Life" to Show at Upton

"The Crucible of Life," General Enterprises, Inc., latest offering on the independent market, will be shown at Camp Upton under the supervision of Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, who are handling the exploitation of this and other features of General Enterprises. A showing has been arranged also for the benefit of the prisoners at Sing Sing.

W. H. Productions Claims Record

In Three Months Has Disposed of Its Series of Fifteen Hart Re-Issues for the Entire United States

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY has been in business three months, and during this period claims to have established the most remarkable record of selling in the history of the industry, having disposed of the series of fifteen William S. Hart two-reel subjects for the entire United States, the three William S. Hart super-features, viz.; "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," and the series of twenty-eight specially selected Mack Sennett Keystone comedies for most of the territory.

These sales, in the face of all the calamity-howling that has been going on in the industry, W. H. Productions Company maintains, demonstrates the fact that the independent market is a permanent and proper one to solve the difficulties of the industry's disposition of its best product.

"The men who form the personnel of W. H. Productions Company are experienced distributors," says a statement issued from the company's office, "and in the building of their business endeavor to exercise the best judgment possible in selecting productions for distribution that are meritorious and can be exploited profitably, not only by themselves, but also by the exchanges and the exhibitors. They are endeavoring to co-ordinate as closely as possible the interests of the exhibitor and the independent exchanges themselves. The future policy of W. H. Productions Company has as its foundation the exhibitors' ultimate success in mind at all times, therefore placing the burden upon the shoulders of the producer to turn out productions that will assure box-office success.

"W. H. Productions Company is an independent distributor, and intends to build up a lasting permanent business in this field, and realizes that it can only be done by keeping up a high standard of business ethics in its dealings with producers, exchanges and exhibitors."

Drummond Buys W. H. Pictures for South

W. E. Drummond, owner of one of the principal state rights exchanges in the South, the Special Features Company, 610 Market street, Knoxville, Tenn., has been in New York for the past week and has acquired the rights from W. H. Productions Company for two of the super-Hart features, viz.: "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," for the territory consisting of Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Mr. Drummond made the following statement relative to his latest deal.

"Crucible of Life" Given SendOff

Sawyer and Lubin, General Enterprises, Give Premiere of Latest State Rights Offering at Churchill's—Many Buyers Present

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin held the trade premiere of their latest state rights feature, "The Crucible of Life," at Churchill's restaurant, Friday evening, February 1. A banquet followed the showing. A full-sized screen was erected and two Powers 6-A machines were installed in an asbestos booth. A surprise was sprung by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin through the appearance of the Camp Upton Quartet, especially drafted for the occasion to lend the proper military atmosphere to "The Crucible of Life," which is a patriotic spectacle dealing in vivid fashion with the present world war on both sides of the water. Special permission for the appearance of the soldiers was granted by Colonel Vidmer, commanding officer of the 306th Infantry, Camp Upton, L. I. Together with Private Frederick Rath, author of the famous war song, "When the Moon is Shining Somewhere in France," the Camp Upton Quartet scored a tremendous hit by reason of their singing and splendid military atmosphere provided through their appearance.

William McKenna and Sam Ryan, well-known legitimate star and screen actor, and a Jazz band enlivened the evening with entertainment.

Among the guests present were Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation; Joseph Engle and William E. Atkinson, treasurer and business manager, respectively, for Metro; J. Skirboll of Pittsburgh; Conrad Milliken, vice-president of Petrova Picture Company; J. F. Bacon, Sanger and Jordan; Martin J. Quigley, Exhibitors Herald of Chicago; L. M. Day of Washington, D. C.; W. E. Drummond of Knoxville, Tenn.; Herman Rifkin of Boston; E. Thomas of South America; W. Witney of American Standard Film; C. Westfall of the Atlantic Film Corporation; H. A. Gillespie, president of Frank Brockliss Company, Inc.; Charles N. Meyers of Australia; H. C. Walton, Sanger and Jordan; William H. Rudolph of the Clara Kimball Young Company; Walter H. Jordan of Sanger and Jordan; William Sherril of the Frohman Amusement Company; Arthur H. Sawyer, Herbert Lubin, M. Fink, M. R. Lubin, Harry G. Kosch and Bernard Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., and Leslie Ennis of the National City Bank. The motion picture trade press was represented by the following: Sam Spedon, Charles White, Jim Milligan, A. K. Greenland and J. McElravey of Moving Picture World; Joe Reddy, Dickson Watts and A. Kracht of the Sunday Telegraph; Peter Milne and Joseph L. Kelley of Motion Picture News; Al Coumier and S. Goldsmith of the Exhibitors Trade Review; Harold Rendall and Laurence Reid of the New York Review; James Beecroft of the Exhibitors Herald; Charles Brennon of Motography; Lynde Denig, J. Gerhart and Fritz Tidden of Dramatic Mirror; Charles Condon of Photoplay; Jo. Lowe, Variety; Pat Kearney, New York Clipper, and representatives of the daily press.

"Business Returning to Normal"

M. H. Hoffman Writes from Chicago That Signs Indicate Resumption of Business Along Norman Lines

M. H. HOFFMAN, writing from Chicago to Pierre V. R. Key of the Foursquare sales department, states that signs are gradually appearing on the horizon to indicate a resumption of business along more nearly normal lines.

"It is coming sooner than some of the pessimists think," says Mr. Hoffman, "and it is coming to stay. In the past two weeks I have talked with scores of exhibitors, as well as prominent citizens, in the cities of Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Chicago. What I have learned convinces me that the worst is past and that the situation is on the mend.

"I do not wish to be misunderstood. Immediate resumption of motion picture bookings in the same volume that prevailed before the holidays will not take place. But it is beginning to start, and in another few weeks I expect to see smiles beginning to appear on the faces of the many who have lately been looking as though they had lost their best friends.

"When confidence has been restored I am certain that the storm through which the industry has been passing will leave conditions clarified and in a far better state than had it not fallen. Here is a definite instance of where a seeming hardship will prove to have been a blessing in disguise. Because a great deal of what is undesirable will be eliminated, as it should have been some time ago.

"Men who have not been set to thinking as they should are now practising efficiency; efficiency of the right kind, which rests on sane economy. The exhibitors, who have been actually not hurt to the same extent as have the distributors and producers, have utilized methods they never dreamed of before.

"They have scrutinized picture values more closely. It has been borne home on them that only the best pictures can stand, because in such times as these the public will not tolerate the ordinary pictrue that is sold on the basis of being a genuine feature.

"Foursquare Pictures is fortunate in its clientele, for there is scarcely a case where an exhibitor has sought to ask what was unfair. As for our bookings, they are holding up splendidly, and the demand for the William J. Flynn serial supreeme, 'The Eagle's Eye,' indicates a record business."

Old Clothes Never Looked Better Than on Mabel Normand in "Mickey"

W. H. Releases "A Small Town Bully"

The first W. H. Productions Mack Sennett two-reel comedy, "A Small Town Bully," is announced for February 15.

Mabel Normand, the ever versatile portrayer of comedy, is the new teacher. Her troubles, in addition to her duties as an instructor, are greatly increased by the bad behavior of her pupils.

It is necessary for her to give her constant attention to Mack Sennett, the culprit and bully of the school, who fights with and plays practical jokes upon his arch enemy, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle.

Oro Plan Pleases State Rights Buyer

Max Wintroub of the Fontenelle Feature Film Co., a state rights exchange, was in Omaha recently and contracted for the twelve Oro productions this year. He also contracted for the Hans and Fritz pictures, Flora Finch comedies and forty one-reel Westerns for Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and Missouri.

"I like the plan of the Oro Company in printing the name and locations of exchanges handling their productions," said Mr. Wintroub. "This is the only logical treatment to accord exchangemen, and will go far to promote more ready co-operation. I know from experience that it figures in getting business from the state rights dealer, too."

Quick Sale of Talmadge and Keenan Re-issues

Hiller and Wilk, acting for the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, closed a record-breaking transaction when they sold sixteen Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan re-issues to the Central Film Company of Chicago, Ill. Within twenty-four hours after the proposition was brought to the attention of Messrs. Aaron Jones and Nathan Ascher of the Central Film Company, the arrangements were completed by which the Illinois rights to the following Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan pictures were sold:

Norma Talmadge—"The Missing Link," "Martha's Vindication," "Children in the House," "Going Straight," "The Dēvil's Needle," "The Social Secretary" and "Fifty Fifty." Frank Keenan—"The Coward," "Stepping Stones," "The Phantom," "Honor Thy Name," "The Thoroughbred," "Jim Grimsby's Boy," "The Sins Ye Do," "The Bride of Hate" and "The Crab."

Reports received from the various exchanges throughout the country indicate that the box-office interest in the Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan re-issues is growing daily.

E. and H. Company to Handle Three Seligs

Arrangements were completed last week, between C. L. Hull of Chicago and the E. & H. Film Distributing Company of Atlanta, Ga., for the distribution of three big productions for the Southeast, including the New DeLuxe edition of "The Spoilers," which is in twelve reels; "Beware of Strangers," and "Who Shall Take My Life?" all three productions of The Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Hull decided he could obtain better results by placing his productions with this company for distribution. He intends spending several weeks in the South and will co-operate with the E. & H. Company in exploiting his pictures.

The E. & H. Company own the franchise for the following pictures: The Billy West Comedies, the Art Dramas Productions, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Submarine Eye," "The Crisis," "The Little Girl Next Door," "Babbling Tongues" and other miscellaneous subjects.

Simmons' Premier Release

C. M. Simmons, General Manager, State Right Distributors, Inc., of which Sol Lesser Is President, Announces "Carmen of the Klondike" as First Offering

THE STATE RIGHT DISTRIBUTORS, INC., will present as their initial offering to the exhibitors of the country the Selexart Pictures' production of "Carmen of the Klondike," in which Clara Williams is seen in the title role.

C. M. Simmons, general manager of the State Right Distributors, Inc., with offices in the Longacre Building, New York City, will visit the principal cities in the United States for the purpose of co-operating with the franchise holders of the State Right Distributors and assist them in exploiting and presenting their initial production to the first run theatres in their territory. Mr. Simmons has been actively engaged in the motion picture industry for years and is well known to thousands of exhibitors throughout the country. His trip will be for the purpose of establishing co-operative relations between the exhibitors and the holders of the State Right distributing franchises.

In 1906 Mr. Simmons left the commercial field to devote his energies to amusement enterprises. At that time he opened a roof garden in one of the cities in the Middle West. His judgment of requirements for amusements and how to present them won for him immediate success and he was soon looked upon as one of the most capable showmen in the country. He later went to Chicago to study conditions there and secured the management of one of the biggest theatres on Madison street. He sold his interests later and went to Omaha, where he became affiliated with one of the largest film exchanges there.

From there he moved to Seattle, where he devoted his time to taking over run-down theatres and building them up into paying propositions. At the forming of the General Film Co., he became manager of their Seattle exchange and was later made sales manager, controlling all the exchanges on the Pacific Coast. Since that time "Mell" Simmons, as he is popularly known to thousands of exhibitors, has managed theatres and exchanges from coast to coast, and has had valuable experience as sales manager and has opened exchanges for the Electric, Triangle, Artcraft and Goldwyn. Sol Lesser, president of the State Right Exhibitors, Inc., appointed Mr. Simmons as general manager of the organization.

Mr. Simmons said in commenting on the picture:

"The production is full of stirring, red-blooded action from the beginning to the end, is clean throughout, and one that will appeal to people in every walk of life and will not offend in any way the most fastidious. The story carries an atmosphere of gamble and adventure which will appeal to every true American.

"In speaking of the word gamble, I do not mean it in the term of poker or dice, but that great big gamble for love, live and happiness and the power to possess, which instills the spirit of adventure. I have never seen a Northwestern or Alaskan picture fail to make money for the exhibitor. Every one, when properly done, has been a sure fire hit and in 'Carmen of the Klondike,' I see a better picture than any of a similar nature I have ever reviewed.

"Reginald Barker, who directed the picture, has done a master stroke in the detail and the exceptional choice of locations, scenic effects and lightings and his direction of the production is beyond criticism. In the selection of Clara Williams to typify the title role the choice has been excellent."

Robertson-Cole Closes for Crest Features

THE Robertson-Cole Company announces that it has bought outright the Crest Picture Corporation's film version of David Graham Phillips' widely read novel, "The Grain of Dust," for distribution in all foreign countries. At the same time the European interests entered into a contract with Carle E. Carlton, president of Crest Pictures, for the foreign rights of all the pictures produced by the Crest organization.

It is said that a record cash price was paid by the Robertson-Cole Company for "The Grain of Dust."

A trade showing of the attraction will be given by the London office of the Robertson-Cole Company in Albert Hall at which a symphony orchestra will be employed to render the special musical score which has been prepared for the production. This is the second of the Crest pictures for which the Robertson-Cole Company have purchased the foreign rights, the other production being "The Lust of the Ages." Lillian Walker is starred in both productions.

The deal was closed by Miss Edith Williams, the general manager of the Robertson-Cole Company in New York. In addition to the foreign rights, announcement of the sale of several territories in this country will be made next week. The purchase of the rights of these territories has been completed, and the announcement regarding same is only being withheld, pending the determination of the release dates.

The film is already being distributed in the Pittsburgh territory where the rights for same were purchased by the Liberty Film Renting Company.

Steiner Returns from Journey

Was Gone Little Over Month, and Declares He Wouldn't Have Missed It for Anything—Found Things Good

WILLIAM STEINER, better known in the film industry as "Big Bill," has returned from a complete tour of the United States, which he made in the interests of the Jester Comedy Company, of which he is the founder. Mr. Steiner spent little over a month in making this trip, and touched in at all the important film centers.

Mr. Steiner, in speaking of the trip, said he was surprised to find so many of the old boys still on the job, both from the exchange and the exhibitor's end.

"I would not have missed making this trip for anything. It gave me a great opportunity of sizing up the country, and at the same time, renewing friendships of old standing. Before I left New York I listened to many of the pessimistic film men in the city, who said that the country was shot to pieces. 'Bill, you will not be able to place your Jester comedies'; that the war had brought around conditions that made it impossible for buyers to pay proper prices for good films. This more than anything else, made me desirous of making the trip, and, further as I had not been over the country for years, I was rather glad of having the opportunity to go.

"My first stop was Philadelphia, where I found conditions in ideal shape. The independent exchanges and exhibitors are looking for films that would meet present-day conditions. The same applies to Cleveland, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Dallas, and, in fact, every city that I touched, I found the same cheerful feeling among the exchange men and exhibitors.

"This talk that there is not a market for films is all a mistake, and if the gentlemen of the film industry, who make their headquarters in New York, and who keep themselves nicely planted behind a glass-top mahogany, think that the country is shot to pieces, it behooves them to pack their little grip and see the country. Evidently, this feeling that has cropped up among many of the manufacturers in the East has been brought about by their figuring that the exchange man is looking for him. Very true—they are! But today the exchange man has risen into a position of prominence and he has to be treated on the same lines as the commercial industry is treated by the manufacturers. They have learned that they are the buyers, and if a man has goods to sell let him present his wares and demonstrate the quality of his goods on the home ground.

"I did not find one exchange man who was not ready to look at the films that I carried with me on my trip, and I feel that it is up to the independent manufacturer to take to the road with his goods or, at least, send a capable salesman.

"Twenty-three years' experience in the film business, both in manufacturing and selling, has taught me much and this last jaunt through the country has taught me much more. In the future all films that I manufacture shall be sent through the country under the same policy that I have adopted for the Jester comedies, and that is, to show goods on the home grounds."

Speaking of the Jester comedies, which feature Twede-Dan, Mr. Steiner would not say much, other than the fact that with the exception of a few small territories, the country has been sold solid for the period of one year (12) in number.

Work Progressing on Keeney Production

FRANK A. KEENEY PICTURES CORPORATION is progressing satisfactorily with the work on the first picture which will be placed on the market by the new concern, "A Romance of the Underworld." The picture is an adaptation by Mildred Considine from the play of the same name by [illegible] of many stage successes.

Among the members of the cast is Edwin H. Forsberg, who is now appearing in the role of a German spy; Paul Lamonde, in 'Seven Days' Leave," which has made such a hit at the Park theatre. Another star of the dramatic stage whose talents have been trained to picture making is Sybil Carmen, the "Moon Girl" of Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolics." Catherine Calvert, the star, takes the part of Doris Elliott, the same she had when she starred in the play, under the management of Mr. Armstrong. Among those in her supporting cast are Eugene O'Brien and David Powell.

The production is being made at the Biograph Studios. Mr. Keeney has selected a location for the new studios he is going to build in the central part of the city and a definite announcement of his plans will be made in the near future.

Arrow to Handle "Today" and "Mad Lover"

Through arrangements recently concluded between J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, the Arrow Company will act as exclusive agents for Pathe on the sale of states rights on the Pathe pictures "Today," with Florence Reed and "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick.

The territory still unsold includes North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, northern Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi.

The remaining territory has been sold to strong, active concerns who report success with the pictures in their territory.

New Exchange Gets Rights to W. H. Productions

New York exhibitors will no doubt be interested to learn that the Magnet Film Exchange, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, has been organized for the purpose of booking super-productions. They have already acquired the rights to W. H. Productions Co.'s first Hart super-feature, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" and have secured a first-run Broadway booking for the week of February 11 at the Eighty-first Street theatre.

The Magnet Film Exchange intends to acquire the rights from time to time of first-class feature productions and has inaugurated a plan by which the exhibitors in New York will secure a real service to help them put over each of the productions handled by this organization.

The New York city territory will be handled by Jesse Levine, formerly with World Film, Vitagraph and Metro.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

PRACTICALLY all of the companies of the Triangle organization returned to their work Thursday of the past week as per the announced schedule, and at the offices of the studio it was announced there is no reason at this time to believe there will be another close-down.

Resumption of production was taken up by practically all of the companies where they had stopped. The entire organization is running with the same speed as formerly. In the comedy department a change has been made, and now J. Farrell MacDonald is manager of production in this section, succeeding Bert Glassmire, who resigned. The staff of writers includes Fred Palmer, Ferris Hartman and others.

Storm Films Circus Story

Jerome Storm is now filming a new circus story starring Enid Bennett, which is from the pen of Florence Vincent. Earl Rodney is leading man, and one of the big parts is taken by Melbourn McDowell. Director Storm last week took many of the circus atmospheric scenes when more than two hundred extra people were employed. In this he had the co-operation of Victor Schertzinger, and it was while scenes were being made here that a photograph which very well illustrates what is meant by supervision of productions by Thomas H. Ince was taken. It is Ince's habit to permit his directors to work out the scenes and then to offer any suggestions that he may have.

The forthcoming William S. Hart contribution to the Artcraft program by Thomas H. Ince has been titled "The Tiger Man." The film is now in its last editing stages and will be ready for shipment shortly. Many of the scenes for this, as with "Blue Blazes Rawden," were made at Chatsworth Park. Jane Novak plays the lead, opposite Hart, and others of this cast are Milton Ross, Robert Lawrence, Charles K. French and others.

The most recently filmed Ince production, with Charles Ray, is to be known as "The Family Skeleton." This will be ready for release shortly. It was filmed by Victor Schertzinger, and has Doris Lee as leading woman. It is a psychological story of heredity, in which a maid, taken by Sylvia Bremer, causes her sweetheart to believe he is not heir to the habits of his father. The Ray Company are now on a new story and will shortly go to Truckee, where Director Irvin Willat will shoot the exterior snow country scenes.

Vitagraph Fire Drill

With the anticipated burning down of several buildings for the Montgomery and Rock forthcoming production for Big V Comedies, W. S. Smith unexpectedly called fire drill with the five companies working at the studios. In the excitement the bear being used in "Vengeance and the Woman" serial, broke from his chain and caused a few moments' exclusive thrill.

William Duncan, featured leading man and director of the Vitagraph serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," has made a requisition for a mammoth stream of sufficient depth and whirlpools of such strength as to pull a body down, for scenes in the fifteenth episode of the serial, which will be used as soon as this kind of stream can be located. Duncan has just filmed the fourteenth episode, in which a bed of quicksand served to give an almost too realistic touch. Duncan himself was the victim, and his co-workers experienced considerable difficulty in rescuing him from the sands.

The big V Comedy Company is filming "Sleuths and Slickers," which features Montgomery and Rock. The Hollywood fire department refused to grant permission to burn a street set for this comedy, but the objections were overcome when the management of the studio induced the officials to visit the studio and see a fire drill. All members of the producing staff participated in this.

A wonderful effect secured for the Earle Williams film, "The Lotus and the Bottle," is one made at night, which shows the silvery moon with some out-of-the-ordinary silhouettes taken in the tropical city setting, the streets of which were lined with giant Yuccas.

Fox Adds Director

Lynn Reynolds has been added to the directorial staff at the William Fox studios, and has now begun his first work in the direction of Tom Mix. He is now working with the star in preparing the story and continuity, and the actual filming will be started within a few days.

Jewel Carmen has begun work in a new Fox play, which is directed by S. A. Franklin, who is also author of the scenario. This, it is said, will require a very extensive wardrobe and will be of the nature of a society drama. L. C. Shumway will be Miss Carmen's leading man.

Thomas H. Ince, in the Right Center, Supervises a Mob Scene for a Forthcoming Enid Bennett Feature. Jerome Storm, the Star's Director, Is Debating with Victor Schurtzinger Regarding the Scene

E. J. LeSaint has been transferred to the direction of Gladys Rockwell and he is now at work on his first subject with this star. Many of the scenes of this photoplay are laid in the Apache district of Paris.

Preparations for the filming of several Theda Bara subjects at the Fox Hollywood plant are being carried forward under the supervision of J. Gordon Edwards, and it is now planned that filming of these stories will be started as soon as Miss Bara reaches the coast.

New Keenan Feature

The third producing unit of Pathe Plays began work last week, when the first scenes for "The Bells," starring Frank Keenan, were filmed by Director Ernest Ward.

Director William Worthington has completed all scenes for the Bryant Washburn Pathe Play, "Twenty-one." Many of the scenes for this story, adapted from one by George Randolph Chester, required double exposure, inasmuch as it is a tale of two parties who had identically the same appearance. Mr. Worthington and Mr. Washburn are now at work arranging details for the next production.

Bessie Love will reach the coast within a few days for work in Pathe Plays. Director and players for the Bessie Love productions will be selected by Robert Brunton, manager of production, and part of the players will be taken from the Paralta Studios stock company.

At the Diando plant, in Glendale, the Baby Marie Osborne company is starting on a patriotic subject, titled "Dolly Does Her Bit," which is adapted from the Lucy Farver story, the scenario being by Clara F. Baranger. The plot of this story revolves about a Red Cross bazaar.

General Manager W. A. S. Douglas of the Diando Company is still in the East.

All Directors Busy

All directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the West Coast studios are at work on the actual production of coming photodramas with but one exception, Director General C. B. De Mille, who has just completed editing "The Whispering Chorus," an adaptation of the magazine story of the same name, which will be his third contribution to the Artcraft.

A near riot occurred when a telegram from New York brought the information to Los Angeles that Jack Pickford, who was expected daily on the coast from the East, had enlisted in the Navy. Plans had been made for starting work on a play co-starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff. The story had been written, people engaged, the sets were built and costumes made. When the rumor came over the wire and reached the Lasky plant, everything was stopped and remained dormant for several hours, the time necessary to verify the rumor. Pickford arrived in Los Angeles February 4, and George Melford is to direct the production.

Vivian Martin is being starred in "Unclaimed Goods," under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon, who is working at the Morosco plant. This is Miss Martin's first appearance in Western subjects in many months.

At the same plant William D. Taylor is directing Constance Talmadge in her second Western made Select subject, "Up the Road With Sally," a farcical tale adapted from a well-known story.

The Mary Pickford Company is rehearsing on the Bret Harte story, "M'liss," and Sessue Hayakawa, under the direction of James Young, is preparing for the filming of another subject in which he will be the star.

Four Universal Companies

With the completion of "Forgive Me" Saturday, February 2, by Director Robert Leonard, with Mae Murray as star, and the filming of the last episode of "The Mystery Ship," serial featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, by Director Harry Harvey, the producing staff at Universal was reduced to four companies.

Director Jacques Jaccard is now at work on the third and fourth episodes of the serial originally known as "The Moon Child," which has been renamed "The Lion's Claws." The "Bull's Eye" Company is on number fourteen, and will in all probability finish the serial by the first of March, as there are but eighteen episodes.

The other two units at work on photoplays are those under the direction of Allen Holubar, which includes Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Lon Chaney, in "The Mortgaged Wife," and another company making an international political story at present known as "The Iconoclast."

Triangle Gets Play

Motion picture rights for the stage play, "The Servant in the House," by Charles Rand Kennedy, have been purchased by Triangle, and a screen version has been prepared by Lanier Bartlett. Arrangements have been made for the filming of this at a very late date, and Walter Edwards will be entrusted with the making of this subject. The cast will be selected during the coming week, and it is possible first scenes for the play will be made within that time.

Olive Thomas, who has been in the East since early in December, has returned to Los Angeles, and Jack Dillon will again direct her in Triangle comedy-dramas. One or two stories are now ready for Miss Thomas, and an effort will be made to keep up a regular release with this star.

Jack Conway, who is filming "Smoke," a Southern society story, has been using a large number of extra people, totalling more than two hundred. Gloria Swanson, Darrell Foss and Grover Frank are the principals of this company. A feature of the photoplay will be numerous bathing scenes in which a squad of beach beauties will be introduced.

One of the new plays put in production in the past few days at the Triangle is "Another Foolish Virgin," which E. Mason Hopper is making. Alma Rubens is the featured actress of this, and the principal supports are Betty Pearce and Texas Guinan.

Louise Glaum Begins

With all preliminary work completed, it was possible for the Louise Glaum Company to begin production of this actress' first Paralta play last week. The first scenes to be taken for this photoplay, at present known as "Intelligence," which is from an original story and continuity of Monte M. Katterjohn, are laid in a German beer garden. Inasmuch as the plot is of the nature of propaganda against the German military system, Katterjohn has

The stock is being distributed liberally by the promoters who plan to first secure the co-operation of all the best people of the industry. The name was not selected because of any patriotic feeling, but rather because it was most appropriate, the word "liberty" having been used very frequently in connection with another word of two letters. No stock will be issued to any professionals who have not worked at least three weeks on the West coast, and been on a vacation of the same duration.

Arbuckle Gets "Call"

"Fatty" Arbuckle is wanted at Santa Ana, the Chamber of Commerce having extended to the heavyweight comedian a substantial invitation for him to produce comedies there, and within a few days a concrete proposition will be made to Lou Anger, general manager of the Comique Film Corporation, which is the Arbuckle organization. At the present time Arbuckle is producing on leased stage space at the Long Beach studio of the Balboa Company, now at work on his fourth Western made picture, "The Bell Boy," which within a few days will be completed. A small town, main street, with its Last National Bank, Hotel Elk's Head, the I. O. O. F. Hall, the Emporium and the New York Store, together with the Grand Opry and the volunteer fire department, will be very much in evidence in this travesty, as well as a number of thrillers completed by the heavyweight comedian and his coworkers, Buster and Joe Keaton, Al St. John and Alice Lake.

Several new productions have been started at the Balboa studios. Howard M. Mitchell is directing a five-reel drama which will feature Kathleen Clifford, who is author of the story. Ethel Ritchie, who recently returned to this company after some time spent with the American at Santa Barbara, together with Neal Hardin, who is the leading man, will be the principal supports.

Paul Powell has been engaged by Balboa and will shortly begin the direction of his first picture there. Working script is now being prepared by Kathrine Nelson, a new member of the Balboa scenario department. Jack Jevne is also with Balboa and is at present writing script for Kathleen Clifford.

Bennett Speaks on Conditions

Hunter Bennett, Representative of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, Delivers Pertinent Remarks on Conditions Generally in the Market

HUNTER BENNETT, who has just returned from a tour of the West for the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation as special representative, has the following to say on conditions generally in the market:

"It is amusing to me that executives of certain distributing companies are causing just the kind of conditions from which they are the worst sufferers. In my trips about the country—and I have spent most of my time while in the film business touring the United States—I have found that their exchanges, as a rule, are veritable grist mills turning out a volume of mediocre pictures out of which only one in five productions shows a profit. The result is that they have accumulated a great amount of film in their various exchanges for which there is little or no demand.

"The conscientious exchange manager rather than see his film lay idle starts shooting it out at any old price, vainly attempting to meet the tremendous overhead expense he is compelled to operate under in order to handle the great amount of dollar per reel subjects he is receiving each week, or has received in the past.

"In the last few months a few of the companies which have been glutting the market with an inferior product woke up and reduced the number of their releases. But, in my opinion, this step was taken too late, as they are maintaining exchanges which cover three times as much floor space as they require to handle the present number of releases. Most exchanges, I have found, are tied up on long-term leases, and are carrying at least twice as large a payroll as they require.

"Some distributors have permitted men to dictate the policies of their companies who have had practically little or no experience in this business with no practical knowledge of actual conditions in any one territory. It is such 'merchandise counsellors,' as they have been called, who are largely responsible for the conditions existing at the present time, but as I have stated above their own companies will be the first to suffer from their folly.

"The store-show operating on a shoestring is a thing of the past. The successful exhibitor of to-day has passed through all the frenzy of the bally-hoo stages of the business, and neither he nor his patrons will accept anything they don't want. The day also is past when any single distributor can use a few successful stars or productions as a club over the exhibitor's head in order to compel him to book subjects he doesn't want. It is a case of Quantity versus Quality, and Quality is bound to win."

Hoffman Pleased with "The Eagle's Eye"

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager of Foursquare Pictures, through whose organization William J. Flynn's serial, "The Eagle's Eye," produced by Wharton, Inc., is to be distributed, expresses great satisfaction at the reception given the first three episodes of this serial when it was shown to the trade, recently, at the Strand theatre, New York.

"At such a time as this," said Mr. Hoffman, "when the country is at war with a common enemy, the production of a feature serial erected upon the subject matter contained in 'The Eagle's Eye' does more than provide entertainment of the most appealing and thrilling nature. It serves a patriotic purpose.

"While I know that every exhibitor must, first of all, take into account the quality of a serial (its commercial value to him as merchandise which he buys to sell to his patrons) I am well aware that the fibre of Americanism in 'The Eagle's Eye' will touch a responsive chord in the heart of every loyal man who owns or operates a motion picture theatre.

"When I think that, in showing 'The Eagle's Eye,' thousands of exhibitors will know that they are standing by their government it makes me feel a thrill of pride that Foursquare Pictures should have been chosen to distribute it.

"In order that 'The Eagle's Eye' shall have the completest possible distribution, I shall supervise it personally. During the next few weeks a great part of my time will be spent in the cities and towns, where exhibitors have asked for special co-operation in presenting every episode.

"Apart from the wonderful publicity campaign for 'The Eagle's Eye,' there will be out-of-the-ordinary methods introduced—methods which while not possible to the average fine feature are especially applicable to this production.

"So, I want every exhibitor to feel free to expect that I shall follow his needs and wishes right through. During my absence from New York Mr. Key will communicate with me, and by teelgraph if necessary, whatever cannot wait to be forwarded by mail."

Paralta Photographers Lecture to Aviators

L. Guy Wilky and Robert Newhard, who are at the head of the photography department of the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, have been called upon to render a patriotic duty by lecturing to sixty men who are enlisted in the aviation and radio services of the United States Government. While these men are waiting the call to active duty, they are making the best of their time by studying all the sciences essential to their work. One of the most important arts which they have to master in order to be of value to the Government as air scouts is that of operating the motion picture camera.

Screen Examinations

Bringing Them Into a Close-up

By Longacre

THOSE who dwell on the art of the motion picture have been keeping an eye peeled recently for "The Blue Bird," the screen version of Maurice Maeterlinck's play which Maurice Tourneur has made for an Artcraft release. People out in the smaller places of the United States don't know much about it unless they have read it. It was produced in New York several seasons past with only moderate success. But New York is not the sole criterion. It is of interest to note that at the time of the translation of the play into English it was playing the provinces of Russia by means of no less than fifty-nine companies! The provinces of Russia include various peoples, high, low, middle class—and if a play can appeal to all of them after the manner of "The Blue Bird" it is certain of making no mean impression on the varied audiences of our own United States.

The Maeterlinck play is a blending of psychology with beautiful flights of fancy. The two children of a fairly well-to-do woodcutter set out to find the Blue Bird, Happiness. Their search takes them through imaginary lands of the author's conception. Through the land of the Dead, the kingdom of the Blue Children, the children yet unborn, through the stern palaces of Night. Eventually they are obliged to give up the search with the object still unfound. Of course, when they cease looking Happiness comes to them. It is a beautiful story, pathetic, humorous, whimsical, one which has a simple and direct appeal to the child and a more subtle, finer appeal to the adult.

But these qualities will no doubt show for themselves on the screen in due time. It was Mr. Tourneur's past work, his peculiar fitness for undertaking the staging of such a spectacle as "The Blue Bird" that called for this mention of it. The play is throughout filled with chances for the artistic director. Every scene contains a fadein or a dissolve, the transformation of some material or animal object into its human synonym as conceived by the author. A dog takes human form, a loaf of bread becomes a fat and foolish man. And as for the lighting effects suggested by the simple descriptions of the author; these open up huge vistas of possibilities for the artistic director and, in this instance, his co-worker the cameraman.

Mr. Tourneur by his work in the first three Elsie Ferguson pictures and the Mary Pickford production "The Poor Little Rich Girl" has proven himself without a doubt the one and only director capable of realizing all the possibilities of the Maeterlinck play to their fullest extent. And if Mr. Tourneur has realized them, a big "if" but a very probable one, he will have accomplished that which he may well turn to with pride, a work which will place him in a class by himself.

Looking back over the flood of "war spectacles" and specials which have sprung from the Great War, one is forced to come to the conclusion that the majority of them were hastily conceived with little original thought going into their makeup. This statement is in no way meant to belittle their commercial value, for the exhibitors' books tell the tale one way or another and stand for no contradiction. But the compiler of the "great war special" seems unable to vary the monotony of the heroine and the hero from the rank of the Allies and the villainous German spy whose craving for the heroine ultimately results in his downfall. This triangle is, of course, the natural outcome of the present international situation. No one demands a German hero—but why make the German villain an utter fool in his actions? Certainly no audience who sees the spy blundering right and left is at all convinced. Better have him possessed of all the cunning he has in reality and cause him to be overthrown by super-cunning on the part of the defenders of the right. The spy's post in any service is never an easy thing to gain. He must be of more than average intelligence, of quick wit and daring. And while this discourse may seem irrelevant to the motion picture, an audience knows these traits of the spy. Consequently when he goes about making a mess of his job every way he turns, the strength of the triangle is materially lessened.

Within a short time it is expected that D. W. Griffith's picture of the European war will be on public view. There was no foolish flying in the face of fact in "The Birth of a Nation," but the cases are in no way parallel. However, all one can do is to sit back and wait for his work. We for one will be more than surprised if Griffith comes out with a German spy who has all the earmarks of a full-blown idiot and none of the cunning of his precarious trade. For that matter we don't believe a German spy will have a prominent role in Griffith's production at all.

"Hidden Pearls"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

BEULAH MARIE DIX has given Sessue Hayakawa a story which when told on the screen affords one of the best bits of entertainment that the Japanese actor and his support have been permitted to give for some time. The author has furnished—one important element which is necessary for Mr. Hayakawa to reach the hearts of his audience, and that is sympathy. It is a little different from anything that he has ever done and it stands out because there is incorporated snappy action, originality of theme, rapid succession of logical events and an ideal role for Sessue Hayakawa. He is allowed a certain latitude in interpreting the featured role that is almost without constraint. Opportunity has been thrust at him and he has taken a firm hold on each as presented to him, and has obtained from each the very best in dramatic presentment. The story, impersonations and production are characterized by strength—there's a punch in every scene.

George Melford is deserving of special mention for his directorial work in this production. Mr. Melford has done a piece of work that speaks for itself. Much of the locale of the story is laid in the Hawaiian Islands, in the vicinity of Honolulu. The atmosphere is there. Mr. Melford has more than once shown his ability as a director in his work with Sessue Hayakawa. He is strong on atmosphere and detail and where both are possible both will be realized when Director Melford is found with the megaphone back of the camera man.

The story which Miss Dix submitted received expert treatment. The author paved the way and saw to it that there were no obstacles left in the way. It was written obviously for the sole use of Mr. Hayakawa, and is entitled to special credit because it had to be fashioned with delicacy and extraordinary care in order that the requirements of the Japanese actor could be met. Miss Dix accomplished the purpose and turned out an excellent work.

There are few interior scenes as compared to the whole. The action centres in the open and the exteriors are beauties. An example of the originality which Miss Dix has incorporated in her script and which Director Melford has brought out with a fine degree of appreciation for its originality and its power to incite a deserved quota of sympathy for Mr. Hayakawa as Tom Garvin, in her creation of the incident wherein Garvin, in order that he might keep the stolen pearls in safety and assure their safe return to his people, has the skin of his forearm laid open with a knife (presumably—and the effect is as impressive as the actuality could possibly be) and the pearls concealed under the skin, which is sewed over them. This is not only original, but gets over with a punch and a real thrill.

The supporting cast is composed of players whose work adds greatly to the success of this production. Margaret Loomis and Florence Vidor have the principal feminine roles. Both do fine work before the camera. Miss Vidor screens like a winner and is destined for better things before the camera. Theodore Roberts give one of his excellent characterizations. James Cruze in the role of a native leader is full of pep and strikes from the shoulder. Noah Beery as a native chieftain rings the bell. Jack Holt, Charles Geldert and Henry F. Woodward have minor bits. Paul Perry obtained some nice shots with the camera and has a fine eye for distance and perspective. His work at the camera is commendable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tom Garvin is the son of an American pearl trader and a prince of one of the Hawaiian collection. He has been educated in America, and knows little of his native land or people. He loves Enid Benton (Florence Vidor), but she informs him that unless he can show that he is able to acquire a comfortable fortune, she cannot marry him. Tom leaves for Honolulu to make his fortune. His uncle, John Garvin (Theodore Roberts) is stationed here as a pearl trader. His uncle learns that a rich deposit of pearls has been found along the island coast. Tom's uncle suggests that he go to his native island, where he is in reality the king, and find out where the pearls are located. Tom thinks of Enid, and decides to go.

He receives a royal welcome by the natives on his arrival, and is hailed as king. Tahona (Margaret Loomis), a daughter of Teariki, a chieftain, falls in love with him. He learns from her where the pearls are hidden. She takes him to the spot where they are concealed. He escapes with the pearls, but is hunted down by the natives and branded. Tahona again comes to his rescue, and he is freed. He escapes from the island after thrilling adventures and returns to his uncle. His conscience hurts him, and he refuses to give the pearls up. His uncle attempts to force him to part with the pearls, and in a fight which follows, Tom wins out and escapes. He meets a native of his lsland home, and he cuts Tom's arm, conceals the pearls under the skin, and sails as a stoker on a vessel bound for his native island to return the pearls to his people.

Tahona has been informed that unless Tom returned with the pearls within a certain time, she would be sacrificed. Tom returns and presents the pearls to his people. Tahona is freed, and the two are united, after which they settle down to rule as king and queen.

VICTOR HEERMAN has taken Charles Murray, Mary Thurman, Wayland Trask and Edgar Kennedy under his guiding hand and they, at his directionfi have created one of the Mack Sennett brand of laughs, titled "Watch Your Neighbor." Laughs is the strongest term that can be employed in a criticism which statement is considered essential because "Watch Your Neighbor's" immediate predecessors can be criticised justly, only by the employment of the qualifying noun, roars.

This late Mack Sennett comedy is distinctive in comparison with others of the same brand. For instance—Mary Thurman doesn't once appear in deshabille or in a bathing suit. She is the only one of the Sennett beauties who appears during the run of the two reels. Charles Murray is seen in the lonesome frock of an undertaker (almost a roar, but not quite).

The idea upon which the comedy is based is a laugh approaching a roar, in itself—an undertaker going fifty-fifty with a doctor on the daily receipts. Charles Murray is the undertaker and his conception of the humorous and the ridiculous side of this dignitary's profession, is one that makes you laugh whether you will or not. Mary Thurman makes a pretty doctor's other-half. Wayland Trask is big enough for a doctor such as the one Mack Sennett wanted to interpret this role and his idea of humor is neither distorted or underestimated. He holds up his end and gets a laugh every time he reaches for one. Edgar Kennedy could get more laughs if he were given more opportunity. The moral: A doctor and an undertaker may form a partnership and may get more business through the alliance but one or the other loses his wife in the business rush.

THIS Strand comedy featuring Billie Rhodes and Cullen Landis as Mary and Jack respectively, is on a par with the best of the series, with Mary coming out at the end decidedly second best. Having been frequently warned by her lover, she persists in flirting in a most audacious manner, and at a party Jack decides he will not escort her home on this account. She therefore decides to play safe and has three of the male guests promise to do this. But over a cup of punch they compare notes, and decide they have been fooled by frivolous Mary, so they all decide to cancel their engagement, with the result that Mary is left to wend her way home alone in the wee sma' hours of the morning.

The reel is full of humorous incidents and will surely prove an interesting filler for any program.

"The Turn of a Card"

(Paralta—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AN excellent romantic comedy with plenty of thrills on the side is offered in "The Turn of a Card." Paralta's second release featuring J. Warren Kerrigan. Seldom has Mr. Kerrigan been seen in a more congenial role than Jimmie Montgomery Farrell, the young Western oil magnate, who arrives in the East to take possession of a Long Island estate (his winnings at the gaming table), to find there the daughter of the man he believes has taken his life because of his losses. The comedy begins at this point and continues on to the end, every bit of it surefire, and, backed by the serious situation which Jimmie thinks he has precipitated, it has a high sustaining interest not often found in subjects containing so plentiful a supply of humor. Jimmie's first experience as a chauffeur which leads him to ditch both himself and Cynthia by the roadside after a short and furious ride, his experiences as a butler, his meeting with Cynthia on an equal social footing and countless minor incidents go to make "The Turn of a Card" splendid in light entertainment value.

The opening scenes disclose several smashing thrills which get the story to an unusually good start. The "bringing in" of the oil well, its subsequent burning, the vicious plotting of Phelps, and last, but not least, the game in which Jimmie wins the Long Island estate, are handled with rare skill. The suspense of the card game is admirably maintained—Jimmie's fortune seems swept away at one point but finally sheer luck brings him success. Then comes his journey to the East and the introduction of the big vein of comedy which serves to keep the spectator in a merry mood up to the final scenes. "The Turn of a Card" is a rare combination of romance, comedy and melodrama, an ideal subject for any house high or low.

Thomas J. Geraghty made the adaptation from the story by Frederick Chapin. His continuity is praiseworthy in every respect and the skilful manner in which he has alternated between comedy incidents and situations of a more serious nature deserves unstinted commendation. Oscar Apfel directed and has given of his usual excellent work. He has caught the real spirit of the numerous humorous scenes of the story and has staged them with a rare sense of their possibilities. The production throughout is realistic to a degree and some fine settings are the work of R. Holmes Paul. The photography by L. Guy Wilky and Henry Bredesen is of the best.

Kerrigan plays Jimmie Montgomery Farrell with a sincerity and delicate sense of humor that is delightful. Lois Wilson as Cynthia gives a performance equally pleasing, and there are Eugene Pallette, William Conklin, David M. Hartford, Frank Clark and other capable performers in the supporting parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jimmie Montgomery Farrell (J. Warren Kerrigan) strikes it rich in the oil fields. Celebrating, he takes to cutting for high cards with "Ace High" Burdette (David M. Hartford), an "on-the-square" gambler. He cleans Ace High of all his money and his Long Island estate to boot. Downcast, Ace High wanders out from the town. He stumbles over a rock and falls in a brook, striking his head. He is found by "Curio" Johnson (Clifford Alexander), a half wit, who takes him home to his shack for company. He is reported dead. Curio, in love with Millie Jarvis (Eleanor Crowe), salts her father's land with oil, believing the farm can so be disposed of at a large price. William Phelps (William Conklin), a crooked promoter from the East, marries Millie, believing the property rich, only to discover soon afterward that it is worthless. He makes a getaway. Jimmie goes East to sign corporation papers, and looks into his Long Island real estate holdings. He installs himself in state. One day Cynthia (Lois Wilson), Ace high's daughter, arrives home from Europe, unaware of the transfer of property and the report of her father's death. Jimmie passes himself off as her chauffeur, and from here on the action takes a turn for the humorous, until Phelps, blocked in a bad deal by Jimmie, tells Cynthia that he caused her father's death. It is at this time that Ace High presents himself in person, and his appearance is the clue for a general happy ending.

Roy Laidlaw, Albert J. Cody and Wallace Worsley complete the cast.

"Jack Spurlock—Prodigal"

(Fox—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

GEORGE HORACE LORIMER who presides over the editorial destinies of the Saturday Evening Post seldom writes. "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal" is one of the few stories that bears his name as author. It appeared, naturally in the S. E. P. There are times during the adaptation of his story as fashioned by Ralph Spence and produced by Carl Harbaugh that one comes to the conclusion that Mr. Lorimer was bent on satirizing that type of fiction for which the Post is largely sought. The youth, fresh from either college or from the lists of the down-and-outers, works up to become the head of "big business" in the majority of the stories selected by the only George Horace. And his own Jack Spurlock accomplishes the same feat, only in a manner that includes many touches of satire and burlesque.

In truth, "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal" fails to rank with other adaptations from the columns of the Post, merely because the author has chosen to be light throughout his work. There is none of that peculiarity fascinating element of "struggle," of the hero combating against unfair odds that makes the Post's circulations climb up to the millions. Jack Spurlock's adventures before success comes to him constitute a series of humorous episodes beginning at the time of his last college blow-out and continuing to the day when he discovers that onions are the basis of a "cure-all" remedy. His deeds of comedy are not unified. For instance his work at peeling onions is merely introduced to produce many tears and no comedy. The "Silent Restaurant" offers a good idea for comedy but is out of place in a story of the length and position of this one.

Episodic is the word for the picture. It is funny, particularly so at the start. Jack's dinner orgy participated in by Frisco, celebrated Jazz dancer, his trip home during which time he accumulates a bear, his trouble the following morning with the animal—these are moments of riotous fun. And many of the following incidents draw laughs and smiles too, but there is that expected element, that real struggle of the prodigal against business, that never appears and which would have made the picture perfect of its kind.

The adaptation is good and much humor will be derived from the well selected and worded subtitles. Mr. Harbaugh's direction never fails in realism. George Walsh, popular and with personality, takes the title role and characterizes the part as light and carefree—a perfectly good characterization. Dan Mason as the father, and Ruth Taylor, pretty, but quite unimportant as Anita Grey are named as principal support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Spurlock (George Walsh) expelled from college because of a prank is put to work by his father (Dan Mason), in the wholesale grocery business. For some unknown reason Jack insists upon buying up all the onions in the territory. Then the onion workers go on strike. Jack takes up the cudgels in their behalf, and by advertising popularizes their slogan, "Live and Let Live." Eventually the old man grants the requested increase in the onion workers' salaries, and they go back to work. But not Jack. He is cut off by his father, and obliged to work as a waiter and a window demonstrator, until Anita (Ruth Taylor), the girl of his heart, calls a halt on these activities. He pairs up with a Colonel Jackson (Robert Vivian), vender of a patent "curé all," the chief ingredient of which is onions. Jack gets a big order from a Chicago house for several gross of the "Live and Let Live" stuff, whatever it is. The advertising has created a demand. So Jack sends them the "cure all," and is obliged to buy up his father's superfluous onions to make more—so reinstating himself in Spurlock senior's good graces.

"The Crucible of Life"

"THE CRUCIBLE OF LIFE," a screen version of Bartley Campbell's stage play, "Fairfax," produced by the Authors' Film Company, under the direction of Captain Harry Lambert and distributed on the independent market by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, General Eenterprises, Inc., is a society melodrama with the melodramatic element highly emphasized in its proper order, the war scenes hitting the high spots with effective registration, the lighter dramatic moments breaking the spell of tenseness aroused by the stronger melodramatic efforts and the cast including Grace Darmond, Jack Sherill and Frank O'Connor in the principal roles, rendering convincing and dramatic impersonations of the featured character parts. "The Crucible of Life" is big in many respects without being sensational. The straight dramatic work added to the war scenes and the consequent interest which the scenes laid in France arouse because, of her timely and appropriate sentiment, places this production in rank with some of the best of the independent, not relying upon the sensational for their right to position in the category of state rights' features.

There is nothing quite so strongly in favor of a dramatic presentation, whether it be on the stage or screen, as a sentimental interest. This may be aroused in an audience in various ways. The one who did the continuity for the screen version of Bartley Campbell's play, "Fairfax," has aroused this sentimental interest by means of the introduction of the Red Cross division in France and a number of scenes in the front lines of battle. This has been done with the reasoning of a logician as well as a dramatist with the result that the impressioin of a padded effort often left by those who seek to introduce war scenes in a straight dramatic recital, has not been left after a review of "The Crucible of Life."

The picture is not one that will stand scrutiny without revealing defects in technique and construction. Very few are. The revelation, however, comes with such a slight tap announcing its presence, that the realization enters and exits without appreciable noise or without having left damage in its wake. Its appeal is of the brand that holds. The variety of dramatic possibilities that have been realized, covers a wide scope, considering that it all has been revealed in one production. There is the melodramatic, the straight dramatic work, the social side and the touch of war.

Captain Harry Lambert's direction of this production rings true in every scene. He has put over the melodramatic with a punch and his intentions have been carried out to the letter by Edwin Forsberg and Jack Sherrill. Grace Darmond is an excellent type for a Red Cross nurse and in the earlier reels presents good work as the orphan. Frank O'Connor does creditable work. Winifred Harris registers in a matron's part. The photography is clear. The lighting effects obtained good results. The thrill in the final reel, showing the burning of the base hospital, fails to thrill because Director Lambart did not get realism into the scene. "The Crucible of Life" is a strong screen drama. It is well constructed and holds the interest.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Gladys Dale (Grace Darmond) had married unwisely. She and her husband part and she secures a position as companion to Diana, daughter of Mrs. Dorset (Winifred Harris), a prominent society matron. Robert Dorset (Jack Sherrill), son of Mrs. Dorset is of the wild sort. He makes advances to Gladys but she repulses him. Edwin Fairfax (Frank O'Connor) arrives with his motherless little daughter, Virgie, to spend a vacation at the country estate of Mrs. Dorset. Fairfax and Gladys become close friends. Fairfax receives a commission in the army and leaves for France.

Later Robert Dorset becomes acquainted with Fritz von Hoffbert (Edwin Forsberg), a German spy and society thief. The boy becomes implicated in several robberies and becoming more daring steals his mother's necklace. Gladys has been compelled to leave to escape the insults of Robert and it is shortly after her departure that the robbery is discovered. Robert casts suspicion on her. Gladys is accepted in the Red Cross division and leaves for France. She is assigned to the hospital near where Edwin is stationed. Neither know of the other's presence.

Von Hoffbert is called to Europe and practices his work as spy, as a member of the company in which Fairfax is. Fairfax becomes suspicious of von Hoffbert and catches him signaling to the enemy. A hand-to-hand fight follows in which von Hoffbert is worsted. Fairfax is wounded and taken to the hospital in which Gladys is stationed. They are re-united and leave for a furlough in the United States. Robert is caught red-handed at robbing the home of a society woman and in his confession he exonerates Gladys from guilt.

"The Inner Voice"

A POWERFUL character study of a man heedless of the dictates of conscience is rendered in "The Inner Voice," by Ivan Mozukin, one of the most accomplished, if not, indeed, the actual star, of all the players who have appeared to date in this brand of pictures Pathe is releasing. While heretofore M. Mozukin has made his appearances in characters, the opening reels of "The Inner Voice" find him a young man, clean-shaven. His reversion to his usual makeup in the latter reels lays unusual stress on his ability as a character actor. He is through the entire five reels the centre of attraction, always in the spirit of his role and playing it with a force and dignity that could not be surpassed by any performer of the American studio.

The story, by reason of Mozukin's characterization constantly holds the attention. It in itself is interesting but it is mainly the varying stages of wickedness through which the principal character passes that is responsible for its dramatic strength. It works up to a high point of suspense before judgment eventually overtakes the man who has lost track of all sense of right and goes through life working only in his own selfish interests. The supporting cast is of the usual high standard maintained in all the Russian Art releases. The remaining principals play with unusual skill, but what is even more remarkable is the fact that even the very minor roles are carried by players who seem capable of doing larger things.

The production is good, the film is well edited and the photography calls for no severe criticism. All in all, "The Inner Voice" is a fine picture, and one that should help American audiences overcome their foolish prejudices for foreign-made pictures.

THE STORY

Ermoloff leaves his home to study at the University of Moscow. He enters student circles highly respected and loved by his fellows. But an affair with the mother of the boy he tutors, gambling and drinking soon cause his ostracism from university circles. His deceit and inattention causes the death of the girl he loves most. In after years his personal ambitions are his all. Though married and the father of a boy he is unhappy. He buys his way into the Duma by promising a money-lender an important Government position. Then at the height of his success, when he is being complimented for his "integrity" and "charitable" ways, Conscience appears and points her finger at him. In his home, his past deeds rise before him to condemn—and he dies, cursing the day he first put Conscience aside.

"The Cast-Off"

(Foursquare Pictures—Six Reels)

IT sounds like old times. Bessie Barriscale, C. Gardner Sullivan, Raymond West and Thomas H. Ince—their efforts all combined in one picture, "The Cast-Off." This was made while the quartette was working together under the Triangle banner and was secured by M. H. Hoffman to release on the Foursquare program. It shows Miss Barriscale at her best, which is something really delightful, in a story of unusual realism, well treated and produced. As the prominent actress, Pancrimee Nethaway, alternately swayed by her desire of avenging herself on the man who mistreated her when she was a mere slavey, Pansy May, and her love for little children, Miss Barriscale brings into play that versatility and ease of expression that has made her past performances count for so much in themselves alone.

Her acting does, indeed, save "The Cast-Off" from taking a slump in its middle. The story of the successful Pancrimee under way, the editor has chosen to look backward to three reels of her early struggles and the main action is thus broken in twain. Not that the retrospect is unnecessary as it gives sound motive for the actress longing to mete out punishment to Henley, but it is a little too long. Probably the elimination of a reel of this action would work to better results, but even as it stands Miss Barriscale's work as the slavey, so contrasting with her performance as the polished actress, is constantly the centre of attention.

Mr. West's production is realistic and always possessed of the proper atmosphere for the various phases of the picture. Howard Hickman makes the doctor a dignified and human person, Jack Livingston does well as the boarding house "sport" and Dorcas Matthews plays with sincerity as his wife.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Pancrimee Nethaway (Bessie Barriscale), successful actress in a fantastical children's play, gloats over the fact that Henley (Jack Livingston), who once scorned her, is now counted among her most ardent admirers. Systematically she starts about to create a separation between him and his wife (Dorcas Matthews). Doctor Thorpe (Howard Hickman), a skilled physician who spends his time relieving the suffering of crippled children, urges Pancrimee to spend an afternoon in his sospital. Loath to do so at first, she finally consents and association with the kindly doctor and his wards opens a new life to her. In treating Henley's child, Dr. Thorpe learns of the domestic break caused by Pancrimee and on the night she is to dine with Henley he detains her. She tells him her story of the manner when she, a slavey in a boarding house, was made fun of by the boarders, Henley, hypocritically posed as her friend and champion, all the while laughing behind her back himself. This has so embittered her that she has resolved to get even with him. Dr. Thorpe shows her the Henley child and the actress relents. Meanwhile the romance of Pancrimee and Dr. Thorpe has developed and with the end of the picture it reaches its happy conclusion.

JUNE CAPRICE is featured in this number by Frances Crowley as a daughter of wealth who feigns poverty to try the mettle of her friends. The only one who remains true is a poor, bluffing author, who is forced by the scenarioist to prove his worthiness of June many times and over before she accepts him as her hubby. June is her usual smiling, kittenish self in her role in "The Heart of Romance." She is much in evidence throughout the five reels and the producers rely on her personality a good deal to put the story over. Her opposite is Bernard Thornton, who plays the bluffing author. He is late of vaudeville and plays the part clownishly from beginning to end usually with a rather empty smile and foolish staring eyes. He gets some of his comedy over, but five reels of his same expression is rather too much, and when he finally tries to be dramatic he fails.

Miss Crowley's story deserves little attention save in the outlining of the plot. As a vehicle for the star it compares favorably with others of the past, but it is light and repeats to such an extent that it only manages with difficulty over the five reels. The continuity was prepared by Adeline Leitzbach and Harry Millarde directed. A glance at the synopsis in the press sheet gives a further elaboration of the story, tells of a roué and his attempt to force his attentions on the girl, with the usual "dramatic" rescue by the hero, but as this twist of the plot is never apparent in the film as released it is neither here nor there.

George Bunny as the guardian heads a supporting cast that contributes work of an average nature.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Eloise Jackson (June Caprice), the wealthy young ward of Judge Stafford (George Bunny), lavishes her fortune on extravagant entertainments. Harvey Greyson (Bernard Thornton), struggling author, meets her and as a whim she agrees to back him. Stafford lays a plan whereby Eloise will learn the true worth of her friends and announces that her fortune has been swept away. Greyson is the only one who remains true. They continue the trick and Greyson finds himself hard put to provide for Eloise but he proves true-blue till the bitter end which, however, is not so bitter after all but very sweet as he learns that his stuff has been accepted by any number of publishers and that Eloise loves him.

VITAGRAPH'S version of O. Henry's "Compliments of the Season," adapted by Stanley Olmstead and produced under the direction of Ashley Miller, is an original Christmas story, rich in contrast, novelty of development and subtle humor. "Fuzzy," the tramp, hangs around the mansion of the millionaire and looks with saddened eyes at the lady as she goes for a ride. A little dog is the only inmate of the house that pays him attention, and when the child shows her dislike for Fuzzy, the pup gets even by stealing her pet rag doll. Rag dolls are not very important as a rule, but this one was treasured by the spoiled child and all the others in New York could not take its place. On Christmas eve, she is in a serious state and a reward is offered for the return of the doll. Fuzzy finds it and restores it to its little owner. The lady proves to be the girl he once loved, down in Virginia, who refused him for a millionaire.

A mere sketching of the plot never does justice to an O. Henry story, but Vitagraph's picturization does it fully. Herbert Prior, as the tramp, with Betty Blythe as the Lady and Aida Horton as the child do clever work and both adaptor and director have grasped the spirit of the author and succeeded in reproducing it on the screen.

"The Thing's the Play" was considered funny by the author but not by a reporter. It was much funnier as a story than it is as a picture for it is rather slow and the ending, unlike those of the majority of these pictures, is obvious. The rejected suitor breaks into the bride's room immediately after the wedding and her husband discovers him there. He leaves her, meets the rival and a fight occurs in which the husband is knocked unconscious. Ten years later they meet again and when Helen discovers the identity of the bearded stranger who has been boarding in her house, she soon makes him remember the past. The two reels are not without their interest, but fail to come up to expectations. Mildred Manning, Jack Crosby and Rex Burnett appeared under George Ridgwell's direction.

ROY STEWART'S late Western drama, senarioized from Randall Parish's story by Alvin J. Neitz and produced by Triangle under the direction of Cliff Smith, with Steve Rounds at the camera, is a lively exposition of Western life with the central figure a Texas ranger. Typically Western in every detail, "Keith of the Border" should serve as a good headliner for the exhibitor's program whose audiences are composed of those who like the Western drama. Roy Stewart has a big following and his work in this picture is commendable.

The author has given his story a tinge of the original in spots. He has worked to a strong climax and the action he has made possible in the body of his story, is of the sure-fire brand and moves with pep. Director Cliff Smith has opened with a shot of the open country followed by one of the same order, both of which run to too great a length before the hero appears on the scene. When Jack Keith does ride into view the action starts and moves swiftly.

Some fine stretches of open country and winding trails have been shot. The idea of making the hero a Texas ranger serves a good purpose for, because of the notoriety of this branch of the police of the Texas border, the mere mention of the fact arouses an interest which would not have been aroused had not the fact been made known. Sympathy is with the ranger from start to finish.

Both author and director have handled the action and detail which centres about the dual role interpreted by Josie Sedgwick, with finesse and appreciation for the logical. Neither role had been overplayed in its presentment. Miss Sedgwick works to advantage and convinces at all times. Herbert Gills is an unusually good type for the part of Black Bart and his impersonation of the heavy element is an example of true dramatic work. Pete Morrison, William Ellingford, Wilbur Higbee and Alberta Lee present lesser roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Keith is a member of the Texas Rangers. While riding over the plains he discovers the murder of a band of squatters. He buries the dead, and is unaware that a member of the gang who did the work is watching. He starts out to round up the band. He rides into the stronghold of the gang, a border town, and is arrested for the murder of the squatters. He escapes from jail, and stops at a lonely cabin, where he finds a girl, Hope Waite (Josie Sedgwick). While he is there, Black Bart (Herbert Gills), the leader of the gang of outlaws, stops. He has met the girl before. Keith overpowers Black Bart, and he and the girl flee. They ride to a nearby town where Keith knows the keeper of a boarding-hous. He places the girl in charge of the keeper, Mrs. Murphy (Alberta Lee). The girl tells Keith that she is searching for her sister, who has been missing for some time. Black Bart turns up later, and asks to see Hope, the girl. He asks her to impersonate a girl, whom she resembles, so that she will be able to cash a check, which is made out in the name of Hope Waite, and which check Black Bart had stolen from a member of the squatter family whom he had thought murdered. Hope realizes that her sister is somewhere in the neighborhood. Her father whom she suspected murdered turns up, and recognizes her as his missing daughter. Christie McClaire arrives in town. The father recognizes her as the only sister. The two sisters and father are united. Hope has gained possession of the check, which is rightfully hers, and Black Bart and his gang are arrested. The ranger and Hope decide to become partners.

TRIANGLE'S creation of Arthur Stringer's story, "The Button Thief," for presentation on the screen under the title, "From Two to Six," affords Winifred Allen and Earle Fox a corking good opportunity to combine nice bits of straight comedy with touches of the mysterious and a few mild thrills thrown in for good measure. Considering that the author has inculcated some very mysterious mystery in his work, Director Albert Parker has done some good work with this production. It ranks in the better class of Triangle productions, and although it hasn't the inherent qualities of a world beater, it will prove satisfactory to the average audience and will leave a most favorable impression.

"From Two to Six" was produced in the East under the supervision of Allan Dwan. Much of the action centres around one of New York's best known hostelries. The mystery element has been brought out with prominence and the suspense has been sustained until the curtain. The opening reels disclose a most picturesque suburban home and the shots registered by Roy Vaughn, the camera man, in this locale, are excellent treatment for sore eyes. Director Parker has planted the mysterious element with the first flash on the screen. Interest is aroused from the start and held throughout.

Winifred Allen, with Earle Fox doing the honors opposite, adds a refreshing touch to this production which is not lost on an audience. Miss Allen can register a smile and roll her big eyes with all the grace and winsomeness of perfecton. She carries her responsibilities with the ease and naturalness of an artist. Mr. Fox puts over the light comedy with a mild bang, is a good type for the part and works to advantage with Miss Allen. The two should be seen more often together in light comedy drama.

Robert Fischer presents a heavy character role with appreciation. His characterization is done with ability. Forrest Robinson is seen in less than a reel of the total reelage, but in that time he does effective work. Margaret Greene presents the villainess with a real villainess's look. Clarence Handyside, Charles E. Wells, Madeline Marshall, Amy Somers and Riley Hatch have minor roles which they handle well. The cast in general does effective work. Thomas F. Tracey assisted in the direction. The photography is done well and is clear at all times. The illustrated sub-titles add not a little to Triangle productions.

THE STORY AND THE PLAYERS

Alice Stevens (Winifred Allen) lives with her father, John Stevens (Forrest Robinson), an inventor in a suburb of New York. He has invented a device to rid the sea of submarines. Baron von Wiederholtz (Robert Fischer), a German spy, assisted by Countess Elsa (Margaret Greene) and Richard Steele (Clarence Handyside), learn of the invention, and the Countess obtains possession of the plans. Alice goes to New York to recover them.

Howard Steele (Earle Fox) likes Margaret Worth (Madeline Marshall), but when his and her father get together and arrange for a marriage between the two, the young people rebel. Howard and Margaret live in the same hotel at which the Baron is living. Howard's father locks him in his room, and he escapes through the window and enters the Baron's suite. While there the Baron enters, and, Howard concealed from view, sees him hide the plans. Later Alice, who has learned where the Baron is stopping, gets access to the Baron's suite, and searches for the plans. Howard directs her to the spot where they are hidden, after knocking the Baron senseless. Alice recovers the plans, and, as a reward, Howard asks her to marry him. They gain entrance to his room through the window, and then go to his father's room, where a minister is waiting to marry Howard and Margaret. Howard arranges with Margaret to let the ceremony go on, and he and Alice are united. The Baron and his confederates are arrested, and Alice returns to her father with the plans and a husband.

MARC MACDERMOTT works like the artist that he is, opposite Alice Joyce in Robert W. Chambers' latest work to be adapted to the screen by Vitagraph, "Between Friends," presented on the screen under the title, "The Woman Between Friends." Miss Joyce and Mr. MacDermott are two ideal types for Mr. Chambers' principal characters, and each merit the confidence placed in them by the casting director. Tom Terriss could not possibly find a better press agent or one that would shout his praises louder than this creation—it speaks in high terms of his directorial ability. As it stands, "The Woman Between Friends" is a good example of dramatic production. If Director Terriss had kept to earth and not reached into the clouds for the mystic and drew upon the allegorical for a number of the scenes toward the climax, he would have had a program masterpiece to his credit. In the minds of some, these mystic touches may seem to add strength to this production, but in the opinion of the reviewer they sap it, considered as a drama, of dramatic strength.

Robert W. Chambers furnished the stepping stones to a good dramatic creation for presentation on the screen. He endowed his characters with human attributes and these human attributes he has clothed in incidents which happen, not once in a life time, but as many times as there are numbered, friends. The friends may be artists, as in this case, or they may be friends in other walks of life, but if friends, invariably they have been placed at dagger points because of the green-eyed monster coming between them. Only friends will deceive one another as Graylock deceived Drene.

With the introduction of Graylock and Drene, an audience will follow every flash on the screen that depicts events in the lives of these two characters. The one presented by Mr. MacDermott with fine appreciation, with dramatic ability and with wholesouled emotional feeling, and the other by Robert Walker with appreciation although he does not reach the heights of dramatic impersonation, registered by Mr. MacDermott. He does, however, give a very credible performance especially in the latter scenes when he is called upon to do his "darndest." He does.

Until the latter reels Miss Joyce has only to smile her way to victory. It is in the final reels that she is given the opportunity to hit the high spots and she does it with fine dramatic results. She presents a picture that will linger long after the scenes have flitted past the gold fibre. She registers with every smile, with every look of compassion, with every show of surprise and with every glance of affection. Edith Speare and Katherine Lewis complete the cast of principals. Miss Speare has a semi-vampirish role and her interpretation of same is credible. Miss Lewis has only a bit but this bit is done with a winning smile and an eagerness which points to better things. A. B. Conkwright, seen in a minor role, is a fine type and convinces in his bit. Mr. Walker appears in one scene wearing a dinner coat topped with a silk hat. The action is laid in Paris—perhaps the Parisians wear this combination. The photography could not be rendered more clear. Mr. Chambers' original title would seem to be the stronger and more meaning of the two.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Drene (Marc MacDermott) and Jack Graylock (Robert Walker) are artist friends. On the eve of Drene's wedding, the two declare eternal friendship, vowing never to let anyone come between their friendship. Drene is a sculptor, and after his marriage he becomes so engrossed in his work that he neglects his wife (Edith Speare) and Graylock who is a frequent caller at Drene's studio, becomes fascinated with Mrs. Speare and the two are seen often together.

One morning Drene finds a letter left by his wife, telling him she has left. Drene then wakes to the realization that he has neglected her. He gives up his work and becomes despondent. Graylock professing to aid Drene, goes to Nice where Mrs. Drene has gone and they live as man and wife. Drene later goes to Paris to forget. He renews acquaintance with Cecelia (Alice Joyce), a flower girl.

Graylock induces Cecelia to pose for him. While she is in his studio, Mrs. Drene enters and tells her of Graylock's past. Soon after Drene and Graylock meet at a carnival. Mrs. Drene is there in mask. Her gown catches fire and she is burned to death. Drene recognizes her as his wife. Drene and Graylock return to Paris from Nice. Graylock writes Cecelia asking her to come to Paris to pose for him. She does and lives with Drene's housekeeper. Drene shows her a picture of his dead wife. She tells him that she knew the woman as Mrs. Graylock. Drene then realizes that his friend has betrayed him. He goes to Graylock's apartment and forces him to pledge that he will kill himself on a certain day. The day arrives and Drene fearing that his friend will carry out his pledge, sends Cecilia to his room. He has shot himself but recovers. Cecilia and Drene are married and Graylock is left an outcast by his friends.

" The Guilty Man "

(Paramount-Ince—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AN attempted revision of the story subsequent to its production and editing that is more or less ruthless subtracts materially from the strength of "The Guilty Man" as it was presented on the stage by A. H. Woods. This revision, evidently undertaken to appease the more particular of the censors, consists of the introduction of a number of irrelevant subtitles in the initial reel which, instead of carrying out the idea suggested in the action itself, that Marie is Claude's mistress, switch their relationship to that of husband and wife. Consequently Claude's father is obliged to insist upon a divorce that the story may proceed, instead of a separation of his son from the woman, he might have been justified in believing was bad, a proceeding which was current in the play and which was meant to be current in the picture.

If this relationship of Marie and Claude was only the beginning, then the work of the editor might be passed over as only affecting the immediate action, but on it rests the foundation of the entire structure of "The Guilty Man." With the climax, when Claude realizes that he must prosecute his own daughter, he confesses to the court that he is the guilty man. Surely there would be greater strength to this situation had he laid bare his past for the sake of his illegitimate daughter. The moral of the original play pointed a scathing finger at the double standard; the moral of the picture is a weak attack against divorce. And several times through the picture appear references to the early relations of Claude and Marie. Marie marries again, for instance, in order to give her daughter a name, when she already had a perfectly good name in Claude's. In other words, the action and the useless revisions planned by the editor are constantly contradicting one another, a state of affairs that by no means furthers the interests of complete entertainment.

The editing throughout is none of the best. The flashes are too short and the action often jumpy. It appears to be a carelessly-made version of the play rather than a carefully prepared adaptation. The direction of Irvin Willat is commendable, G. Harold Percival's sets are realistic and the photography by Dwight Warren is all that could be desired.

"The Guilty Man" was originally a French novel by Francois Coppee. The stage version which Mr. Woods presented in New York was made by the late Charles Klein. It had a successful run—was daring and sensational. The picture has its dramatic moments, the death of Flambon and the court-room confession of Claude being among them—but it is not the thrilling success of its spoken predecessor. Gloria Hope as Marie's daughter gives a humanly appealing performance and William Garwood is an acceptable though not dominant Claude. Vivian Reed is charming as Marie in youth but overacts in her efforts to play the same character after twenty-five years or more. George French, Hal Cooley, Hayward Mack, John Steppling and J. P. Lockney appear to advantage.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Forced by his father (J. P. Lockney) to divorce his wife, Marie (Vivian Reed), and take up the pursuit of law, Claude Lescuyer (William Garwood) goes out of her life for a quarter of a century. During this time she married Flambon (George French) to give her child, Claudine (Gloria Hope), a name. Flambon is the personification of cruelty and selfishness. He plans marrying Claudine to Jean (John Steppling), his chief creditor. When she refuses he beats her and in a rage attacks Marie, believing she has influenced the child. To protect her mother from the brute, Claudine shoots him. Claude, now prosecuting attorney, refuses to consider the child innocent until he learns the story of Marie's past and realizes with horror that he is the guilty man. In the crowded court room he denounces the father of the child as being responsible for the condition of the mother and consequently responsible for the child's act. He then reveals himself as the father and pleads as a citizen for leniency to Claudine. This is granted and the last scene shows Claude reunited with Marie, while Claudine is happy with her Gaston (Hal Cooley).

" A Mother's Sin "

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

HILDA SHARPE has not tried for the original in her story, "A Mother's Sin," which Vitagraph has reproduced for photodramatic presentation under the direction of Tom Mills with Earle Williams presenting the featured role. Miriam Miles is opposite in the principal feminine role, and Denton Vane and Ernest Maupain portray the heavy roles. The picture is credited with few, if any, tense moments, the suspense is broken and revived with weak results, and the general theme is not uncommon to that which has been illuminated by many other reproductions for the silent drama. It presents an average drama, and offers Mr. Williams in one of his poorest portrayals before the camera. The fault is not Mr. Williams, but is an inherent quality in the script due to lack of real sustaining material and action.

Tom Mills has brought out the salient points of the script with as effective results as could be obtained. He was not put to reproduction of difficult situations or the creation of subtle action. He was, however, confronted with the lack of sufficient material for five reels of pictures. He had plenty of material, but little resembling strength of purpose and result.

"A Mother's Sin" is a good title. It promises more than it gives in sound entertainment. Shortly after the run of the third reel, the suspense is broken, and from then on an audience can anticipate much of what is to follow, and is convinced of the result as depicted in the climax. In spots the picture presents mild tenseness, but only in spots. When the audience is prepared for something new to break, the suspense breaks instead because of the failure of the author to treat her story with more technique and subtleness of introduction and exposition.

Earle Williams has little difficulty in meeting the demands of his part. At no time is he called upon to display strength in dramatic interpretation. Miriam Miles does good work opposite Mr. Williams. Ernest Maupain is seen to fine advantage in a heavy role, as is Denton Vane, whose character work in Vitagraph productions is commendable. Fred Peters, Charles Horton, Louise De Pre and Eleanor Lawson are seen in lesser roles. The photography is clear, and there are some delightful exterior shots registered.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Patrick Yardley (Earle Williams) has squandered his allowance and goes to Melden Hall, the home of his father (Ernest Maupain), for money. His father tells Patrick that he has purposely allowed him to squander his allowance to ruin him because of his resemblance to his mother who had left him years before. Vincent Tessier (Denton Vane), a nephew is the favorite of Patrick's father. Patrick leaves the house and goes to Paris.

His father learns of the betrayal of a young girl and her betrayal is attributed to Patrick. Vincent has masqueraded under Patrick's name. Later he learns that Vincent is the real offender and shortly before his death he makes a new will, leaving the estate to Patrick. The original will is probated and Vincent comes into possession of the estate.

Celia Graham (Miriam Miles) whom Patrick loved had been persuaded by her mother to renounce Patrick in favor of Vincent, since Vincent came into possession of the estate. Patrick returns and his friend, a lawyer, announces that he has discovered the last will of his father, leaving the estate to Patrick. The claim is proved and Patrick is given the estate. Vincent is ousted. Celia has loved Patrick through it all but her mother had insisted upon her announcing her engagement to Vincent. Vincent is slain in an argument with a blackmailing valet, formerly with Patrick. Patrick and Celia are re-united.

"The Song of Songs"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE Song of Songs" is Elsie Ferguson's latest screen triumph. It is based on the play by Edward Sheldon which, in turn, was an adaptation of Sudermann's novel. It offers Miss Ferguson the role of Lily Kardos, a temperamental young woman who seeks the answer to her Song of Songs. First married to a man many years her senior she looks in vain for her happiness in his home, later as the mistress of a man of the world she again fails to find the answer. When, however, true love is finally hers the fruits of it are denied her for she refuses to so endanger the happiness of the right man by marrying him.

Miss Ferguson's ability to feel her part to its very depths was never more apparent than in "The Song of Songs." It is a deeply sympathetic part and the actress makes you feel it with her every minute of the way. She has received fine support from the three leading men, Frank Losee as the old husband, Craufurd Kent as Laird, the second man, and Cyril Fletcher as the youth with ideals.

"The Song of Songs" probably contains a more extensive popular appeal than any of Miss Ferguson's previous releases. The appeal furnished by the central character and the dramatic force contained in the various crucial moments of her career as pictured creating an entertainment that is at all times absorbing to the letter.

Charles Maigne prepared his continuity from Mr. Sheldon's play and it is complete in every detail. The piece was lavishly and artistically staged by the late Joseph Kaufman and its average as a sample of photographic work is high.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lily Kardos (Elsie Ferguson) has inherited her father's quick temperament. Left alone in the world when just entering her twenties she secures employment in an Oriental store where she meets Senator Calkins (Frank Losee), who pays her marked attentions. Though, at first they are in no way honorable, he finally proposes marriage to her, seeing that this is the only way to win her. She accepts and for a time leads a mildly happy existence as Mrs. Calkins. The senator's housekeeper (Corinne Uzell), once deceived by him, plans to spoil his happiness. Posing as Lily over the 'phone she arranges a midnight meeting with Dick Laird (Craufurd Kent) and then acquaints Calkins of it. Dick enters Lily's room when she is preparing to retire. She resists his embraces but he takes her in his arms just as the senator enters the room. He refuses to believe her innocence and bids her begone with Laird. And so Lily lives with Laird for a time, believing herself happy until she meets Stephen Bennett (Cyril Fltecher), a young musician, full of high ideals. He falls desperately in love with her and she with him and even after Lily acquaints him with her past does he persist in his attentions. He proposes marriage and asks her to dine on a certain night with him and his father (Ned Burton). The senior Bennett is aware of Lily's character and plans to shatter his son's illusions. At the dinner he succeeds in getting her drunk. But Stephen realizes his father's trick and still asks for Lily's hand. She, however, realizes that their happiness would be only short-lived, considering the life she has led, refuses him and stays with Laird.

Henry Leone and Gertrude Berkley as Lily's parents contribute fine characterizations in the first few scenes of the picture.

"The Knife"

(Select—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE KNIFE" by Eugene Walter was a real "hair raiser" as a play. It was sensational and terrible—the revenge of a doctor on the two who ravaged his fiancee was terrific and it made the spectator sit almost breathless at the thought of it. Charles Maigne who made the picture adaptation was obliged to tone it down considerably. What the censor boards would have done to the play had it been pictured as originally written would have resembled an oak after it had been jaggedly hacked down by a woodman. So Mr. Maigne evidently anticipated such an action and beat the censors to it by sawing the tree cleanly through. As a result the oak—or the picture—isn't so towering, so terrible in its strength, because the hand of more modest man has leveled it down.

Mr. Walter, it will be remembered in connection with "The Easiest Way," doesn't thing much of pictures and probably his opinion will be in no wise improved by "The Knife." However if his drama had been allowed to go through as he wrote it for the stage, there would probably be many who wouldn't think so much of Mr. Walter. The doctor in the play for revenge inoculates his two victims with the germ of a disease—always referred to in whispers. This would hardly please the family audience although it might please Broadway. And certainly the producers are to be congratulated on leaving it out—that is reference to the disease. For all the subtitles tell it might as well be chicken pox or whooping cough. But while this omission is commendable in one way, it is bad in another. The play hinges on it to a certain extent and without any suggestion of it some of its dramatic strength takes to itself wings.

But for the greater part of the way "The Knife" proves absorbing. Kate's ventures in the city ending with her capture by slavers hold the interest undivided. The doctor's planned revenge, though it will be befogged to one not familiar with the play, has much suspense because something dreadfully serious is suggested. The finale, however, leaves one considerably in the dark. Just why the district attorney should relent and decline to prosecute the doctor is not made clear save for the statement that his "experimenting will make his name revered wherever there is medicine." The climax is, indeed, weak considering the strength of the body of the picture. It seems to be chopped off and ended because the fifth reel has run out.

Alice Brady plays with feeling as Kate Tarleton, the wronged woman, and Frank Morgan does strong work as the doctor. Crauford Kent, Paul Doucet, Alice Hollister and Helen Lackaye give excellent support. Robert Vignola directed and H. L. Physioc photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kate Tarleton (Alice Brady), in New York visiting her fiance, Dr. Robert Manning (Frank Morgan), is trapped by white slavers and while drugged meets a terrible fate. Rescued by Manning, his attorney (Crauford Kent) and a private detective, Manning, plans to make the slavers, the worthless ones, pay to humanity, by experimenting on them. He inoculates them, Jimmy (Paul Doucet), and Stella (Alice Hollister), with an incurable disease. Kate is sent home to the south and here under the care of Dr. Meredith (Helen Lackaye) is nursed to health and made to believe her experience in New York was nothing but the visionings of a disordered mind. Stella dies from the inoculation and this brings the district attorney (Edward Davis) on Dr. Manning demanding an explanation. Jimmy, recovered, and so proving Manning's experiment a success, is the alibi and so the district attorney agrees to keep quiet.

"The Hidden Hand"

(Pathe—Twelfth Episode)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THERE is, after all, a limit to the thrilling power of thrills. The impossible will convince as long as the act is quicker than the eye, and up to this episode the producers of "The Hidden Hand" have kept within the limits. But "The Eyes in the Wall" as this number is called, finds Ramsey plucking Doris from out the air into which she has been hurled by Dr. Scarley. The villainous M. D. flings the helpless heroine off a stairway platform with intent to kill, but Ramsey, on the platform below, pulls her in to safety. This is quite too far-fetched to provide any other sensation except a laugh.

In the final reel Doris, again tied hand and foot, falls from a window and it is only due to a chance happening that she is prevented from hitting the ground head first. In this plight the twelfth episode leaves her. The remaining action is filled with plotting and counterplotting bearing similarity to that which was present in the former numbers.

"CARMEN OF THE KLONDIKE" is Monte M. Katterjohn's latest contribution to the library of Alaskan pictures, which prove so alluring to the modern-day public. And if the ordinary Alaskan picture is successful then "Carmen of the Klondike" with its title suggesting something unusually big and with its action which rises gloriously to early formed expectations, should prove as good a money getter as the never-to-be-forgotten "Spoilers." It deals with a wild and open country, where primitive passions sway the settlers, where fights and broken heads and suddenly stilled hearts are as common as mosquitoes in New Jersey, where law and order go down in the mud of the streets and the spittoons of the dance hall, where might is right and where the weakling has about as much show as a small snow-ball on a sunny August afternoon in the south.

Such a picture remands a pretentious production and this Katterjohn's "Carmen" has received at the capable hands of Director Reginald Barker. A single Alaskan street stretches out before the eye for the length of three city blocks—surging with eager gold seekers who flounder about in the thick mud ever struggling to be the first in the land of promise further north. The dance hall is bigger than anything the civilized portion of the country has ever called its own. It, too, stretches back farther than the eye can reach and it is jammed full to the doors with all varieties of drunks, prospectors with hopes upraised, prospectors with hopes blasted, chorus girls, chorus women and sundry characters.

A big snow storm, an effect that is as marvelous as it is realistic, through which the gold seekers madly tear when a big strike is rumored holds a prominent place in the picture. And with the finale there is a drenching rainstorm, equally as effective. In this the hero and the villain stage a fight that is one of the best the writer has ever seen. It lasts a full half reel including all intermediary flashes and the pair are actually bathed in mud from head to foot before it is over. This creates a fitting climax to a story that has any number of wonderfully strong moments. As for the story suffice it to say that it deserves all the space allotted it. It is big enough and staged so lavishly that the added amount of reelage is hardly noticed.

Clara Williams as heroine, Ed Coxen as hero and Herschel Mayall as the heavy are the trio of leading players and their work is in keeping with the spirit of the story from start to finish. The camera work by Robert Newhard is exceptional.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dorothy Harlan (Clara Williams), vaudeville performer, journeys to Alaska to surprise her fiance, Cameron Stewart (Edward Coxen), a prospector and lawyer. On the boat Silk MacDonald (Herschel Mayall), boss of a certain town, attempts to make a hit with Dorothy and, unsuccessful, plans a revenge when the boat lands. Sending for Stewart he dopes him and throws him on a dirty bed. When Dorothy enters to surprise him she discovers a slovenly woman lying by his side. Believing him unfaithful she takes a position in Silk's dance hall to earn money for her transportation home. Silk tries in various ways to win her and she, in the vernacular, "kids him along." When he is recovered, Stewart is at a loss to discover a reason for Dorothy's attitude toward him. A new gold strike is reported and Stewart and Silk are among those who join in the rush. Stewart stakes his claim but Silk plays unfairly. He stabs Stewart and leaves him for dead in the snow and jumping the claim hastens back to town. It is only through the services of a friendly prospector who rushes back with Stewart's claim and who enlists Dorothy's aid in registering it before Silk that Stewart's mine is saved. On the way back, Stewart learns from the woman who participated in the frameup the reason of Dorothy's change. He hastens back to town, just in time in time to rescue Dorothy from Silk's clutches and to engage in a furious fight with him. Another man who has suffered at Silk's hands, shoots him just as he is about to shoot Stewart with a borrowed gun. When Stewart recovers he finds Dorothy tending him, eager to forgive.

"Whims of Society"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"WHIMS of Society," by William Addison Lathrop, in which Ethel Clayton is featured is a story of the poor but honest working gur-r-l. She labors in a factory at nine dollars per week until the owner's son persuades her to retire and live on his bounty. But it is all perfectly all right for the son's intentions are quite honorable and a marriage takes place later on.

The plot presents this story set in a theme that presents an arrangement of modern social conditions, exposes the hypocrisy of some of the supposedly sincere social workers and which would erase the dividing line between the wealthy and the poor. It is an interestingly developed story, one which gives Miss Clayton several opportunities to demonstrate her ability as an emotional actress and which includes the desired number of melodramatic punches.

Frank Mayo appears as hero while Jack Drumier, Frank Beamish, Katherine Johnson, Pinna Nesbit and Zadee Burbank complete the cast. The production is average. Perhaps the clothes worn by the heroine and her younger sister will appear unusually good for nine dollars a week but otherwise the scenes are realistic. Travers Vale directed and Max Schneider photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nora Carey (Ethel Clayton) supports herself and her sister (Katherine Johnson) by working in the ribbon factory operated by Travers (Jack Drumier), and his son, Hugh (Frank Mayo). She is forced to bear the insults of the foreman, Marlinoff (Frank Beamish) until one evening he forces his attentions upon her in her room. Hugh comes to the rescue and ejects him but the next day Nora is discharged. Pitying her, Hugh provides for her and sends her sister away to boarding school. The elder Travers becomes engaged to Eleanor Van Schuyler (Pinna Nesbit), possessed of a fine name but lacking in funds. Marlinoff, enraged that Hugh should have taken Nora's part, tells Travers of his interest in the girl. Insulted, Travers discharges him. But he discovers the truth in the foreman's words and visiting Nora denounces her. She in turn heaps scorn on him for becoming engaged to Eleanor, the fortune seeker. Marlinoff, furious at his discharge, sets a bomb in the ribbon factory which explodes just as Travers is about to sign a new will disinheriting his son. He is killed before he can attach his signature to the paper. Hugh marries Nora.

EXHIBITORS' PERSONALS

ARIZONA

Edward J. Cooper, manager of the Columbia theatre, Phoenix, has been appointed state representative on the newly organized national committee which is to co-ordinate the work of the motion picture industry with that of the Government in furthering the nation's cause in the war. The appointment comes from William A. Brady, whom President Wilson asked to form such a committee.

George D. Mullen, former manager of the old Wigwam theatre on North First Avenue, Phoenix, has had the place remodeled and renovated with the intention of showing motion pictures. The building has been made strictly fireproof, the seating capacity increased and rest rooms for its patrons installed, and the theatre in its new garb was formally opened last week to capacity business.

The Royal theatre of Bisbee was opened recently under the management of L. T. Gaines and W. W. Garrett, recently owners and managers of the Martin theatre at Globe.

MASSACHUSETTS

Charles W. Radcliffe has disposed of the Strand theatre at Holyoke to George Gordon of Springfield, and Mr. Gordon has already assumed active management.

A. A. Spitz, who is building a new theatre in Fall River, which promises to eclipse anything built before in that city, reports that the house is near completion, and expects to be ready within a very short time.

MINNESOTA

W. F. Atkinson of Minneapolis has leased the United theatre at Hutchinson.

MISSOURI

Howard O. Saunders has leased a half interest in the New Janus theatre at Shebina, and will devote all of his time to its management.

Dubinsky Bros. (Maurice and Edward) have sold their interest in the Grand theatre, Kansas City, to the Grand Theatre Company, owner of the building wherein the theatre is situated. Pressure of other business prompted the sale.

NEBRASKA

Sam Truele of Denver is the new owner of the Strand theatre at Hastings, having bought out C. Martin's interests.

F. Nesbit has renamed the World theatre, Falls City, the Empress, and will play vaudeville and short reels.

W. E. Riffle sold his theatre at Sterling to M. R. Shandy, and immediately assumed charge of the Dixie theatre at Clay Center.

J. W. Woolstenholm, for thirty years a dry goods merchant at Grand Island, has retired from other lines of work to run the Majestic theatre, which he has been conducting as a side issue for years. He has remodeled the house, which is one of the best in its part of the state. It has 1,000 seats. "There is money in the moving picture business if square and progressive methods be employed," said Mr. Woolstenholm.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Delbert Smith, formerly part owner of the Empire theatre, East Manchester, has bought out his partner Earle C. Thompson and assumed the personal management of the house.

NEW MEXICO

H. F. Blackwell has leased the Crystal theatre, Albuquerque, from the Barnett Amusement Company.

NEW YORK

Stiles and Merriam, proprietors of The Daily Argus, Mount Vernon, have purchased The Strand theatre, located on First street and Second avenue, Mount Vernon. They contemplate making extensive alterations when the building will be used in its entirety by the Argus.

Edward Fay, owner and manager of Fay's theatre, Providence, Rhode Island, has just leased the Avon theatre in Rochester, N. Y., where he intends to put on vaudeville and photoplays, and run on about the same base on which he has made such a success of his Providence house.

OHIO

A combination has been effected in Elyria, whereby all the theatres in that city will be operated by the Elyria Theatre Company. The last independent house in Elyria, the American, was recently purchased by the company from John Prkras. Mr. Prkras, an old exhibitor, has retired from the business, and is now engaged in the manufacturing of rubber heels.

The Elyria Theatre Company now controls the American, the Strand, Dreamland, Rialto and Bannon's. Officers of the company are: Henry Wurst, president; Christ Neufert, treasurer; E. J. Georgople, general manager, and Melton Phelos and O. J. Bannon, assistant general managers.

PENNSYLVANIA

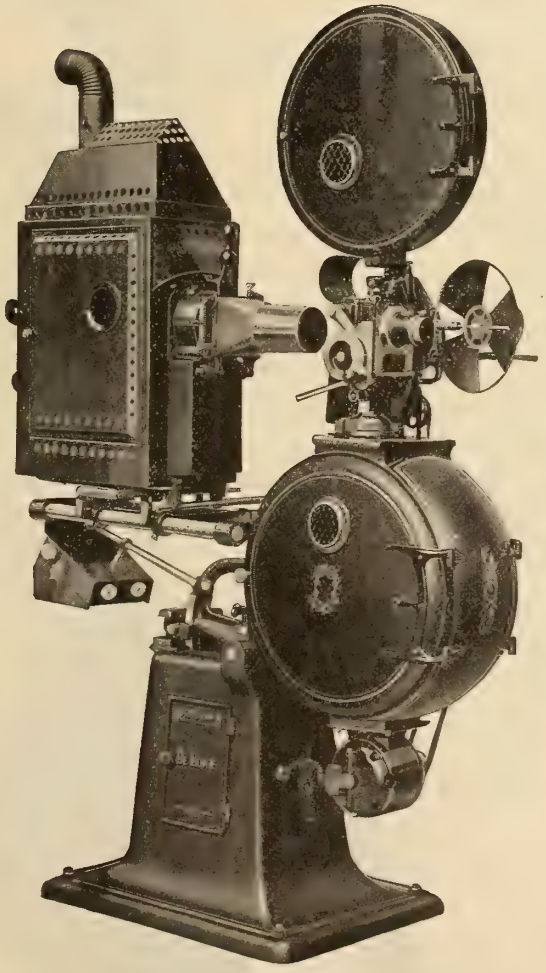
George J. Higgins and his son John, owners and proprietors of the new and old Majestic theatres, Shamokin, have leased the Arcade theatre, and reopened it a week or so ago to capacity business.

The Gem theatre, near Mahoning street, Punxsutawney, has been purchased from W. S. Dinsmore by James M. Weist, former manager of the Jefferson theatre. The new manager is planning to build an extension to the house.

George Bros., proprietors of the Victoria theatre, Market street, Harrisburg, Pa., are remodeling the front of their theatre and the adjoining building, where they conduct the Palace Confectionery store, so as to provide a uniform front to connect the two businesses. The work of putting in the new front is being done on the Fuel Administration's fuelless Tuesdays, so as not to interfere with business on the days when motion picture exhibitions are permitted by the Government.

SOUTH DAKOTA

J. H. and A. L. Hess have purchased the Lyric and Yankton theatres at Yankton, both of which will be improved and reopened in due course.



TENNESSEE

Misses Aileen Fisher and Pauline Bruner, two popular young women of Morristown, have bought the Princess theatre in that town and will personally undertake its management.

SERVICE

Projection

Before the house is built the entire projection system should be plotted out. The projection room should be carefully planned, and just what equipment is needed to obtain the best results should be selected. This takes experience and knowledge, which can only be obtained from an authority on projection. MOTION PICTURE NEWS offers this cooperation—it is part of its service. We also answer any and all questions which may be troubling those who have already installed their equipment.

Music

Musical equipment is forty per cent. of the success of any house. The house with the best music always beats out competition. Advice is often necessary in the selection of this necessary part of the show. We have two men experienced in the selection of music for the picture. These men are always at your service. This is also a part of our exhibitors' service, and we hope you will take advantage of it.

Photography

Many exhibitors today are taking their own local pictures with great success. Others are desirous of doing so. The selection of a camera and its manipulation are difficult problems for the novice. The value of light effects is hard to comprehend. MOTION PICTURE NEWS, also as part of its service, has an authority on photography on its regular staff. He is ready at any time to cooperate and give advice on any of the various problems which confront the exhibitor who takes his own pictures.

Calculations on Spherical Aberration

By Simon Arkin

[Reprinted with permission from the "Optical Journal and Review"]

IF the diameter of a lens is large in comparison with its radius of curvature, all parallel incident rays are not brought to a focus at F, since the rays near the center intersect at F, whereas the rays near the edges intersect at G, and the intermediate rays meet at points between F and G. The distance F G represents the total spherical aberration.

The shape of the lens is a determining factor in the study of spherical aberration, but it is hard to find in books on optics information as to what shaped lens is best for a given purpose. The only formula I find for a single lens most nearly free from spherical aberration is

$$\frac{r_1}{r_2} = \frac{4 + n - 2n^2}{2n^2 + n}$$

This gives a cross-spherical lens whose shorter radius is r_1, longer radius is r_2 and whose refractive index is n. When n is 1.50, $r_1 = 1$ and $r_2 = 6$. Considering the above, I determined to investigate the whole matter by original calculations. The lenses I selected are of four different shapes. Figs. 2 and 5 show lenses of identical shape but with opposite surfaces facing the incident light.

The lenses here shown, drawn to scale, are condensers such as are used in projecting motion pictures. These lenses are 4½ inches in diameter, and their large size makes it easy to exhibit the results of the calculations very clearly. They are divided, in the drawings, by lines, or rays, into six parts; the lines are parallel and are 0.75 or ¾ of an inch apart. The refracted rays A*a* and B*b*, on account of their well conditioned angles, give results which are readily shown here. The distance ab represents the spherical aberration for the part of the lens between AB and BA; the distance *b*F corresponds to the part of the lens between BC and CB; G*a* corresponds to the part of the lens between A and the edge of the lens, while FG represents the spherical aberration of the whole lens. All the calculations and constructions given in this article are made from the optical center. The center of a thin lens is a point on the principal axis through which a ray will emerge from the lens parallel to its direction of incidence.

The figures are numbered in the order of their freedom from spherical aberration; thus, Fig. 1 has the least and Fig. 5 the most spherical aberration. In designing Fig. 1 various ratios of curva-ture were used in calculating it and the results were the same for

$$\frac{r_2}{r_1} = 6 \text{ to } \frac{r_2}{r_1} = 4. \quad \text{Since } \frac{r_2}{r_1} = 4,$$ is a better shaped lens, it was used for Fig. 1.

The index of refraction (n) used in these calculations is 1.52.

Let ϕ represent the angle which the incident ray makes with the normal in air, and let ϕ' be the angle which the ray makes with the normal in the glass. By the well known law of refraction, $\sin \phi \div \sin \phi'$ is constant for two given media, and this constant is known as the index of refraction (n). In the case of air and ordinary crown glass n is about 1.52.

$\text{Sin } \phi \div 1.52 = \sin \phi'$, and $\sin \phi' \times 1.52 = \sin \phi$.

Radius of plano-convex lens in inches $\div$ 0.52 (the difference in n between air and crown glass) = focal length (F) in inches.

Focal length, in inches, $\times$ 0.52 = radius in inches.

The following method was used to calculate the spherical aberration of the lens shown in Fig. 5, which is the least complicated of all.

$r_1 = 3.25$

Semi-aperture = 2.25

$\frac{2.25}{3.25} = 0.69231 = \sin 43° 48' 40''$

$3.25 \times \cos 43° 48' 40'' = 2.345.$

Then

$3.25 - 2.345 = 0.905$ the thickness of the lens at the center.

distance AC, Fig. 5, = 1.50

$\frac{1.50}{3.25} = 0.46154 = \sin 27° 29' 10''.$

$3.25 \times \cos 27° 29' 10'' = 2.883$

$3.25 - 2.883 = 0.367$

$0.46154 \times 1.52 = 0.70154 = \sin 44° 33' 00''$

$\phi\ 44° 33' 00'' - \phi'\ 27° 29' 10'' = 17° 03' 50''$

$1.50 \times \text{cotangent } 17° 03' 50'' = 4.887.$

$4.887 - 0.367 = 4.520$, the distance (Oa, Fig. 5) from the optical center at which the incident ray A cuts the axis after refraction.

distance BC, Fig. 5, = 0.75

$\frac{0.75}{3.25} = 0.23077 = \sin 13° 20' 30''$

$3.25 \times \cos 13° 20' 30'' = 3.162$

$3.25 - 3.162 = 0.088$

$0.23077 \times 1.52 = 0.35077 = \sin 20° 32' 00''$

$\phi\ 20° 32' 00'' - \phi'\ 13° 20' 30'' = 7° 11' 30''$

$0.75 \times \text{cotangent } 7° 11' 30'' = 5.944$

The parallel incident ray A was previously found to intersect the axis 4.520 inches from the optical center O.

Therefore

$5.944 - (0.088 + 4.520) = 1.336$, the distance ($ab$, Fig. 5) between the points at which the parallel incident rays A and B cut the axis after refraction. The focal length, F, of the lens (the distance OF in the drawings) is determined by the formula

$$\frac{r_1 \times r_2}{(r_1 + r_2) \times (n - 1)}$$

Without giving in detail the calculations for the other lenses, their focal lengths and amount of spherical aberration are as follows:

$$\text{Fig. 1, } F = \frac{4.25 \times 17}{(4.25 + 17) \times 0.52} = 6.54.$$

Summing up the distances between O and F, corresponding to the differences in the points of intersection with the axis of the incident rays A and B, and the edge ray, we have

For Fig. 1, 6.48 + 0.27 + 0.09 = 6.84 inches.

$$\text{For Fig. 2, } F = \frac{3.25}{0.52} = 6.25 \text{ inches}$$

Summing up between O and F, 6.15 + 0.31 + 0.10 = 6.56 inches.

$$\text{For Fig. 3, } -F = \frac{3 \times -18}{(+3 - 18) \times 0.52} = \frac{-54}{-15 \times 0.52}$$

$= +6.92$ inches.

$$\text{For Fig. 4, } F = \frac{6.50 \times 6.50}{(6.50 + 6.50) \times 0.52} = 6.25 \text{ inches.}$$

Fig. 5 shows a lens identical in form with Fig. 2, but it is seen that the spherical aberration is much diminished by presenting the convex side of this lens to the incident light.

SPHERICAL ABERRATION

Film Conditions Improve in Omaha

IT gives us pleasure to print the following letter from John J. Rosecrans, a member of the National Anti-Misframe League, who is located in Sioux City, Iowa. Readers will recall that Mr. Rosecrans recently drew attention in our columns to the numerous and unsightly stencil marks placed in their films by the Omaha Universal exchange, and it will also be recalled that Mr. J. H. Calvert, the present Omaha manager, wrote a gentlemanly letter promising to remedy this condition.

As a proof of the effectiveness of the National Anti-Misframe League, and also of Mr. Calvert's adherence to his promise, Mr. Rosecrans' letter tells the story without need of further comment.

Mr. Rosecrans says:

"I read an article by J. H. Calvert, Universal Film Exchange Manager, Omaha, Nebr., in the February 2 edition of the NEWS, and wish to say a few words to it.

"We are using several brands of Universal service, from the Omaha exchange, chief among them being Bluebird, Butterfly and L-Ko comedies. Before Mr. Calvert assumed active management of the Omaha exchange, Universal was notorious for the excessive number of exchange brands punched in each reel of film, for the number of bad splices, absence of titles, punch holes near the end of each reel of film and heavy coats of oil on leading titles.

"Beginning with the first of this year, I have found a decided improvement in the condition of our service. Our last four shipments from the Omaha exchange have arrived in excellent condition, having clean titles, no punch holes, very few bad splices, and no exchange brands punched in except in main titles and leader films. I think Mr. Calvert is deserving of much praise and credit for such rapid improvement of his service. And, in addition, I think he should have the co-operation of every operator handling his films, whether said operator is a member of the Anti-Misframe League or not.

"The small town operator is deserving of much sympathy for what he doesn't know about the care of machines and particularly the care of films entrusted to him. But the small town operator who persistently returns films to an exchange covered with oil, punched full of change-over punch-marks, and makes a splice by sticking the two ends together any old way, can quickly be checked up by the exchange and nothing but the poorest of films sent to his care until he learns to respect film conditions, and to try to return films in at least as good condition as received, if not better. I practice what I preach and intend to assist Mr. Calvert in every possible way."

Recent Activities of the I. P. A.

THE present winter has been a season of uninterrupted progress for the International Projection Association, and the aim of the Association, which is to pave the way to increased recognition of, and better salaries for, the motion picture operator, by improving his technical and practical knowledge, is deserving of the commendation of the entire industry.

On Friday, January 25, the Association met at their headquarters, 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, to hear a lecture on "Some Optical Considerations Relating to Motion Picture Projection," by Mr. A. S. Cory of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The speaker outlined the limitations of the optical systems now used in cine projection, and threw out some suggestions, which in the hands of operator experimenters, may result in condenser systems of improved capabilities being eventually devised.

The next lecturer scheduled to appear before the Association on Friday, February 8, is Mr. Fred F. Baum of the special Universal Motor Company, who will speak on the subject of "Motors, Generators and Transformers." A lively and interesting discussion is sure to ensue, as there are several "Edisons" amongst the club's personnel. The meeting will be held at 12 midnight, following usual custom.

Great things are being accomplished by the I. P. A. along the line of instruction for the members, as the classes in mathematics are now in full swing, and are being attended by an ever increasing percentage of the members. The subjects treated are Algebra and Geometry which will be followed at the proper time by Trigonometry. The club has a real find in its mathematical instructor, Mr. Edmond McD. Benheim, B.Sc., M.E., who has aroused the enthusiasm of his pupils by his ability to clearly ex-

Speer Carbon Company,

Gentlemen:-
Having worked for several years on A.C. with all its shortcomings, what I feel like saying after giving "Alterno" carbons a good trial is that they are a revelation.
We use A.C. with compensarc and where the use of A.C. in the past has always been with a light of inferior quality regardless of amount used, we find that with "Alterno" carbons we get an even, steady light of remarkable quality without the former worries of noisy, wandering and troublesome arcs.
Very truly yours,

A. J. Lang Has Interesting Sojourn in Porto Rico

A. J. LANG of the Nicholas Power Company has just recently returned from a five weeks' business trip to Porto Rico, and had some interesting observations to make on the exhibiting business there.

He was much surprised to note that in many theatres projection machines of the most archaic type were in use, machines without film magazines being commonly seen, while in some cases the film after passing through the mechanism, was allowed to accumulate in a sack. This latter procedure, as is well known, was the forerunner of the take-up devices on projection machines.

In spite of this seeming inertia, on the part of Porto Rican exhibitors, Mr. Lang reports that they are very anxious to imbibe modern ideas in the way of presenting their shows, and in this they are aided by the perusal of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which is the favorite cine journal on the Island,

The Porto Rican exhibitors are awakening to the importance of proper projection equipment, and as the result of his visit, Mr. Lang states that the future of the Powers Cameragraph looks very rosy, in so far as Porto Rico is concerned, and a number of modern cameragraphs already in use there are regarded with much satisfaction.

Operators' Inquiries

E. M. AMELUNG, Benton Harbor, Mich., "What is the cause of the frequent misframes which occur in the various 'weekly' news films?"

REPLY: As is indicated by the diverse nature of their contents, the weekly news reels are composed of items photographed by many different cameramen in all parts of the world. The cameras used by these widely scattered "correspondents," as they are termed, are of course not all of the same make, and it follows that the aperture line or division between successive film images is different in some cameras than in others. The editors of the weekly films strive to have all of their correspondents adopt the same frame-line, but it cannot always be brought about, and there is no fear of any news film editor turning down a "scoop," or an important and well photographed item, just because the frame-line happens to differ from his standard.

H. SEDGWICK, Hamilton, Ont., "Please explain the 'aerial-image' of the condenser in connection with the distance at which the shutter should be located in front of the lens."

REPLY: When light is passed through a projector optical system, and the region in front of the objective is explored with a white paper screen, a spot is found at which the projected beam is of the smallest cross-section. This section of the projected beam may be either rectangular or round in shape, indicating, respectively, that the condensers are approximately at the proper distance from the machine aperture, or that they are too far from the aperture to permit the entire available amount of light being utilized.

The conditions which must be fulfilled in order to utilize all of the light proceeding from the condensers have been thoroughly treated in our article, "The Regulation of the Rays in Cinematographic Projection Systems," Projection Department, February 9, pages 902-3, and the correspondent is advised to consult the same. It is there pointed out that the narrow section of the beam is not an "aerial-image," but a real image, and this image sometimes coincides with the plane in which the revolving shutter operates, in which event it can be plainly seen on the shutter blades when the machine is running.

It would seem that inasmuch as this image represents the narrowest cross-section of the projected beam, it would be highly advisable to locate the shutter at this point, and it has been recommended by some people, who should know better, to always place the shutter at this narrowest section or so-called "dissolving point" of the rays proceeding from the objective to the screen.

When the narrowest section of the projected beam is near the lens (within 6 inches or so) there is no objection to placing the shutter at that point in the beam; indeed, it seems a logical thing to do, and would, no doubt, permit the width of the cover blade of the shutter to be at a minimum. The strict adherence to the recommendation that the shutter should always operate at the narrowest section of the projected beam, leads to ridiculously impractical consequences, however, when, as frequently occurs, the narrowest cross-section of the projected beam is some 18 inches, or 2 feet, or more, in front of the objective. To carry out the recommendation in such a case requires an extra long shutter shaft, or an extension on the customary shutter shaft, and when the revolving shutter operates at a point far removed from its actuating gears, the vibration and consequent wear on the mechanism are of an extent not calculated to improve the steadiness of the projected picture. It appears, therefore, that the proper position for the revolving shutter should be dictated primarily by common sense, and it is an obvious fact that the pursuit of the so-called "aerial-images" and "dissolving points" sometimes leads to impractical results and altogether undesirable consequences.

The Camera

The Use of Compensating Filters in Cinematography

A STUDY of current film productions attests the fact that artistic cameramen have sueceeded in securing many excellent cloud and sunset effects in their exterior scenes, and these effects appear so consistently nowadays in the more pretentious subjects, and in scenic pictures, that they can no longer be considered a novelty, as they were some years ago.

The orthochromatic emulsion and the compensating filter represent one of the greatest advances in all photography, and it is well known that hardly any subject exists which cannot be more faithfully reproduced by an orthochromatic emulsion, with or without a compensating filter, than is the case with an ordinary, non-color-sensitive emulsion.

Orthochromatism, both in theory and in practice, has been extensively written about, and we believe that the action of compensating filters is also well understood by cameramen. As the result, however, of our study of some of the film pictures photographed, apparently, through compensating filters, we are moved, on the present occasion, to draw attention to some of the optical properties of light filters, because the quality of a filter and the manner in which it is used can influence the definition in the photographic images.

As we write these lines we recall a charming series of films, depicting the scenic wonders of the Western States with an atmosphere and accuracy of tonal values which only the use of panchromatic film and the proper light compensating means (or filter) could yield, but in spite of the fact that minute details for miles about were apparent in the pictures, there was nowhere present that crispness of definition so vitally necessary to the projected cinematographic image. In the case we mention the fault was not with the projecting machine or operator, nor was it the fault of improper printing by the laboratory. Likewise the cameraman had focussed his instrument correctly in the usual manner, and the camera was fitted with a lens of irreproachable defining power.

In order to get the clouds the photographer had, however, employed a compensating filter, placed on the lens after the picture was focussed, and the use of this filter without regard for its optical action caused a loss of crispness in the finished pictures.

The proper use of orthochromatic films and compensating filters is to be encouraged at all times, and the use of a suitable compensating filter with ordinary film also permits some effects to be reproduced which could not be secured otherwise, but it appears advisable to point out that the optical action of a glass light filter should be borne in mind by the cameraman before he attaches the same to his lens and proceeds to make pictures.

Theoretically, the two faces, or surfaces, of a glass light filter should be perfect plane surfaces, and these surfaces should be perfectly parallel to each other, but it is an expensive operation to prepare such slabs of glass, which are termed "optical flats." The ordinary good commercial filters are, therefore, pieces of glass which have their faces quite accurately surfaced and as nearly plane-parallel as can be produced at a nominal manufacturing cost. The filters known as "optical flats" are much thicker than the commercial variety of light filter (something like one-half inch in thickness) because it has been found useless to apply perfectly accurate surfaces to thin plates of glass, since the strains within the plate bend it into what may be termed a meniscus lens, and there is consequently no use in applying accurate surfaces to a plate of glass if the surfaces will not remain flat and parallel to one another.

When a glass light filter is mounted behind a camera objective its effect is to lengthen the focus slightly, and the extent to which the focus is increased is approximately expressed by where n is the refractive index of the glass and d is the thickness of the glass plate or filter. For Crown glass, of which the commercial varieties of light filter are generally made, n is about 1.5, so it is readily seen that in the case of a glass filter located in back of the lens, the focus is lengthened by an amount equal to about one-third of the thickness of the glass plate, or filter. When the filter is mounted in front of the lens its effect on the focal length is nearly negligible, but it will be interesting to many readers to learn that a glass plate, even though perfectly surfaced and with plane-parallel sides, is possessed of a certain amount of aberration. The effect of this aberration on the image has been briefly described by Dr. C. E. K. Mees[1] as follows:

"Suppose that we place in front of a lens a plane-parallel piece of glass, then it will produce upon the oblique rays a displacement compared with the axial beam, which will result in two effects: (a) it will cause a species of spherical aberration all over the field, causing the marginal rays of each image-forming pencil to focus at a greater distance from the lens than its central ray; and (b) on account of the tendency of a small oblique pencil to foreshorten abnormally in the object-plane, the image-plane will be curved backward. These displacements are greatest when the obliquity of the rays is greatest; they also depend upon the thickness of the filters. They will, therefore, be at a maximum when using a thick filter behind a short focus lens working at a wide angle and a high speed, and they will be minimized by the use of thin filters behind long focus lenses, and by placing the filter in front of the lens when the image is smaller than the object."

Dr. Mees calculates the extent of the longitudinal aberration in a light filter, both for axial rays and for oblique rays, from formulæ found in Taylor's "System of Applied Optics," London, 1906. He found that even in the case of a process lens of 16 inches focal length, taking a picture 10 inches by 12 inches, the effect of the filter aberration on the size of the circles of confusion was well within the limits of tolerance.

Although the aberrations and focal differences imposed upon the camera objective by a glass light-filter are in most cases inappreciable in ordinary photographic results, their effects on the cinematographic image are pitilessly revealed when the films are projected, and all cameramen who use compensating filters should therefore be guided by a knowledge of these effects in the selection and use of their filters.

It is first of all apparent that the amount of aberration caused by a thick filter would be much greater in proportion to the focal length of a two-inch cine lens than would the aberration of a filter of like thickness used with a long focus process lens, and from this it will be seen that "optical flats" would be a drawback to crisp definition in cinematography.

As it has also been pointed out that the use of the filter behind the lens induces a change of focal length, it seems most advisable to use the filter in front of the lens, and this will generally be found most convenient in practice. The important requirement when using light filters in cinematography is, however, that regardless of where the filter is placed the scene should be visually focussed with the filter in position, for by so doing the maximum sharpness will be secured in the image, because the effect of aberration and change in focal distance are thus under the control of the photographer. We do not wish to be considered as implying that the aberration caused by the use of a glass light filter in conjunction with a cine camera is of a very severe order, because with a good quality of filter it is very slight, but we would emphasize that when the cameraman focusses the image by observation, and with the filter in place, he is in a position to secure the keenest definition which the combination (of lens and filter) will yield, while the fact that the filter can alter the focal length of the lens renders it necessary to focus with the filter in position if an accurate focus is required.

Barker Bros. Issue Manual of Instruction on K-B Camera

THERE has just come to hand a well illustrated and comprehensively written booklet entitled the "Pocket Manual of Motion Picture Photography," which is issued by Barker Bros., 724-738 South Broadway, Los Angeles, Cal., makers of the K-B combined camera and projector.

The K-B Camera, which was previously described in our columns, is a moderate priced outfit of 200 foot capacity which may also be used as a projector, by adding a lamp attachment, and which, in conjunction with the Stineman patented developing frame and tank, makes a most useful and efficient photographic outfit for the amateur or exhibitor film maker.

It is for the purpose of supplying accurate and concise working instructions to users of K-B camera outfits that the "Manual" has been prepared, although copies may be secured by anyone interested upon remitting 25 cents to the makers of the K-B camera.

The Manual was compiled by Mr. D. P. Lea, a motion picture operator and photographer of long standing on the coast, and Mr. Lee has sought to emphasize the important points of exposure, development and positive printing, as carried out with the K-B camera and the additional accessories which may be used in conjunction by the amateur or exhibitor who is desirous of successfully making scenic and topical pictures.

We believe that many exhibitors, after purchasing a copy of this Manual of Motion Picture photography, would consider the K-B camera described therein to be just the outfit for which they have long been seeking, and as we have seen the K-B outfit demonstrated we can state that it is an efficient mechanism and very good value for the price at which it is sold.

Livingston, of Peoria, Introduces New Projection Light

AN electric light appliance that will fit any standard moving picture machine, that eliminates the flicker on the screen, throws a light said to be 20 per cent stronger than the ordinary carbon light and can be operated at less cost is the invention of M. H. Livingston of Peoria, Illinois.

The Nu-Movie-Lite, as it is called, consists of a large sized, especially made electric bulb, manufactured by the Edison Company, and so shaped as to get the greatest possible amount of light concentration from the power. This bulb fits into a metal container, with a reflector that is designed to throw the light without any refraction, into a series of lenses.

One of the main features of the appliance is its simplicity of operation. Controlled by a single screw lever, it does away with the formidable lineup of control handles which the operator has to manipulate on the ordinary machine in securing a uniform light from the carbon. With the Nu-Movie-Lite attachment fitted to a modern projector there is nothing for the operator to do but keep his picture "framed" on the screen.

Mr. Livingston declares that his invention, besides throwing a light 20 per cent stronger than the ordinary carbon light, is a money saver as well, and can be operated at less cost.

Mattoon Solid for Progress

MR. E. B. WOOD, Mattoon, Ill., writes: "Since I sent in my application and became a member of the N. A. M. L. I have won the Better Service contest which the World Film Corp. instituted, which I think was due to the fact that I am a member of the League, and because they knew I was at the same theatre continuously.

"We have all of the operators in Mattoon, Ill., in the League now, and I hope we get all the operators in the country to join.

"I will send you a slide like the one I am running as soon as I get it made."

Comment: Some of the largest cities in the country could follow to advantage the example of the Mattoon operators, and the operators of other cities who have appreciated the importance to the industry of carrying out the aims of the National Anti-Misframe League.

We look forward with interest to the arrival of the League slide promised by Mr. Wood, and will reproduce the design if it is possible to make a cut of the same.

Music and the Picture

A Real Novelty

The Boston Music Company of 26-28 West Street, Boston, Mass., have recently published an Album containing 12 Concert Compositions, by only "Bohemian Composers." It is entitled "The Album for PIANOFORTE" and does not only present a list of Musical Masterpieces, but is also practical and will supply players with the most reliable and serviceable list of numbers ever offered in book form. To illustrate the value of this album to Motion Picture Pianists, we herewith reprint the contents of same, stating in every case the purpose every composition can be used for.

1—Adagio, by R. Friml. An Andante Espressivo Composition of a Dramatic Character.

2—Minuet, by J. Suk. A ¾ Moderato Menuet of exceptional tonal beauty.

3—"Souvenir de Boheme," by F. Smetana. A Characteristic Composition in various tempos.

4—"Elegy," by K. Nawratil. A Moderato Movement most appropriate for Love Scenes.

5—"Silhouette," by A. Dvorak. A beautiful 4/4 Andantino Sostenuto Movement.

6—Polka, by Z. Fibich.

7—"Song Without Words," by E. Chvala. A melodious Composition splendidly arranged.

8—"Butterflies," by J. Nesvera. A 2/4 Allegretto Grazioso Composition most appropriate for Juvenile Themes.

9—Frolic, by F. Musil. A 2/4 Allegro Etude.

10—Waltz, by J. Slunicko.

11—"Air Classique," by O. Nedbal. A ¾ Adagio Number and very melodious.

12—"Furiant," by V. Novak. A ¾ Presto Composition—a Classic Furioso.

The price of this album is 60 cents per copy for piano solo.

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"America Makes the World Safe for Democracy," by R. E. De Vivo and Sol. P. Levy, a patriotic Song Hit in a class by itself. (Published by the Times Music Co., 145 West 45th Street, New York City.)

2—"Meditation Valse," by N. Kennedy. A dreamy dancing waltz in the style that has been so tremendously popular in recent years. (Chapell and Co. Edition.)

3—"In the Land of Wedding Bells," by Geo. W. Meyer. A splendid Foxtrot arrangement of this new novelty song. (Leo Feist Edition.)

4—"Cleopatra Had a Jazz Band," Foxtrot, by Jack Coogan. A modern musical sidelight on Egyptian history. (Leo Feist Edition.)

5—"Hitchy Koo," a "Selection," "One-step" and "Foxtrot" of this famous Musical Review have been published by M. Witmark.

6—"Moonlight Waltz," by the writer of the famous "Missouri Waltz"—a composition with a wonderful dancing rhythm. (Forster Music Pub. Co., Chicago, Ill.)

7—"Prudence," Entr'acte, by Ernest Luz. A number in gavotte style, effectively arranged. Illustrates romance. Lends itself easily to different tempos, making it valuable for playing to the Photo Play. A melodious number throughout. (J. W. Stern Edition, 102 West 38th Street, New York City.)

8—"Sorrow Theme," by Edouarde Roberts, a composer of international reputation. (This number is offered at a special rate of 30 cents for small and 40 cents for full orchestra by the Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bldg., New York City.)

9—"Astralita Serenade," by Mable A. Whaley. A number which deserves to be owned by any orchestra leaders or piano players. (Published by the Red Star Music Co., Red Star, Ark.)

10—"After the War Is Over," by James A. Casey. Leaders who are in search for something distinctly novel and pretty should send for this number, which in its typical March rhythm is a sure success with any audience. (Published by the Echo Music Co., New York and Seattle.)

11—"My Golden West, I Love You Best," by James W. Casey. The very latest composition of this gifted writer's musical gems; a composition most appropriate for Western Scenes. (Published by the Echo Music Co., New York City and Seattle.)

12—"I Wonder How the Olk Folks Are at Home," a great patriotic home song hit of great value to the Motion Picture Musician. (Vandersloot Music Pub. Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

13—National Airs of the Allies, arranged by T. H. Rollinson, introducing "America" (God Save the King), the "Star Spangled Banner," "La Brabanconne" (Belgian), the Marseillaise (French) and the Royal March of Italy. (Oliver Ditson Edition.)

14—"Easter Fantasia," by M. L. Lake. A wonderfully realistic tone picture which always scores a big success. (Carl Fischer Edition.)

15—G. Schirmer of 3 East 43d Street, New York City, offer their famous "Galaxy Edition," one of the finest editions for the motion picture player, at a special yearly subscription rate. A yearly subscription includes twenty-four numbers or their equivalent in double numbers, two on the first of every month. A half-yearly subscription includes twelve numbers or their equivalent in double numbers, two on the first of every month. Yearly subscription: S. O., $12.50 postpaid; F. O., $15 postpaid. Half-yearly subscription: S. O., $7 postpaid; F. O., $8.50 postpaid. Separate numbers: Single, S. O., $1.25; F. O., $1.50; double, S. O., $1.50; F. O., $1.85. On separate numbers there is a discount of 25 per cent.

Vandersloot's New Vocal Hits

FRED VANDERSLOOT lives and does business in Williamsport, Pa. In a way he has put this town on the map, and he has the record of having sold more copies of a song than any other out-of-town publisher. For years "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight" has been a steady seller, and since the war began it has taken a big jump. Wherever you find the home ballads, the kind that live with folks long after the quick novelty hits have died, you will invariably come across a copy of "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight." Fred has the right idea; he believes in putting out clean songs, and as a result he has built up a big business. Two weeks ago some newspaper dispatches coming from France carried the entire chorus of his "Old Folks Song," which gave Fred quite a pleasant surprise.

At the present time Vandersloot is working on a new number, "Love Melody," by J. R. Shannon. "Love's Melody" is the kind of a song that one would expect to find on the catalog of a high class publisher, for it has nothing to do with hugging, squeezing and girls, but Vandersloot is not worried in the least about its selling possibilties, as he has built up a large following among the trade and public for this type of song. The lyric is somewhat of a reverie with the personal element implied. The excellence of the melody, as well as its sweetness, is going to carry the number to many high class concerts, and will become a favorite with the better class of singers.

Besides having this winner, Vandersloot has a son who is at one of the naval training stations. Carl, his son, entered the service in January and has been making rapid progress ever since. In addition to being a member of the service he is also the composer of "The Fight Is On," march and two-step, and "Our Sammies," march or one-step. Both numbers have been published by The Vandersloot Music Co. and are doing very well with the leaders and trade.

Leo Feist is another who is making quite a play on high class songs. "Sing Me Love's Lullaby" is now being featured by Madame Frances Alda of the Metropolitan Ouera Company. The number has been recorded for the Victor Talking Machine Co., by Madame Alda, and for the Victor Record by Tom Lamere. Henry Burr has made a record of it for the Columbia people.

Feist has great faith in the number, which was written by Dorothy Terriss and Theordore, and feels confident that it will outsell Morse's "Dear Old Girl," published some years ago and still a steady seller.

Just now there appears to be a general trend toward the better class of ballads. Musicians and dealers find that the demand for high class and semi-high class ballads has grown rapidly during the past year. Even small publishers with first class ballads, who ordinarily would get little recognition owing to their lack of energy and ability to push their numbers as they should, having been doing very well. And the small publisher today is getting a better run for his money than he did for a long time. So it is up to him to get busy and take advantage of the good breaks.

E. M. WICKES.

General Comments

THE Times Music Publishing Co., Inc., has opened offices at 145 West Forty-fifth street and started in with a bang. Rudolph E. De Vico is the president. "America, Make the World Safe for Democracy," by De Vico and Sol. P. Levy, and "That's My Girl," by the same writers, are among the numbers that look to have a good chance of materializing into hits.

VINCENT SHERWOOD, professional manager for The McKinley Music Co., has just turned loose "Lovingless Day," a novelty ballad, by Jack Frost, and "Little Blue Star in the Window," a straight ballad, which are taking well with singers and musicians.

LEO. FEIST has opened a branch office in Cleveland, which will be conducted by E. Hughes.

TELL TAYLOR, the Chicago publisher, is expected to reach New York any day, and will begin activities at 146 West Forty-fifth street.

JAMES W. CASEY, head of the Echo Music Co., 145 West Forty-fifth street, is on the road again looking for orders. And he seldom returns without selling from ten to fifty thousand copies. During his absence the offices will be in charge of Gertrude Baum.

THAT Soldier and Sailor's song book that Leo Feist put out recently is selling as fast as some song hits.

ALMA M. SANDERS, composer of "Hong Kong," who is also the Detroit representative for Jos. W. Stern & Co., paid a short visit to New York, where she placed several new numbers and posed for a newspaper syndicate photographer.

Theatres Worth While

Splendid Theatre for Pasadena

PASADENA, CAL., is to have one of the finest theatres in the country, in The Florence, which is now being built by D. H. Schuhmann. No date has been set for the opening because the owner wants to be sure that everything will be ready before the day is announced.

The building occupies a plot 68 by 160 feet, including two stores at the front, and is located on East Colorado, a business street of the residence section of the city. The building is of brick, with hollow tile veneer inside and water proof paster outside. Ornamental terra cotta and tile is used in the front. The exterior is in strict Italian Rennaissance as is suggested by the name of the house. The front of the house, with the exception of the central portion, is one story in height. Interior decorations follow out the same style, with the ceiling dome shaped.

Mushroom heating and ventilating system with an opening under each seat, is being used. Gas furnaces will supply the heat. The entire lighting system will be indirect, there not being a light visible, except under the marque.

Two Powers 6B machines will be used with a throw of 104 feet. The operating room will be equipped with dissolver and spotlight, motor generator, and switchboard for controlling the lighting of the entire house together with a dimmer for gradual transition from dark to full light effects and vice versa.

There will be 900 seats, all on the ground floor, the chairs being furnished by the American Seating Company.

Music will be made an important feature of the house, and the installation includes a Seeburg-Smith master organ.

The lobby will be twenty-five feet wide and forty-eight feet deep with ticket office on the left side. This will be equipped with the latest mechanical arrangements and will include a switchboard for the exterior and lobby lighting.

There will be one matinee performance and two in the evening. The prices will be 15 and 20 cents for the matinee and 15, 20 and 30 for the evening, in addition to the war tax. Film service to be used has not been announced.

"The House of No Disappointments" is the slogan that Mr. Schuhmann has taken for the Florence. As he says, his office is directly across the street from the new theatre where he can see "each brick being laid," and he is giving the work the personal supervision that promises that the house will fulfill his every wish.

Offers War Time Seats

AS a means of saving leather for the use of our soldiers in France, the DuPont Fabricoid Company is calling especial attention to a new chair which it is putting out in connection with the Wisconsin Cabinet and Panel Company of New London, Wis.

The upholstery of this chair is entirely waterproof so that it can be easily cleaned and is absolutely sanitary. The makers declare that not only has the product all the appearances of leather, but that it is even more durable because it is unaffected by perspiration which is so injurious to leather seats.

The DuPont Company points out that in these days, where other contracts which call for the use of goods that are likely to be needed by the government for war supplies, the delivery of these seats can go right along so that there will be no delay in getting theatres ready for opening on time.

Directory of New Theatres

CALIFORNIA

A motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 900 is to be started at once by N. O. Anderson on Palos Verdes avenue, near Sixth street, in the outer harbor district of Los Angeles. Plans for the building were drawn by L. A. Smith and bids are now being taken. The structure will be of brick construction and will contain two stores, in addition to the theatre itself.

James Hamblen, owner and manager of the new combined vaudeville and moving picture theatre nearing completion on Park street, Alameda, has established a record for doing things "on schedule." When announcement was made last fall that the new theatre would be ready for occupancy after March 1, few were convinced it would be possible to construct a building of the pretentious character planned in so short a period. The seemingly impossible is about to be accomplished, however, and unless some unforseen delay takes place he will be able to throw open the new theatre's doors about the 15th of the month mentioned. A feature of the new playhouse which promises to be attractive is a ladies' rest-room extending across the entire width of the building on the second floor.

Construction work on the seven-story hotel to be erected on Sixth street, San Pedro, has been commenced, and when this is completed it is proposed to build a motion picture theatre on a large lot immediately behind the hotel site, which will front on Seventh street. Lyman Farwell, of Los Angeles, is the architect and John B. Dawson the contractor.

The new Fremont theatre, recently erected at Menlo Park, was formally opened a few days ago, and has already earned the soubriquet "The house of a thousand comforts." John Van Derzee has been chosen as organist, and the program will consist of vaudeville and motion pictures.

Henry C. Jensen, owner of the Palace Grand theatre, Glendale, is erecting a balcony in his house to accommodate the excess crowds now visiting him.

The recent opening of the new Iris theatre at Hollywood was an event of paramount importance to Hollywood populace and a distinct triumph for Frank Alexander, and the house was packed to capacity at both performances. The New Iris seats about 900, is beautifully decorated, the lighting effects are fine, seats are comfortable, ventilation good and acoustics satisfactory. The building was erected for J. Q. Tabor, a recent comer to Hollywood, and was designed and built by Frank Meline.

Plans have been completed for the store and theatre building on Sixth street, Los Angeles, to be owned by Ray Pierson, F. O. Adler and N. O.

Anderson. The theatre auditorium will be 57 by 125 feet and will have a seating capacity of 900.

GEORGIA

Brunswick may soon have an airdome, which will be ready for operation this summer provided city council grants the request. Harris M. King, proprietor of the Bijou theatre, last night petitioned council for authority to erect such a place of amusement on a lot in the business section. Council will no doubt grant the petition and Mr. King stated that it was his intention to begin the work of construction as soon as possible.

HAWAIIAN TERRITORY

Plans for the new theatre on the site of the Orpheum on Fort Street, Honolulu, which have been prepared by Barton D. Slegman, the promoter of the project, will be submitted to the members of the League of Good Films, which met recently, solely for this purpose at Laniakea. Mrs. E. J. Lindeman, president of the League, said that the husband of every wife interested in this work was urged to attend. The hour was set at four o'clock, she said, for it was considered a most convenient hour for the business men of the city.

ILLINOIS

The lease of the state of the opera house auditorium at Newton, for an Armory Hall has been cancelled and the possession of it given back to O. S. Scott, owner. It has been used by Co. B for over thirty years. Mr. Scott says that there is a probability of utilizing it for a high-class motion picture theatre.

Fred Smith has purchased from Mrs. Marrietta Hammond, the vacant lot just south of the postoffice at Mount Sterling, and intends erecting thereon a motion picture theatre. It is authentically stated that Glaze and Bond, the local picture manufacturers, have already leased the projected building.

Tony Serra, manager of the Gem theatre, Pawnee, is casting about for a site suitable for a motion picture theatre, which it is his intention to erect in the near future.

IOWA

The Palm theatre at Missouri Valley will shortly be opened by H. L. Wise. Extensive alterations and improvements are now being made.

MARYLAND

Work on the Liberty theatre at the Maryland cantonment, Baltimore, is being pushed to completion, and the playhouse will be opened in a few days.

The contract for the moving picture theatre, Garrison and Liberty Heights avenues, Baltimore, after plans of E. H. Glidden, architect, to cost about $10,000, is soon to be awarded. Herbert M. Hartman, of the Zeit Motor Car Company, is financing the project.

As soon as plans are completed, work will be started on the theatre and motion picture parlor to be erected for H. M. Hartman on Garrison avenue, near Liberty Heights avenue, Baltimore. It is estimated that the theatre will cost close to $100,000. E. H. Gidden is the architect.

MASSACHUSETTS

Patrons of the Colonial theatre, recently bought by the Holy Trinity Roman Catholic Parish, Boston, expect to erect a modern theatre there after the war.

MISSOURI

The new theatre at Neosho, has been christened "The White Way" by G. D. Hall, proprietor.

NORTH CAROLINA

What is claimed by its builders to be the handsomest and best appointed house between Washington and New Orleans, is just being completed where a few years ago was the wilderness of the Yadkin River Narrows of North Carolina. It is the new opera house of Badin, the new town where about twenty million dollars has already been spent in developing immense water power and turning it into heating and power for smelting aluminum in the twenty acres of factory and furnace that are in operation there.

OHIO

Just as soon as traffic between Ironton and Ashland is resumed, Mr. Martin, well-known theatrical man will reopen negotiations with H. D. Minces, relative to the erection of a fine vaudeville theatre on Center street, Ironton, just off the alley on the property which is at present occupied by Horton and Rauch's poolrooms and tailor and barber shops. The plan is to build a handsome theatre building to be devoted exclusively to vaudeville and pictures.

At the annual meeting of the C. M. Amusement Company, held recently at Marietta, it was decided that the construction of the new Hippodrome theatre should be pushed as soon as the weather permitted. Architect Fred J. Elliott of Columbus, has charge of the undertaking. T. C. Weber is president of the organization behind the venture.

OKLAHOMA

John Griffin has opened a new theatre at Pitcher, which cost $30,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,000.

OREGON

Plans for a $30,000 unit of the Coliseum for the State Fair grounds at Salem, were recently approved by the members of the State Fair Board at a meeting held in Portland. Not having sufficient money on hand with which to complete the structure, only the first of two units will be built this year. For this purpose a surplus of about $15,000, realized from the 1917 exhibition, will be used.

Lewis I. Thompson of this city, is the architect delegated with the work of the coliseum. The completed plans will be out in two weeks. The building will be 200 by 300 feet in dimensions, of brick, with a seating capacity of 8,000, or almost twice the seating capacity of the Portland Auditorium.

QUEBEC

The Maisonneuve theatre, Montreal, has been opened under the management of Eugene Lefebyre, who is also the manager of the Crystal Palace, St. Lawrence Boulevard, Montreal. The new theatre, which is controlled by Montreal people, is an attractive and up-to-the-minute structure, seating 800 people.

RHODE ISLAND

The new B. F. Keith's house in Providence will be opened on Labor Day, and it is rumored that the old house, now in use by Keith, will be turned into a Motion Picture House, showing high-class pictures.

SOUTH DAKOTA

D. D. O'Leary has commenced on the construction work of a new theatre at McLaughlin.

TENNESSEE

Etowah is to have a new and thoroughly modern motion picture theatre. It will be located in the building now occupied by the Newmont tailors, and will be opened to the public just as soon as the house can be remodeled and transformed into a theatre. Mr. Newman will vacate the building the latter part of this week, and the workmen will begin at once to make the change—build stage, front etc. Messrs. Manning and Wink, who will conduct the business, are experienced picture men and know what the public wants.

VERMONT

W. and B. F. Adams have been awarded the contract for building the Crown theatre at White River Junction, which was recently destroyed by fire, and already have the work well advanced.

WASHINGTON

The Princess theatre at Prosser is being remodeled and the seating capacity increased by 100 seats. Manager Pacius announces that the change will increase the screen space and afford better ventilating service. The dressing rooms are to be located in the basement and this alone will give more space for the auditorium.

A deal has been concluded whereby C. P. Scates, manager of the Hub theatre, Okanogan, has acquired property on Second avenue, whereon he contemplates the erection of a modern fireproof motion picture theatre. The property is the south 35 feet of the lots owned by the Okanogan Loan & Investment Company, situated between the First National Bank and the Okanogan Department Store. A consideration of the deal was the taking over of the present theatre building and lot by the investment company.

"HER AMERICAN HUSBAND"

(Triangle Production)

IMPORTANT NOTICE: The proper musical accompaniment for this production would be excerpts from "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini—but owing to the fact that this work (Madame Butterfly) is subject to the "Music Tax" imposed by the various "Societies of Composers, Authors, and Publishers," we were compelled to use different compositions for the following cues: "Theme" and Cues, Nos. 1, 8, 11, 12, 13 and 14.

Theme: "Japanese Sunset" (4/4 Largo) by Deppen

1—"Kingdom of Flowers" (Valse Impromptu), by Ringleben, until—S: Close-up of hand knocking at the door.
2—"Home from the Club" (Characteristic), by L. P. Laurendeau, until—S: Telephoning.
NOTE: Cue No. 3 opens with the old popular hit, "We Won't Go Home 'Till Morning."
3—"Lullaby" (Lento-Characteristic), by Kjerulf, until—T: "Beginning to feel somewhat bored."
4—Theme, until—T: "A morning of surprise."
5—"Gavotte and Musette" (Moderato), by Raff, until—S: Girl standing near flower vase.
6—"Love Theme," by Herzberg, until—S: Banquet scene.
7—Reception and Banquet Scene (3/4 Valse Movement), by Bendix, until—T: "In the land of the rising sun."
8—"Japanese Reverie," by Bartlett, until—S: Company meets the girl (in garden).
9—Theme, until—T: "At the close of his first visit."
10—Continue pp until—T: "News from their first, etc."
11—"Japanese Song" (Moderato), by Puerner, until T: "The lady wins."
12—Repeat "Japanese Reverie," by Bartlett, until—T: "So ends the day."
13—"Blissful Dreams" (Characteristic Intermezzo), by Meyer Helmund, until—T: "A day of anguish for Kate."
14—Moderato Movement from "Suite—Night in Japan," by Braham, until—T: "Sailing with the tide."
15—Theme, until—T: "Instructions for the home-coming."
16—"Canzonetta" (Moderato), by Godard, until—T: "Guess who's back in town!"
17—"Bond of Love" (Waltz), by A. Roth, until—S: Young man at piano.
18—Piano Solo—improvise rag, until—T: "The weeks are long to those."
19—"Babilage," by Gillet, until T: "Each night the light shines forth."
20—Theme, until—"Heartsick for weeks, etc."
21—"Dramatic Narrative," by Pauline Pement, until—T: "Congratulations."
22—"Love Song" (Dramatic), by Flegier, until—T: "In Cherry Blossoms' desolation."
23—"Sorrow Theme," by Paul Vely, until—T: "Nearing the wedding day."
24—"Ein Maerchen" (Dramatic Fantasia), by Bach, until—S: Young man at piano.
25—Piano Solo—improvise to action, until—T: "Midnight."
26—"Tragic Theme," by Ed. Roberts, until—T: "And to the land of, etc."
27—Theme, until * * * * END.

"THE HEART OF A LION"

(Fox Standard Production)

Theme: "Heart Wounds" (Dramatic) by Grieg

1—"Moonlight" (Waltz), (Forster Music Co.), until—T: "I suppose your brother wants more money?"
2—Theme, until—T: "The close companionship, etc."

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

Simplex

There's a Man You Ought to Know

He sells Theatre Supplies.
His place of business is not a one-night stand.
He is there to stay.
So he needs the same customers right along.
That's why he doesn't sell poor goods.
No matter how big the profit.
For he wants you to keep coming.
And you won't, unless he makes it worth your while.
He does that.
He can sell you anything.
From a carbon to a complete equipment.
And he stands back of all he sells.
Take Projection Machines, for instance.
He could make two better profits.
One at the time of sale.
Another on repair parts.
But he prefers smaller direct returns.
And more of the kind your good-will brings.
So he sells the Simplex, and satisfaction.
Do you know him?
If not, let us tell you his name.

The Simplex Man is well worth knowing. Try him once and you'll keep on going.

Price is One Thing—

Value is another, and of greater importance

Inferior prints keep the value of your negative a deep, dark and expensive secret.

When your prints are properly made and presented your negative value is seen and acknowledged.

Your negative should be safely stored and carefully handled. Our storage vaults, and superior equipment and organization, give you the protection you need.

Perfect developing and printing actually costs less in the long run than ordinary work carelessly priced.

Screen and service satisfaction have value immeasurably above the petty fraction-of-a-cent-per-foot-cheaper argument.

For the sake of goodness and safety and satisfaction have your prints made by

An ARTCRAFT Picture

YOU get advertising beyond the reach of gold by showing this picture. Each person who sees Mary Pickford's wonderful double characterization will tell friends about it and advise them to see it.

First as her own dainty self and then as a ragged, hatchet-faced kitchen slavey, living in a squalor that she seems to delight in—this is Mary Pickford's greatest artistic triumph.

A sure box-office winner without a doubt. It has packed the Strand in New York and is now jamming other theatres from coast to coast.

It will pack your house—and it will advertise it, too.

"Cavanaugh of the Forest Rangers"

Directed by WILLIAM WOLBERT

Hamlin Garland is known to every discriminating motion picture patron as one of the foremost writers of the great wide West, with its rugged but human characters—the West so often portrayed on the screen, but seldom with such marvelous reflection of detail as by this writer who thoroughly knows his West.

In this delightful love story, scened in the fragrant forestland, Garland has easily outstripped his previous fame-winning efforts.

Goldwyn Pictures

Our Business Proves Goldwyn Has Kept Its Promises!

IN the very beginning—one year ago—Goldwyn said to the exhibitors of America:

"In Goldwyn Pictures we will maintain a higher average of dramatic and technical excellence than you will be able to find in the productions of any other organization. You can therefore use Goldwyn as the basis in building a quality reputation for your theatre."

We have kept this pledge.

And we also said in the beginning: "Goldwyn will give you bigger productions at your regular rental prices than you have ever received before from any other organization."

We kept THIS promise by giving all Goldwyn contract customers Mary Garden in "Thais"—a box-office record-breaker. We are keeping this promise a second time by giving you Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner"—an even bigger attraction than "Thais."

But the best proof of Goldwyn's value is found in the fact that every important first-run exhibitor in North America who began showing Goldwyn Pictures last September IS STILL SHOWING THEM because they are popular and return a box-office profit.

More than 4,000 other exhibitors have followed the lead of America's biggest showmen and are now contract customers of Goldwyn.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY

The Old Road to Prosperity

Q.—Until three years ago, Mr. X., you bought all your pictures from General Film Company. Is that so?

A.—Yes, sir, it is.

Q.—And since then you have dealt elsewhere, paying exorbitant prices, buying pictures over-rated as dividend payers for your house?

A.—Yes, sir, that's true.

Q.—Will you tell us then, Mr. X., what has been the outstanding benefit to you from this practice?

A.—Er—a saving in shoe leather.

Q.—What do you mean, a saving in shoe leather?

A.—Why, when I dealt with General Film Company I had to walk to the bank every day to put away my profit. Now I don't have to do that, thus saving shoe leather.

This fanciful examination reflects the actual situation of many a showman.

When it comes to swelling the bank balance of the other fellow many a showman has made a high record of late, whereas formerly he rented his attractions from General Film Company and used up an extra pair of shoes a year going down the street to put away profits for himself.

Absorbing the expense of distribution multiplied to an absurd degree, and "falling for" inflated values in muchly touted product, the motion picture exhibitor of the suffering type has resolved himself into a mere human shuttle —to an exchange for the picture, and then back to the exchange with the profits. His bank, which used to be a regular stop in his General Film days, is now omitted from his schedule.

The old route used to be: General Film—Theatre—Bank. It was a dependable old route.

There is no reason why he shouldn't return to it. Today General Film Company is in finer fettle than ever. Not only is it conserving distribution costs to the showman by delivering to him the extensive product of many manufacturers by one movement, but it leaves no exhibitor an excuse for seeking pictures elsewhere. It has added to its releases feature product of the most high class character—the incomparable Paralta Plays, truly the "pick of the pictures," purveyed through its exchanges by the Hodkinson Service.

Travel the old road. It never led elsewhere than to prosperity.

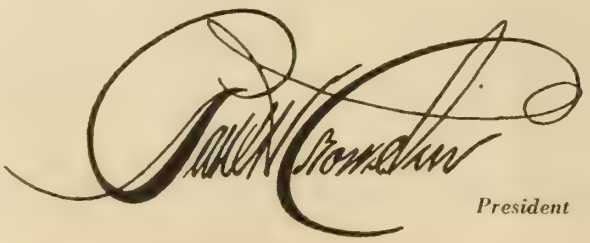
Little Talks With Foreign Buyers

(By PAUL H. CROMELIN)



NUMBER ONE

The two big things in purchasing American film for the foreign market are (a) to know WHAT to buy and (b) at WHAT PRICE to buy it. Knowledge of the American film field as related to the foreign market does not come in a day—or in a year. The market you are buying IN and the market you are buying FOR must, each of them, be at your finger tips. It takes organization to acquire the information you must have. Inter-Ocean has taken top place as a purchaser of foreign films in the American market because it possesses the best organization of its kind in the motion picture business to-day. We know the exact needs of theatres in Paris, France—and in Hong Kong, China. We know precisely what films are manufactured from month to month in the United States THAT FILL THE NEEDS OF THE PARIS EXHIBITOR—and his Hong Kong brother! In short, we never guess, we go by actual knowledge. Mr. Foreign Buyer, isn't THAT fact worth something TO YOU? Oughtn't you get your American buying down to an absolute system—Inter-Ocean System? It has never failed a foreign buyer yet! Don't you feel that Inter-Ocean's claims to your American-purchasing business are worth investigation? Drop us a line for further facts TO-DAY.

"We Operate Everywhere"

PATHÉ

Audiences demand action, thrills, mystery, and suspense in a serial—

"The HOUSE of HATE"

has them all

The "Hooded Terror," a sinister and menacing figure, who captivates the imagination and whose identity is veiled in mystery, dominates the story. His errand is Death; his motive is the control of the great Waldon War Works. He may be Pearl Waldon's uncle, her cousin or any one of a number of persons. Your audiences will find the question of his identity more fascinating than that of the masked man in "The Iron Claw."

From the first scene in the first episode to the last scene in the last "The HOUSE of HATE" is the most sensationally dramatic story ever put upon the screen !!!!!!!

PATHÉ

A Pathé Serial is a better box office attraction than any other picture for it means fifteen weeks of big business

Just reflect for a moment, Mr. Exhibitor, what you have to offer in

The HOUSE of HATE

PEARL WHITE, admittedly the greatest of all box-office attractions;

ANTONIO MORENO, a feature star and a favorite everywhere;

A FASCINATING STORY, exciting to the last degree, written by the man who wrote "The Exploits of Elaine" and the "Craig Kennedy" stories—Arthur B. Reeve, and Chas. A. Logue;

SUPER-DIRECTION, by George B. Seitz, director of "The Fatal Ring";

FEATURE PRODUCTION, with the finest and costliest sets ever used in a serial!

No matter what the weather, past successes prove that Pearl White in "The HOUSE of HATE" will be the biggest attraction of 1918!

PATHÉ

Ask the nearest PATHÉ Exchange to screen for you the first episodes. We wait your verdict with confidence—"The BEST SERIAL YET"

Mr. Exhibitor, you have the unimpeachable evidence offered by the phenomenal success of past PEARL WHITE SERIALS—

"The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Iron Claw" and "The Fatal Ring." Nothing can be more certain than that will be the greatest success of them all!

"The HOUSE of HATE"

It has the stars; it has the cast; it has the story; it has the skilled direction; and above all it has the Pathe experience.

This order was issued shortly after the inception of the present organization, over the signature of the President of the Triangle Distributing Corporation. It was not intended for publication nor exhibition to exhibitors, but was an early statement of what was expected from every Branch Manager. It is published at this time only as concrete proof that the Triangle Organization is not only spreading broadcast its policy of fairness toward exhibitors, but is insisting that these principles be carried into effect. The Triangle blazed the way to equity and fairness as it blazed the way for the "No Tax To Exhibitors" policy, and it will continue to blaze along these same lines as often as occasion requires.

Many a packed house is directly traceable to an advertisement in the "News."

This tells the story:—

February 14, 1918.

Mr. W. A. Johnston.

Dear Sir:

I am taking the liberty of informing you that during a recent discussion among the different salesmen and exhibitors of the Western part of New York State, the question arose as to what was the best trade publication, both from an advertising standpoint and in the way of editorial value. For our own benefit as well as that of the exhibitors, we salesmen decided to check off the magazines we saw the most of in the picture houses and report a week later.

Let me inform you that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has them all licked. The exhibitor has to read it to get the best information from every angle on the pictures produced. The salesman has to read it to keep up with the trend of business. Taking it all in all MOTION PICTURE NEWS is like a Liberty Bond—a good thing to have around.

Trusting that this information will be of some value to you, I remain,

Yours very truly,

S. RYER BANKS,
Salesman.

Address:
531 W. 159th St.,
New York City.

And so does this:—

$1,091.00 is the total amount of subscription receipts received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the past three weeks (Jan. 31st to Feb. 14th, inc.).

Advertisers should call and analyze these receipts.

They show the solid establishment and healthy expansion of a journal whose record is unrivalled in the whole trade publication field.

The large percentage of renewals prove —no arguments are needed—a publication that is retaken for its own intrinsic value, that is read, that is solidly and broadly intrenched.

The new subscriptions tell of the sweeping editorial success of our new sub-editions —the West Coast, Central States and Eastern (to follow).

Dear Mr. McGrath:-

It will probably please you to know of the results gained from advertising in your newly inaugurated sub-edition for the Central West states - the CENTRAL STATES EDITION. Following your solicitation in December, I took a half page space in the first issue of the CENTRAL STATES EDITION of Dec. 22nd, exploiting my Nu-Movie-Lite invention. As a result of this single half page space, I have received up to date 183 replies the main of them developing into interesting and profitable business leads.

I used the CENTRAL STATES at that time to acquaint the trade in the middle West with my new product. I intend to make my campaign from now on a national one.

Wishing you extended success for your CENTRAL STATES EDITION as well as for your national medium, I remain

Very truly yours,

THE GREAT AMERICAN COMEDY

Every author of note has aspired to write the great American novel. "Ruggles of Red Gap," by Harry Leon Wilson is IT, in comedy drama form, because it strikes the keynote of American democracy. It remained for George K. Spoor to discover it as a master picture. It is now presented with Taylor Holmes and an all star cast.

Pictures and the Public

TO produce pictures the public wants, is, after all, the prime problem of the industry.

The progressive producer is progressive insofar as he realizes this all important necessity; insofar as he diligently feels and successfully senses the public pulse beat.

To produce pictures with the eyes turned inward only—or worse still, with the eyes turned backward upon the past ideals of production is to retrogress, rob the picture of its wonderful future—and assure commercial failures.

The National Board of Review has done an excellent thing.

At a private review of a picture of notable quality a large and representative group of critics was asked to express its views as to proper trend of picture production.

We give the following, each one of which is highly interesting.

* * * *

"THERE should be simplicity in acting, not straining for effect; higher ideals in the subject matter of scenarios; clean, healthful moral tone—no off-color undertone."

"Have more plays with plenty of good heart appeal, to stir sympathy and leave food for thought. They could be truer to art by being truer to human nature and real life. Comedy appeals less vulgar and emotional appeals less primitive. Intelligent audiences are asking for less punch and more sincerity in the moving picture."

"The aim of the motion picture should be to present life truly and not falsely. More attention should be given to simplicity of stage setting. A person of taste should choose the wall paper, which is the worst offender."

A former member of the faculty of Columbia University, Department of English, was specific in his suggestions. He said:

"1. Conceive the picture as a whole before any work on it is begun.

"2. Let the fundamental controlling factor be art—not expense or the featuring of a star.

"3. Remember that this art combines the pictorial and the dramatic. Use more pictures for their beauty of scenery and atmospheric effect. What makes the audience sigh with content is a particularly beautiful setting or background.

"4. Put perfection of form or beauty of face (mere prettiness) in the second place, and get people who can act before the camera.

"5. Avoid the rapidly growing list of motion picture conventions and hackneyed devices. They are due to lack of imagination or to a low intelligence on the part of the director.

"You cannot make a photoplay out of a novel by omitting the words, nor out of a play by omitting the acting, nor out of an opera by omitting the music. In each case the beauty of language, the development of action, and the harmony of music must be replaced by and compensated for by pictorial representation, which, in its own way, is as excellent as good literary style, fine acting, or perfect music."

* * * *

"PHOTOPLAYS founded on historical events meet with less favor than does a picture story concerning a subject in which the general American public is vitally interested—not necessarily the present world war or national problems, but more particularly picture fiction of simple present-day life. The more simple the picture and the more humane its appeal to the average layman, the more popular it is. As the legitimate stage has divorced forever the old type of 'blood and thunder' melodrama, so is the photoplay world educating the public to better appreciation of pretty but plain and plausible themes to the elimination of the 'murder and revenge' variety formerly so popular."

"The motion picture of to-day is the magazine story of yesterday," said a successful scenario writer. "But as the magazine story has steadily declined in popular favor, would it not be well for the producers to watch carefully to the end that their public may not grow weary as did the magazine readers? For do we not see displayed on the screen to-day the same repeated and monotonous plot so long worn threadbare in the magazines, i. e., the young American hero rescuing the heroine from the clutches of the villain?

"THE comedy now displayed in motion pictures is beneath the intelligence of an American audience. It is played with a rapidity of movement from start to finish that robs it of all merit. The story—if it can be called such—is of the most foolish order, unworthy of any praise whatever. Good comedy is more difficult to write, as it is to produce, but it should stay.

"While the motion picture is eminently suitable for the portrayal of physical action, it is equally suitable for the portrayal of mental action. So many producers rely almost wholly on physical action as to throw the picture into the dime novel class. Mental action is the real essential of a good play in the pictured drama as well as in the spoken drama. Too much action in motion pictures is just as bad as too much action in stage drama. It is the combination of different degrees of action plus mental action that makes the good picture play and has always

Speaking Editorially:

The "Why" of the War

THAT value of the screen as a political weapon which we have so long been talking about is being given some pretty good tests with the nation at war.

Pictures calculated to arouse patriotism have been testing it for some time; trailers aiming at domestic propaganda have been given their opportunity.

But it looks to us as if the big test is to come in the pictures that flash on the screen the titles, "The Eagle's Eye" and "My Four Years in Germany." For here is picture entertainment plus the most vital of propaganda—the message that aims not merely to inspire but to bring home to the hundred million the "Why" of the war.

In the one, Ambassador Gerard, the man who knows what Kaiserism is at home, on its own stamping ground, tells the mothers at home the "Why."

In the other, ex-Chief Flynn, the man who has fought Kaiserism as it is within our gates, on our hearth-stones, tells the mothers at home the "Why."

Exhibitors—it would seem to us—can give no greater contribution to aid in furthering the war than to be able to say that they helped in the telling of the "Why."

Hitting the "High Brows"

THERE is a suggestion for live managers, in the news story elsewhere in this issue, regarding co-operation between libraries and motion pictures. Quoting from a recent number of the Library Journal, it says:

"Many managers are quite glad to preface or append to the film, a word that the book may be borrowed for reading, from the local library. Conversely, when a book film is to be presented, the library may well advertise that fact by displaying a movie poster and with it copies of the book in question or of cognate books and periodical articles. One library in Indiana has arranged with local managers to share in the net returns where the library advertises the book film in this way."

The suggestion has particular value in the small "home" community where a single local library is the rule. It may well prove the wedge breaking into the "upper crust" that holds its nose just a shade above the "movies."

We Ask Your Pardon

EVERY now and then we think of something we'd like to say about specific pictures on this page—but we refrain.

We fear the accusation ever present in the background of aiding to "advertise."

But elsewhere on this page we have just spoken of "library-co-operation" as a means of breaking into the "upper crust." It brought to our mind thoughts of the Benjamin Chapin series of Lincoln pictures.

We like them as entertainment—we imagine everyone will—but we liked them even more for the opportunity we felt they offered the exhibitor to satisfy that hypercritical "better class" portion of his audience that always demands "something better," that always tilts its Grecian nose at "ordinary movies."

And, with all our modest opinions of this page, we believe that we may be pardoned for mentioning anything that contributes to that much-talked-of "elevation."

The Men Higher Up Than the Highest

WE know a film man whose hand we'd like to shake. You will want to do the same. In fact, we'd like to shower him with bouquets, rent a few of his features—even though we own no theatre—and even go so far as to promise never to use his name in connection with a rumor story.

Why all this good will? Because this film man recently wrote a letter to another big film man—and made it a stiff-arm punch at an abuse that We, You and the Other Fellow have long found irritating and irksome.

We'll let you get the whole story from the letter. As it comes to us, it reads somewhat as follows:

"My Dear Blank—This is to remind you that we have an appointment and that I am still waiting for a call from the Secretary of your Secretary's Secretary. This morning I phoned and was able to reach the under butler of your secretary's valet. This was a big spot in my day. Before this I was only able to get as far as the footman to your third assistant's chauffeur.

"God knows whether this letter will get any higher than the assistant to your stenographer, but if it ever reaches your own, individual, personally conducted, executive eyes, wheel around in your swivel chair, you big stiff, and tell God to call me up.

"Yours bolshevikily,
"Blank Blank."

"Dictated by me to me. Read by me. Signed by me. Mailed by me."

The letter brought an immediate reply.

The Right Man

RAYMOND FOSDICK, in charge of the Government's training camp activities, has chosen well in selecting the committee of motion picture men to co-operate with him.

And especially well has he chosen in naming P A. Powers as chairman of the committee.

For Mr. Powers, while finding little time to talk, has found ample time since the outbreak of war to work—and work with knowledge and sincerity in the task of harnessing the screen to the nation's service.

Pictures and the Public

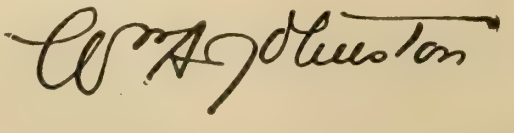
made the good stage play. A consideration of this fact, I believe, would tend to greatly elevate picture plays."



* * * *

THESE opinions are very valuable.

They are not mere theories, nor narrow conceptions of art for art's sake.

They reflect, as a matter of fact, the practical, commercial experience of the stage and the publishing business.

The producer who looks over them, or who looks backward or inward today has no just complaint against the motion picture and its market. His fault lies, as he looks, within.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

A WELL-KNOWN film man was finding fault with us the other day. (We heard you. Of course, that isn't anything new.) The tenor of this particular complaint was:

"Say, you trade paper fellows are slow. Why, there's more real news flying around under cover that you don't get. Lots of things happening.

Then we laughed.

And we recalled to his mind the merger rumors that had been so persistent three and two months ago. How they had actually broken into print in some publications. And how they were now in a limbo of forgetfulness beyond redemption.

Then he laughed.

* * * *

BUT it isn't any laughing matter. This conversation is brought to our minds and mentioned here because of an interview on state rights conditions throughout the country that appears in this issue.

Jesse Goldburg has just "made the circuit." What he has to say on independent marketing conditions is interesting. But of particular interest to us was this one sentence:

"The program field is suffering because exhibitors are worrying and upset over rumors of shifts and changes they hear are happening in New York."

So it goes. New York creates rumors—then laughs them out of existence. But before they die the Underground Pipe Line has caught them, and they are relayed over exchange counters, in film building lobbies, from talkative salesmen.

Marching on forever. Page 1305

* * * *

AND as a matter of fact there is nothing to worry about. The big men of the game were never devoting so much honest-to-goodness working time to thought—to definite plans—to moves for economy.

F'rnstance:

Two different film men told us last week that they had been offered real coin—one $500, the other $1,000—by a film magnate if they could "induce" some other magnate to steal two directors from him.

Why?

Because the particular directors are on long term contracts at sky-high salaries.

And the magnate holding the bag is down to earth.

* * * *

THIS incident chimes in nicely with an interview Carl Laemmle has in this issue giving some concrete instances of the manner in which star's salary demands are tumbling.

The interview was brought forth by a short editorial note we ran last week headed, "Are the Stars Falling."

Carl says they are—and tell why.

Which should be another incentive to good cheer on the part of an exhibitor suffering from restlessness induced by rumoritis. Page 1262

* * * *

SPEAKING of exhibitors suffering from restlessness, we couldn't blame an exhibitor much if he felt a bit bewildered at the number of co-operative booking associations being shot his way these days. Br'er Pettijohn and Harry Rapf are out on the road explaining one, Tom Hamlin has long had one in his vest pocket up in the Northwest, Mayer Silverman is working out Pittsburgh way, Mississippi boasts another.

This week brings the latest. It's The United ——

WE wonder how much exhibitor co-operation will be given to our feature article this week? We are not responsible. It came from a fellow who signs himself "Anarchist" and who confesses—confesses, mind you—"I Am an Exhibitor."

We hasten to say once more—we are not responsible.

For this fellow "Anarchist" sure does say some scorching things. He's worse than an anarchist—he's a bolshevik, or minshivik, or whatever the worse kind of "shivik" is.

Maybe he's right. If he is—give us the credit and the glory for the article; if he's wrong—

We are not responsible.

* * * *

WE remember once, about four years ago, going to a projection room in the World's Tower building to view the first release of a newly-formed company, "Greene's Features."

"Who's this Greene?" we asked.

"Boston fellow," replied the other spectator. "Pretty big punkins up there, I guess."

"Huh! Trying to bust into wider pastures! Huh!"

Woe unto us! "Trying," we said.

And this week William A. Johnston writes, "What Kind of a Fellow is—Greene?"

And the man he tells you about is the—

Greene of "Greene's Features." And—

Walter E. Greene of Paramount-Artcraft!

* * * *

THE strength of pictures as special Broadway attractions seems to run in cycles. First you have a flood of special pictures, all making money; then a flood of pictures, all forced-runs and losing money; then no pictures at all—aside from the regular photoplay theatres, of course.

Just now the tide seems to be in. Metro, having broken the ice with "Lest We Forget" is following with "Revelation" at the Lyric. This Nazimova feature is touted as a world beater by those who have seen it.

And down at the Broadway "Tarzan of the Apes" is well into a real, husky Broadway run—and making money.

Which means that someone should give Harry Reichenbach a vote of thanks—or, maybe, another gold cigarette case. For the silver-maned one has certainly shown some stunts. He gave Broadway the first show banner it has seen across a street since Harry pulled the trick a year ago, he resurrected the herald on a metropolitan scale—600,000 of 'em—he—

Well, we have just learned that an arrangement has been completed by which the First National will distribute "Tarzan."

* * * *

We have almost finished this page and we haven't told you about the real big thing with this issue.

It's a special sixteen page insert descriptive of the new Grauman "million dollar theatre" in Los Angeles.

Just to keep the country balanced properly Los Angeles springs this wonderful temple right on the heels of New York's Rivoli. And after reading what J. C. Jessen says of Grauman's we know of a sure way to start a fight—and a good scrap—

Lock J. C. Jessen, who wrote up Grauman's, and R. E. Pritchard, who wrote our Rivoli insert, in one room and start them argifying. Nuf sed!

Both members of this club, gentulmen!

"Mebbe it isn't as bad as this—but some of them do seem to think an exhibitor is a hybrid, halfbreed, lowbrow geek, a combination what-is-it and what-not!"

"I Am An Exhibitor!"

An Anonymous Communiction, Signed "Anarchist"—From a Man Who Considers the Above Statement a Confession—

Dear Mr. Johnston:

There is no denying that Teddy is our greatest little argifier, but there are times when I think I could give him a run for first honors. Seems like I am always going over the top for someone or something. Right now I am in the throes of a double-header with you as one of the bones of contention. (No baseball application to the word "bone.")

In the language of "Constant Reader," that most consistent of all our anonymous letter writers: "A" says that all motion picture trade journals are completely subsidized, being controlled, written and edited by their advertisers, principally producers; "B" says it's a damli. I be "B" and want to prove my case. And this letter is the test.

Therefore I conjure you, brother, in the name of the sacred Brotherhood of the Slaves of the Lamp, to publish this effusion en toto, unscarred by blue pencil, scissors or enervating censorship. Do not permit that saphead "A" to hand me an equine vaccination.

I am an exhibitor. There, it is out, and I feel better. I admit my sin and error freely. Whether it is a disease or a pernicious habit I know not, but I DO know that it is practically incurable. (The man who invents some marvelous vaccine which will offer immunity to men threatened with exhibitoritis will be deserving of all the honors his country can shower upon him, but it hasn't been did, as yet.)

I have kidded myself into the idea that I am a fairly intelligent animal, even in the face of my embarkation into the exhibition game. This I excuse as a temporary mental abberation. I really believe that I manage my theatre with energy and ordinary hossense, and, because I am an ex-newspaperman, I can turn out fairly readable and attractive ad-copy.

Having a theatre, I naturally nurse a grievance. I say "naturally" because no one ever heard of an exhibitor without a grievance. Theatres and grievances travel in pairs, Siamese-twin-wise. I want to air my pet grievance and "A" says you won't supply the atmosphere. I say that you will give me space to rant in even though you may not agree or sympathize with me.

My theatre is located in a moderate sized town not far from the Great Dark Way and I don't suppose that I face anything very unusual in the way of opposition or obstacles to success. I find, in striking up an average for a year, that I am knocking out about the same revenue as I could earn at a copy desk on some newspaper. But to do this I had to make a rather heavy initial investment, face always the hazard of bad business, AND include my personal services, when the latter alone would have returned me an equal stipend. That is by the way, however, and not the real grievance.

Owing to my nearness to New York I have gradually acquired an interesting and extensive acquaintanceship among film men. My newspaper experience has made me a blood-brother to most of the publicity men and through them I have met many executives in the various home offices. Exchangemen have come to tolerate me even in the face of my iniquitous exhibitorship, and will sometimes speak kindly to me, explaining patiently why I should refrain from peeved protest when my service arrives in a condition which lends the impression that it has been shipped through the subway; divided into eighty seven parts; decorated throughout by dirty film "CLEANERS"; inspected by some ruffian who makes patches with adhesive tape and eliminates all finales as un-essential to the plot. Occasionally they take me out to lunch (exchange managers, not inspectors) and expound film exchange operation for a couple of hours, leaving me always with the impression that exhibitors ought to be glad that they are on the books at all, even if we are designated by numbers like Ossining sojourners. "By their key numbers shall ye know them."

All of these film men discuss the genus "exhibitor" with brutal frankness, dissecting him in what they firmly believe is a fair, impartial manner, and they often lay before me the results of their diagnoses, with the deprecatory provision: "Of course this doesn't apply to exhibitors of your type, old top, but men of your type are so DAMNED rare in the exhibitor field."

And the crystallization of all the heavy brain work of producers, distributors and exchangemen seems to sum up about as follows:

"I guess I ought to consider myself lucky to be granted a contract. It's like handing me a peerage, or putting me in the Blue Book. Anyway that's the impression their conversation gives me."

"The average exhibitor is an illiterate lowbrow, incapable of coherent thought, destitute of any power to analyze his own problems, wholly without understanding as to the first fundamentals of the business in which he is engaged." And the "average exhibitor" is generally estimated to mean from eighty to ninety per cent of the exhibitors of the country.

Now see here, W. A. J., you know darned well that I am not tilting at a windmill because you hear the same sort of junk every day yourself. It has been one of the popular indoor sports to pan the exhibitor for a poor, simple nut, for so long now that everybody believes it, INCLUDING a certain number of self-sufficient exhibitors who look upon the man in the sticks as something akin to a town constable running the Opry House two or three nights a week. And I hereby register an emphatic protest.

"Anonymously," you may opine. True, true, and for the best of reasons. I don't want to be deprived of future emanations of erudition from these same sources. Understand, I like most of these boys immensely, personally, but they do lead off my Angora when they get on this "illiterate exhibitor" stuff. Why! one publicity man told me the other day that his boss would give him the gate if he ever used a word with more than three syllables in circularizing exhibitors. And this boss of his is one of the type who would wire Mr. John Homer, Rome, Italy, asking for his price for film rights on the Iliad, unless he was forcibly restrained by his mentors.

How erbout it? Do you agree with this indictment? Do you believe that the "average exhibitor" is a brainless pup? Is he lower on the mental register than the general run of retailers?

I'll tell you what I see back of all this chatter; what I see reflected in every trade journal, including the undisputed leader, the Motion Picture News (advt.): I see ham actors and actorines drawing down more money per week than they could earn in any other business in a year; I see many first-class plumbers, chauffeurs, shopgirls and seamstresses spoiled to make awful "screen artists" (save the mark).

I see salaries paid to executives which are all out of proportion to the services rendered for these salaries. I see exchangemen getting from one hundred to two hundred a week when the same expenditure of brain power and efficiency in any other line of endeavor wouldn't net them more than seventy-five. I see brainless and senseless duplication of exchanges; unbelievably bad, though wonderfully expensive, advertising; unscrupulous, unprincipled business policies; exploiters of the "quick turn-over-God-care-for-the-dying" type of financiers (?); short-change artists suddenly elevated to the altitude of "magnates"; oh! Lawd, I see so many things you'd never have space to print them all and would be libelled if you did (although you'd win your case if you were).

Now I'll admit that not all exhibitors use academic English and may have a penchant for such words as "ain't," "fillum," "vodderveel" and sich like, and they may not know a split infinitive from a split second; they may even think that a double negative is first cousin to double exposure, but in all this I hold that he has nothing on some of the men higher up. The proportion of illiteracy remains about equal. I know that this is lese Majeste, but it is nevertheless true. Probably it would have been wiser if some of our exhibitors had stuck to the last, the forge or the razor, but this is true of all industries and does not condemn the entire exhibitor-personnel of the country to general illiteracy and idiocy. Actually, the one strongest evidence of mental weakness they have collectively shown has been their entrance into a business whose destiny has been for years in the hands of men who have had the idea that "principle" represents something that runs a high school.

I say that the average exhibitor is NOT an illiterate. I say that they CAN think for themselves, that they CAN and WILL analyze their own problems and that finally they will effectually demonstrate their capacity for right thinking when some intelligent men assume control of this fool business and give them something to think about.

Up to now I have seen nothing emanating from our so-called leaders but press-agent piffle and hopeless junk. They offer us advice; Lord! yes, pages of it, but it's all so damn bromidic and valueless! We complain of a belliake and they say, "TAKE WINDEM AND SHOOTEM'S PUNK PICTURES FOR PALE PROFITS." We yelp about the war tax and they say, "Cheer up! We are with you in spirit. Pay up and later times may be better. We AIN'T agoing to lose," etc. OH pshaw! I am going to quit. If you print this and say you want it, I'll send you another. Well?

Delcah Photoplay Company Has First Two Productions, "Inside the Lines" and "Man of Bronze" Ready to Show Trade

JOSEPH MONTROSE, general manager of the Delcah Photoplay Company, is on his way to New York with the first two photoplays made by this new organization of Los Angeles, in which Lewis S. Stone is starred. Mr. Montrose was for a number of years associated with Oliver Morosco as manager of Morosco's theatres in Los Angeles. More recently he served as manager of Klaw & Erlanger theatrical attractions on the West Coast. While in New York he will make his headquarters with the latter company.

One of the photoplays is an adaptation of Lewis Stone's speaking stage success, "Inside the Lines," which ran one season at the Longacre theatre, and the following season in Chicago, with Stone in the starring role. The play began a successful run at the Apollo theatre in London, ten months ago, and is still playing to good business. The play is an adaptation from the Earl Derr Biggers novel, and both the story and play were used by Monte M. Katterjohn, who prepared the screen adaptation. The supporting cast in this subject includes Margaret Clayton as leading woman, George Fields, Joseph Singleton, Helen Dunbar, Ida Lewis, Willard Wayne, Arthur Allardt, Nick Cogley and others. Every player has had experience on the screen. "Inside the Lines" is a story of Germany's secret service octopus, with suspense sustained to the last hundred feet of the film. The photoplay is decidedly timely, dealing as it does with a subject daily under discussion.

The second production is titled "The Man of Bronze," and is an original photoplay by Karl Koolidge, which has a decided western atmosphere. Miss Clayton, Harry Von Meter and George Fields are Mr. Stone's principal supports, and some exceptional work is done for the screen by Teddy, the "dog with the human brain." Both productions were made under the direction of David Hartford, former stage director for Oliver Morosco, and who had two years' experience with the Thomas H. Ince organization.

Lewis Stone is considered by speaking stage producers as one of the best leading men of to-day, and for this reason his debut in pictures will be watched with interest.

Films to Teach Fuel Saving

Industrial Department of Universal Will Assist Fuel Administration in Demonstrating to the Public Proper Fire Room Methods

PLANS for a motion picture campaign as part of a great national drive having for its object the prevention of another such fuel famine as recently crippled the nation's industries have been submitted to the Fuel Administration by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company through its industrial department and have received the O. K. of Administrator Garfield. Although various mediums are to be used in waging the conservation fight which is expected to save to the country at least 100,000,000 tons of coal a year, moving picture films will form the first line of attack. The fight will be carried right into the trenches of the manufacturers and their engineers and firemen, the weapons of attack consisting of two reels of film showing proper and improper fire room methods. Six leaks through the profits earned by the sales organization may be allowed to escape as the result of fire room inefficiency as will be pointed out.

When completed, the films will be turned over to Mr. Garfield, who plans to distribute them broadcast through the medium of the various manufacturers' associations, Boards of Trade, engineer and firemen's labor organizations, etc.

It is planned eventually to issue moving pictures which will show householders what fuel waste in the home is costing them. This will also be done by Universal in cooperation with the government and the films will, in all probability, be released through the medium of the Universal Screen Magazine in addition to the Fuel Commission's other channels of distribution.

Universal to Show Munitions Plant at Work

To serve as a direct appeal for support of the Administration and to refute the contention of those who have been criticizing the alleged failure of the War Department to speed up the manufacture of munitions, Universal plans eventually to show to the general public, through the medium of the Universal Screen Magazine, the industrial films recently taken of the Colt Patent Fire Arms Co. plant at Hartford, Conn.

The pictures were taken under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager of Universal's Industrial Department, and although they show the entire ordnance product of the Colt concern, particular attention was paid to the filming, in detail, of the construction of the machine guns that are being turned out in vast quantities to equip the United States forces, both here and abroad.

According to Mr. Levey, it is Universal's intention to first show the film to the workers in the Colt plant, after which it will be shown to workers in every industrial center throughout the country. It will then be placed in the Screen Magazine to be shown to the public at large.

"Prussianism As It Really Is"—Gerard

Director William Nigh has shot the final scenes of James W. Gerard's picture, "My Four Years in Germany," adapted from Ambassador Gerard's book, of the same name, and is now engaged in cutting, editing and assembling the production. It is announced that a trade showing will be given in the near future. The exact date will be announced later.

Mr. Gerard, in commenting upon the picture and the interpretation which Director Nigh and the cast have given his exposition of the incidents happening during his four years in Germany as Ambassador to the Imperial Government, said:

"I was impressed," said Mr. Gerard in a recent talk to a gathering of film representatives, "by the eagerness shown by the thousands of people, who flocked to hear my lectures, to learn about the inside history of this gigantic struggle of nations, and my interest in this film production is so great, because I realize the vastness of the audiences reached in the motion picture theatre, and the thoroughness and reality with which the story is told in the film. If there be any American in whose mind there is still a question of the necessity of America's entry into this war, the production will settle that question forever."

It shows Prussianism as it really is—the Kaiser, whose oath is worth nothing, whether he pledges himself as monarch or man, Tirpitz, Hindenburg and the Imperial ring. It shows the iron hold of Prussianism on the German people, the outrages of women and children in Belgium and France, the systematic starvation of prisoners, the deportation and enslaving of non-combatants to deliberate ravaging of towns and countries, the sinking of neutral vessels, and the attitude of the Emperor and his clique toward America before war was ever dreamed of here.

Ohio Board Eliminates Surplus Lingerie

The Ohio Board of Censorship, during the first nineteen days of the new year, made but seven eliminations in 131 reels reviewed. These were made in five plays, three of which were comedies and the other two dramas. For the greater part the eliminations were in scenes disclosing women's lingerie.

Entertained for Enid Bennett and Fiance

Enid Bennett, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, who is soon to marry Fred Niblo, the actor, was a guest of honor, with Mr. Niblo, at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. C. Gardner Sullivan at their Los Angeles home, Jan. 26.

Jersey Exhibitors Meet Independents

Motion picture exhibitors of the State of New Jersey attended a meeting at the Robert Treat hotel, Newark, N. J., on February 12, at 10 a. m. with the independent producers of the Producers & Exhibitors, Affiliated.

Thomas P. Boyd, general manager of the Douglass Natural Color Film Company, Ltd., San Rafael, Cal., showed the first of a series of natural color pictures, last week, at Wurlitzer Hall. The first of the series is in four reels and presents scenes taken in the National Yellowstone Park and in the Grand Canyon. The color effect is said to register with a natural effect. Scenes taken at Mr. Douglass', the inventor's estate in California are shown, and the various color effects are brought out to good advantage in the scenes taken at the bath beach. Mirror Lake, Bridal Veil Falls and other points of natural history are shown.

A more detailed account of the process and its grade of perfection is given in Mr. Corey's article in the projection department of this issue.

Tempest Stirred by Ban on Comedy

There is a lively storm raging in the province of Manitoba over the recent action taken by the Manitoba Legislature when a bill was passed prohibiting the showing in motion pictures of comic reels.

The western province government bases its action for banning comic films on the grounds that they are not in good taste during war times.

Naturally the action has raised a storm of protest, not only from moving pictrue theatre managers, but the people themselves, who claim that this is the most opportune time for the showing of screen comedy—that the people need screen amusement at this period more than at any other time.

Letters from many readers of the Winnipeg papers are being published daily in which the drastic action of the Manitoba government is roundly censured.

Pass Sunday Closing Law in Kearney

The city commission of Kearney, Neb., has passed an ordinance closing the motion picture theatres on Sunday. Exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska have been fearing a widespread move for Sunday closing, as there have been many demands for this step since fuel conservation became an issue.

Charlie Berman Re-enters Industry

Charlie Berman, who recently severed his connection with the Regal Films, Itd., is back in the film industry once more. It is understood that Berman will this time represent the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation throughout Canada, occupying the position of general sales manager. He will work in conjunction with Superfeatures, Ltd., handling the distribution of these features in Canada, with headquarters in Toronto.

Virginia Censor Echo Is Heard

Exhibitor W. F. Harris Claims A. E. A. Was "Made Light Of" by One Trade Paper in Referring to State Squabble

ONE of the first echoes, looked upon by some as a boomerang, resounding from the recently launched battle in Virginia against censorship by three persons, made itself heard last week. This was in the form of a letter from Exhibitor W. F. Harris of the Broadway theatre, Hopewell, Va., and reverberates with the claim that the Exhibitors' Trade Review was either misinformed in its press notices of the censorship situation or published an article for the sole reason to attack the president of the Virginia A. E. A. Exhibitor Harris declares he is not a champion of Jake Wells, and is not connected with him in any way.

Mr. Harris has written a letter to the Exhibitors' Trade Review giving his views of the case. This letter he has asked that publication to publish, in hopes of setting things right in the minds of those who have possibly been misled concerning the Virginia situation, which has been covered in detailed correctness in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The Harris epistle to the Exhibitors' Trade Review is in part as follows:

"Your issue of February 9 to hand and before going further I wish to say that in this issue of your paper you have printed an article, about which you have been misinformed, or you published it for the sole reason that you were attacking the president of the A. E. A., which organization you have been fighting ever since its inception, and you have made light of every attempt of this organization to do anything, or to be recognized as a legitimate exhibitors' organization. I also wish to state that what I am about to write is not prompted by Jake Wells, or any one connected with him in any way. I know Mr. Wells in a business way, as an exhibitor of the State of Virginia, and cannot see any just reason why he should be unjustly attacked by your paper. I have no other reason than the one above stated for defending Mr. Wells.

"In your article you stated that Mr. Wells 'startled the Virginia exhibitors by favoring censorship,' and that Mr. Wells says 'We want censorship, and we need it.' Mr. Wells did say that, but not to any legislative committee, but to the called meeting of the exhibitors at Murphy's hotel in Richmond, and what he said and explained about wanting censorship is as follows: That there are a great many pictures coming into Virginia that were indecent, and should not be shown by legitimate picture houses, as these pictures were the cause of the people asking the State Legislature now for censorship. It was then stated upon the floor that any exhibitor running pictures of the above type should be immediately expelled from the A. E. A. of Virginia, and that legitimate exchanges should be notified to stop serving them with service. (The above was not, however, suggested by Mr. Wells, but by an exhibitor). Every exhibitor knew that there had been a movement all over the entire state and that the Senators and Representatives had been practically told to vote for censorship when it was introduced, and when said censorship bill was introduced in the legislature it was done unknown to any exhibitor in the state. We were dumfounded at such an action, but immediately got to work to try to head it off. With the joint committee, it was found that we were up against a brick wall and that nothing could be done to change their opinions. All of this was before Mr. Lust came to Richmond for the meeting, but an amendment was read at the exhibitors' meeting and unanimously passed; said resolution was that the General Assembly would not create a Virginia censorship, but would continue to allow pictures to come into Virginia that had been censored by the Maryland State Board or the National Board of Review. This amendment was to be introduced after every effort had been exhausted to defeat the original bill asking for complete censorship. Mr. Lust seemed to be under the impression that all that was necessary to do would be for the exhibitors to go to the legislators and say, 'gentlemen, you dare not pass this censorship bill,' and that said legislators would get down on their knees and beg forgiveness and withdraw their bill for censorship and not pass it.

"I received from Mr. Wells a copy of an editorial against censorship printed in the 'Richmond Times-Dispatch,' which copies of editorials Mr. Wells is paying for and sending to every exhibitor in the State of Virginia. Neither does this look as though Mr. Wells was in favor of the censorship, or even an advocate of it. You state editorially that there will be state censorship in Virginia, and that the credit and the glory will go to its standard-bearer, Jake Wells. I think personally that this is the most preposterous and abominable misstatement of facts that was ever published. The fight against censorship, headed by Mr. Wells, has been so hot and furious that not only has the committee changed its plans, but has practically agreed that there will be no salaried position created, but that if any censorship bill is passed it would only be about $1.00 on the original film and 50 cents on the duplicates. The exhibitors have not given up hopes and are working very hard, sending letters, telegrams, and personal visits to the members of the legislature requesting that this bill be defeated. The writer has personally talked to about thirty odd members of the Virginia legislature, and none of them are in favor of the censorship."

House Remained Open on Tuesday

At least one motion picture theatre proprietor in the United States threw his house open to the public on Lincoln's Birthday, the last of the proscribed Tuesdays. This was D. J. Shepherd, proprietor of the Palace theatre, East Orange, N. J. Mr. Shepherd availed himself of the clause which permitted theatres to open on Tuesdays for performances in the nature of patriotic benefits, and announced that there would be a regular showing of pictures on February 12, the entire proceeds to go to the Smileage Book campaign being conducted by the local Rotary Club. To quote Mr. Shepherd, "We turned them away all afternoon and evening."

Fairbanks Repeats Rodeo at 'Frisco

In response to telegraphic requests from John N. Willys, chairman of the national committee of the War Camp Community Recreation Fund, and Raymond S. Fosdick, chairman of the War Department's commission on training camp activities, Douglas Fairbanks rounded up the cowboys and Indians who participated in his Red Cross benefit rodeo at Los Angeles and took them up to San Francisco and repeated the rodeo on February 8. The event was a big success and added a considerable sum to the camp recreation fund.

Mary Pickford an Officer of Red Cross

Mary Pickford has been appointed to the position of publicity bureau chairman for the Pacific Coast of the Salvage Department of the Red Cross. The appointment was made by Mrs. Otheman Stevens, of Los Angeles, the originator and director of the department. The salvage department collects junk and other waste and turns it into money. In the event that the movement becomes national, Miss Pickford will remain in charge of the publicity for the entire country.

Crisis Is Near in Star Evil

Producers Voice Belief Situation Will Result in Benefit to Industry—Players Seeking Engagements Ask Less Remuneration

THAT the editorial in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, "Are the Stars Falling?" was not a bit premature, but thoroughly in step with the times is evidenced this week in reports and advices from both the East and West Coast centers of activity to the effect that a crisis in the alleged star evil situation is near at hand.

Although the heads of both the manufacturing and exhibiting ends of the moving picture industry have been gradually increasing the intensity of their denunciations of the high-salaried-star evil, the first definite step towards decisively solving this problem seems to have been inaugurated by Father Time and his two trusty lieutenants, Supply and Demand.

Advices from the West Coast state that a condition bordering upon panic now exists in the ranks of the film players as the result of the scarcity of engagements that has prevailed during the last three months. It is said that many stars who have been twinkling in the moving picture firmament with a fair degree of regularity are now "At Liberty."

That this condition, however unpleasant it may be to the players who have heretofore been able to get almost any salary their agents were clever enough to demand, may prove the long-sought remedy for the expensive star evil is thought by far-sighted students of the industry to be exceedingly likely. At any rate, several of the studio managers now report that one result of the scarcity of engagements experienced by the more prominent screen stars, is a modification of their salary demands.

As the largest of the producing units, Universal City has probably felt to a greater degree the effect of the panicky condition prevailing among the jobless players. Carl Laemmle is the authority for the statement that never before has his company's West Coast organization received so many applications from stars who have not up to the present time been identified with Universal. Nevertheless, in spite of being thus able to literally get the cream of workless stars, Mr. Laemmle states that his company is well satisfied with the line-up of the players now in its employ and that no important changes in its personnel are contemplated.

So far as the general run of the studios located in and around Los Angeles is concerned, it is an open secret that this is the season of apprehension for those players working under contracts calling for big salaries, and which are due to expire shortly. The general storm of condemnation of which the star has been made the centre, was bound in the very nature of things to have its effect upon the players and the result is that the rank and file of them are now willing to get back to first principles and work for salaries which both exhibitors and producers would regard as being more reasonable.

Aside from the fact that there are more players than there are positions to be filled, there has of late been an increasing tendency upon the part of the manufacturers to consult their selling organizations, rather than the players themselves, for a proper estimate of the cash value to them of their leading performers.

Cressey-Select Suit Settled

Select Pictures Corporation Takes Over Distribution of Selznick Subjects in Southwest—Cressey to Handle Open Market Productions

NEGOTIATIONS have been closed and an agreement has been entered into whereby all of the Selznick productions which have been handled in the Southwest since the advent of Selznick pictures by the J. A. Cressey Interests of Dallas, have been turned over to the Dallas office of the Select Pictures Corporation. This brings to an end a long period of litigation, all injunctions being released and all the differences settled.

The Cressey office was opened sixteen months ago to exploit big productions in the South. At that time Mr. Cressey claimed to have had a five-year contract for the Clara Kimball Young pictures, but after the release of the third picture the fourth was tied up in the courts by injunctions, and is only now released by the closing of all litigation and the consummation of this sale to the Select office.

The Cressey offices will in future continue to handle big productions secured from the open market. Among their recent acquisitions are "God's Man," the Frohman production with H. B. Warner, and "The End of the World." They are also handling a series of two-reel pictures featuring Wm. S. Hart. Mr. Cressey will in future make the prices to exhibitors himself.

Paralta Moves New York Offices

Paralta Plays, Inc., has moved its offices from the Godfrey building, 729 Seventh avenue, to a new building at 8 West 48th street, near Fifth avenue. The new quarters, occupy the entire top floor of the building and a private projection room and film vaults are being erected on the roof, an innovation. Paralta has been located in the old quarters in the Golfrey building ever since the inception of the organization.

In and Out of Town

Leopold D. Wharton and Theodore W. Wharton, Wharton, Inc., returned to Ithaca last week, after a three weeks' stay in New York assisting in the filming of scenes for William Flynn's serial, "The Eagle's Eye." They will return to New York within a few weeks.

David Simon, treasurer of The Leader Film Service, 804 Pennsylvania avenue, Pittsburgh, arrived in New York last week to look at the offerings current on the independent market. Mr. Simon visited the MOTION PICTURES NEWS and shook hands with old friends. He is stopping at the Knickerbocker Hotel. He will be in New York for several days, after which time he will go to Boston for a few days. Mr. Simon's service covers western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Ivan Abramson, president and general manager of the Graphic Films, returned to New York last week from Palm Beach, Fla., where he was taking exteriors for Graphic's late production, "Moral Suicide." He was accompanied by John Mason, Ann Luther, Claire Whitney and Sidney Mason and other members of the cast presenting "Moral Suicide."

P. S. Harrison, prominent exhibitor and exchangeman from the West Coast, arrived in New York last week to look at the current releases.

Joseph W. Engle, treasurer of Metro, left New York for the Coast, last week, on business pertaining to production.

Joseph Montrose, representing Delcah Company, of Los Angeles, arrived in New York last week with a print of his new picture, "Inside the Lines."

Oscar Apfel, formerly director for Paralta, came on from the Coast last week. He is stopping at Hotel Seymour.

A. E. Pickford, large theatre owner of Glasgow, Scotland, is in New York. He is stopping at Hotel Gramatan, the Bronx.

Fred B. Murphy, Boston, has handled "Parentage" in the New England territory with great success. Mr. Murphy said that Seng's production ran a week at the Boston theatre to over 51,000 paid admissions.

William N. Selig, Selig Polyscope, Chicago, arrived in New York last week on business.

Hodkinson to Visit Coast Exhibitors

W. W. Hodkinson is making a business trip to the coast in the interests of his exhibitors' co-operative plan. His first stop will be Denver. Mr. Hodkinson is on his old stamping ground, having spent years on the coast both as an exhibitor and as a distributor. He will probably visit a number of exchange centers on his return trip.

New Corporations

THE following new corporations within the industry were included in the records of the Corporation Trust Company, of Jersey City, for the week ending February 16:

DELAWARE

INTERSTATE PICTURE CORPORATION, Wilmington. To lease films for motion picture machines and conduct places of amusement. Capital, $1,000,000. The incorporators are George T. O'Dell, South Bend, Ind.; Byron S. Vail and Marshall M. Shumaker, Fort Wayne, Ind.

NEW YORK

MARS FILM CORPORATION, New York City. To manufacture and exhibit films. Capital, $15,000. George Orth, Max Paskes and Louis Rosenberg are the incorporators.

PRODUCERS' AND EXHIBITORS' AFFILIATED, INC., New York City. General motion picture business. Capital, $10,000. Those interested are William L. Sherrill, Harry Rapf and Lester Park.

THE MASKS, INC., New York City. Motion picture business. Capital, $10,000. Incorporators, Sigmund Milau, Lillian Kornfeld and Joseph P. Slensby.

Shurtleff Heads Hodkinson Sales Force

W. W. Hodkinson announced this week that he has engaged C. E. Shurtleff as general manager for "Hodkinson Service."

Mr. Shurtleff has been sales manager for Select Pictures for the past six months. Prior to his connection with the Select Pictures he was special representative for Pathe for one year. Shurtleff hails from commercial fields. He did specialty work for the National Biscuit Company twelve years ago, at which time he headed an efficiency training school for the salesmen of that company, at the same time spreading the gospel of the Uneeda Biscuit.

Soon afterward, Mr. Shurtleff engaged in the motion picture business as a salesman for Vitagraph's office in Cleveland and he managed the office of that company later in Detroit and Cincinnati.

Baltimore Exhibitors Go Before Legislature

A delegation headed by Frank A. Hornig, an exhibitor of Baltimore, and president of the Maryland Branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, visited Annapolis February 14 in the interests of the Censorship Amendment bill. The delegation consisted of not only motion picture men of the city but citizens interested in the recall of the censorship provision.

Dinner Planned for Fox

Arrangements were completed last week for a dinner to William Fox, to be given in the ballroom of the Astor Hotel on February 24.

The dinner will take the form of a tribute to Mr. Fox for his record of public service in the field of charity and in his own profession.

The following is the list of speakers: Toastmaster, Wilton Lackaye; Rennold Wolf, Arthur Brisbane, De Wolf Hopper, Felix M. Warburg, Victor J. Dowling, Raymond Hitchcock and William A. Brady.

"United Picture Theatres" Latest

Lee Ochs Heads New Co-operative Booking Movement—Aims at National Scope

THE United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is the latest of the cooperative film booking organizations to break upon the horizon.

Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is president of the United; C. R. Seelye, formerly of Pathe, Vitagraph and World, is vice-president, in charge of the exchange and general business of the company; Louis F. Blumenthal, owner of the National theatre of Jersey City, Palace, Classic and Annex of New York, and Palace of Brooklyn, with three other theatres now in the process of construction, is treasurer; Charles M. Rosenthal is secretary, and Milton M. Goldsmith has been made general counsel.

The initial announcement of the United states that it is expected that the thirty principal exchange centers will be covered by fifty experienced exchange managers and salesmen by March 1. The company's ambitious plans are based upon the hope of securing the co-operative interest of exhibitors throughout the country, the announcement of the promoters pointing to the success of the American Druggists Syndicate which issued $5,000,000 worth of stock to 22,000 druggists in all sections of the country at the start of its operations.

The statement goes on to say:

"The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., will make no contracts to secure pictures until 2,000 days have been signed, but as a number of days have already been secured the company expects to secure 4,200 days before September 1. The first release will be announced at that time or before and all prices will be based on that number of days.

"For several years many of the most progressive leaders in the industry have frankly admitted the desirability of a co-operative company that would eliminate wastage in both film, studio and selling pictures and get producers more money with which to make better pictures. At the same time, it was recognized as necessary that film rentals should be reduced to exhibitors and all far-sighted men in the industry to-day realize that the progress of the business demands better pictures and more consistent pictures with lower rentals and that this great result can be accomplished only by co-operation.

"Whenever a co-operative plan has been submitted it has been impossible through personal and business jealousies, and up to the present time producers and distributors while favoring such a plan have gained little headway.

"The views of all the prominent producers were secured by the officers of the United before the company was incorporated, and when explained it was found that the producers are confident that the plan will work out brilliantly to the benefit of both producer and exhibitor by eliminating unnecessary waste and increasing profits for both producer and exhibitor.

"The United plan proposes to reduce the film rentals about 30 per cent., giving producers a larger and quicker revenue than under the present expensive exchange system.

"The present living costs, experts insist, make necessary the organization of co-operative companies in all lines of business and the United believes it has found a way toward genuine co-operation in the film industry.

"In a word, the United's plan is co-operative buying, so that feature pictures will be produced for 4,000 days at one operation rather than with 4,000 operations.

"The United will make further announcements of its plans from time to time."

Oklahomans Against Deposits

State Branch, A. E. A., Calls on Government to Request Film Companies to Convert Money Held by Them Into Liberty Bonds

MEMBERS of the Oklahoma branch, American Exhibitors' Association, assembled in annual convention at Oklahoma City, February 5 and 6, went on record as being opposed to the deposit system and a resolution was unanimously adopted calling upon the government to request the film companies to convert into Liberty Bonds all exhibitors' money held by them as advance deposits for service. Fourteen new members were voted in and the entire staff of officers, headed by A. B. Momand, president, was re-elected.

Representatives of the various film companies were present and made short talks at the open meeting. Dallas exchanges contributed Al Russell of Arco, True Thompson of True Film Company, Doak Roberts of Select, John Ezell of Foursquare, LeRoy Bickel of Metro, and others to the representation. Sixty-two exhibitors were in attendance.

Following is the text of the resolution:

"Be it Resolved, That the American Exhibitors' Association, Oklahoma State branch, in convention assembled, do hereby give consent and authorize the United States Government to request that the film companies convert into Liberty Bonds the vast amount of the exhibitors' money now held by said film companies as advance deposits for film service, such bonds to be held by the film companies as security deposits on film service furnished to the exhibitors by the said film companies to the end that this money, which is now lying idle, may be used in the prosecution of the war. Oklahoma members of the association who are now receiving interest on advance deposits, in excess of the rate paid on Liberty Bonds agree to accept the reduction."

Abrams' Code the Golden Rule

Famous Players-Lasky Managing Director Enunciates Business Aims of His Company's New Administrative Bureau

A MESSAGE of encouragement to exhibitors the world over, as well as a pronounced—not to say flattering—endorsement of the views expressed in the editorial, "Prosperity and Co-operation," which appeared in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, is contained in a communication received from Hiram Abrams, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Administrative Bureau.

Mr. Abrams said: "I was very pleased indeed at the clear insight and broad understanding of the motion picture business and its essential problems which you manifested in your very interesting editorial in last week's issue, commenting upon our inauguration of an Administrative Bureau for the purpose of advancing the relations between producers-distributors and exhibitors. You have glimpsed our aims in this direction with rare perception and discernment, and I wish to compliment you upon this profound knowledge of the business principles that bind these factors.

"It may interest you to know that we are anxious to achieve, through our Administrative Bureau, specifically the following results:

"The greater and more permanent prosperity of the exhibitor.

"Further opportunities for exhibitors to expand their activities and attain their several aspirations, by the introduction of a more flexible code of conduct between them and us.

"The improvement of all the agencies that contribute to the exhibitors' success, from the productions themselves down to the last details of service.

"To give them a vote in the administration of our business, in the selection of our stars and their vehicles, and in the manner of distributing these productions.

"To teach them that we wish to give and take, and that we do not ever want to take more than we give—or even as much.

"To live and let live, because we know we cannot do the first unless we do the second.

"To make them realize that we understand that even when a good picture is completed, distributed, and booked to the exhibitor, our work has not been finished—for we believe it our duty, after all that is accomplished, to bring people to the theatre to see it; that has been, and is to be in even a greater degree, our definition of service, for the photoplay is not truly sold until the producer and distributor have secured people to see it in such numbers as to permit the exhibitor to sell what he has bought at a profit.

"To give each and every exhibitor individual and personal service.

"'To do unto others as we would have them do unto us'—there is just as much 1918 business efficiency in that line as there is theology.

"This work is genuinely to be a labor of love. It is the biggest purpose of my life to accomplish this program with results just as satisfactory to the exhibitor as to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Unless we attain that end, we shall have failed in our mission."

Special Showing to Answer Loew

"Eagle's Eye" to Show at Biltmore Before Representative Patriotic Societies for Opinions—Washington's Birthday

THE first three episodes of William J. Flynn's serial, "The Eagle's Eye," produced by Wharton Brothers at their Ithaca studio and released through the Foursquare Pictures exchanges, will be given a special showing in the grand ball room of Hotel Biltmore at 2:30 o'clock p.m., on Washington's Birthday, February 22. The showing will be given for representatives of the patriotic societies of New York. The complete serial is in twenty episodes. The first three were shown for the trade and reviewed by the press, at the Strand theatre, a few weeks ago.

The showing, indirectly, is an effectual answer to the statement said to have been made by Marcus Loew to a New York daily, that he had heard that the serial was pro-German. As Chief Flynn said in making the announcement:

"I have arranged this private showing because I desire the opinion of Americans as to the value of this production as a means of creating a great patriotism and inspiring a more intense loyalty. A prominent motion picture exhibitor, controlling a great number of theatres, has criticised "The Eagle's Eye." He claims its revelations of Imperial German intrigue, espionage and propaganda in America 'would be too great a contrast to the thoughts and opinions of his German patrons.'"

Theodore W. Wharton, president of Wharton, Inc., which company produced "The Eagle's Eye," alleges in an affidavit, signed and sworn to before a notary public, "that on Friday, January 18, the said serial was exhibited to the trade and Fred Mitchell who deponent (Mr. Wharton) verily believes, (is) in charge of the booking department of Marcus Loew in the motion picture department; that Mr. Mitchell attended at said exhibition; that following Mr. Mitchell's view of the motion picture and at the solicitation of Mr. Gainsberg, the first episode of the said serial picture was on the 23rd day of January, 1918, exhibited at the offices of Marcus Loew and was viewed by Mr. Loew, Mr. Schenck and Mr. Mitchell. That Mr. Gainsberg notified deponent that he was advised by the Loew offices that Mr. Loew did not care to present the above named serial; that they did not think it advisable to book it in their theatres owing to the fact that they catered to a large German patronage and that there was a great deal in the picture which they feared would offend their German patrons and that they did not desire to present anything which would offend such patrons."

In answer to these alleged statements made by Mr. Loew and his representatives, Chief Flynn will show the first three episodes at the Hotel Biltmore and has sent invitations to the following societies to get the members' opinion as to whether the alleged statements were justified: American Defense Society, National Security League, American Flag Association, American Legion, Colonial Dames of America, Congress of States Society, George Washington Memorial Association, Guardians of American Liberty, Order of the Founders and Patriots of America, Star Spangled Banner Association, United Military Order of America and all the greater city chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution and The Sons of the American Revolution. City officials and many of the judges and justices of the city courts have been invited.

Bronze Tablet to Rothapfel Unveiled

Saturday morning, February 17, at 11:30, at the Rivoli theatre was the time and place of the unveiling of a bronze bas relief tablet, presented to S. L. Rothapfel by the members of the Famous Players-Lasky Company in recognition of the many services he has rendered the motion picture industry. The tablet, which hangs in the centre of the lobby of the Rivoli theatre, Rothapfel's newest house, contains his likeness with allegorical decorations representing the art in the business of which he is one of the foremost projectors.

A large gathering of film heads and press men, including Adolph Zukor, Arthur Friend, William L. Sherry, B. P. Shulberg, Emile Shauer, William A. Johnston and F. H. Hallberg attended the unveiling. Mr. Johnston made the introductory speech, Mr. Zukor dwelt briefly on the many events of interest in the career of Rothapfel and subsequent to the unveiling Hamish McLaurin, Mr. Rothapfel's press agent, invited the assembly to a lunch at Churchills.

The tablet is engraved with the names of Zukor, Jesse Lasky and Cecil B. DeMille, the chief directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Those who attended the ceremonies, the unveiling and the luncheon were: S. L. Rothapfel, Adolph Zukor, Arthur S. Friend, Emile E. Shauer, William A. Johnston, William L. Sherry, B. P. Schulberg, J. C. Graham, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Tom Wiley, Jim Milligan, Randall M. White, James Beecroft, Nat S. Stronge, Milton Lowenthal, Ernest A. Dench, Bert Adler, A. L. Raven, F. H. Hallberg, Frederick James Smith, Fritz Tidden, Peter Milne, J. L. Kelly, Charles E. Moyer, A. M. Botsford, Charles E. Wagner, Patrick Kearney, Pete J. Schmid, Walter K. Hill, L. J. Bourstein, H. F. Randall, John C. Flinn, J. D. Williams, A. E. McCune and Hamish McLaurin.

Powers Chairman of Camp Committee

Other Motion Picture Men Also Chosen to Serve in Facilitating Use of Films in Training Stations—Meeting Planned for Early Date

P. A. POWERS, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been asked by Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the Commission on Training Camp Activities, War Department, to serve as chairman of a committee to co-operate in the use of motion pictures in the various training camps, and has accepted the place.

This committee, according to the list arranged by Chairman Fosdick, includes at least fourteen other motion picture men, but at this time it is not known definitely whether they have replied to the request in the affirmative. It is generally thought the men selected will consent to serve, and that a meeting will be called at an early date to take up the matter of films in the soldier camps.

Tribute to Pictures

The fact that the Commission on Training Camp Activities has chosen the motion picture as one of the most effective means of training troops and furnishing them entertainment and relaxation as well is but another proof of the high place held by the celluloid drama in official circles, motion picture men said following Chairman Fosdick's request for a committee. Proof of this, they cite, has been evidenced more than once since the war started, and will doubtless leave the industry in a more solid position after the war than it has even been. In Chairman Fosdick's letter to Mr. Powers, reference was made to the attitude which the Training Camp Commission held on motion pictures.

Mr. Fosdick, in his letter, said: "I have written to the gentlemen whose names are attached, asking them to serve on a committee to cooperate with the Commissions on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Departmentse in facilitating the use of motion pictures in the various camps and training stations. If agreeable to you, I should like you to serve as chairman of that committee.

"From the conferences that you have had with Mr. Hanmer and me, and from our correspondence, you are aware of the commission's attitude with respect to the use of motion pictures. On this account I hope that you will accept the chairmanship of this sub-committee. Mr. Hanmer will represent the commission in this connection, and will afford you every possible facility for making effective such assistance as the committee is able to give.

"You will be notified promptly of the acceptance of those who have been invited to serve so that a meeting may be called at an early date."

Fifteen Men Selected

The complete list of the motion picture men selected to serve on the sub-committee on motion pictures of the War and Navy Commissions on Training Camp Activities, is as follows: Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corp.; Ricord Gradwell, World Film Corp.; J. A. Berst, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Wm. Fox, Fox Film Corp.; Richard Roland, Metro Pictures Corp.; S. A. Lynch, Triangle Pictures Corp.; J. R. Freuler, Mutual Film Corp.; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corp.; George Kleine, General Film Corp.; D. W. Griffith, Motion Picture Producers Assn.; Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph Company; O. G. Cocks, Advisory Secy., Nat. Bd. of Review; W. D. McGuire, Exec. Secy., Nat. Bd. of Review; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Mfg. Company; Lee F. Hanmer (ex-officio), Commissions on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Depts.

In accepting the chairmanship of the committee, Mr. Powers said in his letter to Chairman Fosdick: "I am in receipt of your letter of the 1st, advising me that you have notified a number of the men in the motion picture industry to serve on a committee to cooperate with the Commissions on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Departments in facilitating the use of motion pictures in various camps and training stations, and your request that I should serve on said committee.

"I am pleased to be of service to you in the work you are doing, and shall be glad to act as chairman of this committee. I am sure that with the proper kind of cooperation from the membership of this proposed committee, very good results can be accomplished along the lines suggested by you.

Further developments, following the first meeting of the newly chosen committee, are expected shortly.

YOUR CITY'S FAULTS

Criticism of Advertising in Various Communities to Appear

MOTION picture advertising is like many other things—it differs in various cities. In some there seems to be an epidemic of bad display work, other centers are known for the excellence of their exploitation.

In some, too, the newspapers and exhibitors are co-operating for mutual benefit. You will be glad to know of the methods that are being followed, so that you can adapt them to your locality and get the proven benefits.

This will be the first serious, intelligent effort to get at the troubles in various sections, and these articles are sure to attract the attention of exhibitors, exchange men and newspapers everywhere. They will carry analyses of the advertising as a whole and examinations of individual cases.

Omaha will be the first city. It will be taken up in the next issue. Watch for the announcement of your city.

"Our Navy" Shown at White House

Prizma color pictures, "Our Navy," produced under the direction of Dr. George A. Dorsey, were shown in the East Room of the White House, Friday, February 11, for the review of President and Mrs. Wilson and members of the Cabinet. This is the first time since the beginning of the war that a motion picture has been shown in the Executive Mansion at Washington, D. C. The President was unable to attend the private showing held at the Washington Press Club, on February 8. He expressed a desire to see Dr. Dorsey's color picture and the showing was arranged for screening at the White House. Dr. Dorsey said that President Wilson expressed himself as more than pleased with the exhibition and said that the dignity and the greatness of the Navy had been portrayed in a manner that could not help but please any American.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels was the guest of honor at the Press Club showing. Officers of the Navy and Army, chiefs of Government bureaus, members of Congress and other distinguished guests were present. At the conclusion of the showing Secretary Daniels expressed his gratification at having witnessed the most remarkable, realistic and life-like pictures of the American Navy he had ever seen projected and said that he hoped the pictures would be shown in every city, town and hamlet in the United States. Both President Wilson and Secretary Daniels thanked Dr. Dorsey for the courtesy extended them and complimented him on his excellent production.

Eaton Will Make Red Cross Pictures

Jack Eaton, president of Town and Country Films, Inc., has been commissioned to make the next Red Cross pictures to be used in connection with the second war fund drive, which will begin the early part of May. With Frank D. Sniffen, head of the motion picture department of the drive, Mr. Eaton and James Montgomery Flagg have gone to New Orleans to take the exterior scenes for the production. The picture will be known as "The Spirit of the Red Cross."

Films Make Many New Readers

This Is Conclusion Reached by the Library Journal, in which Advisory Secretary Cocks of Board of Review Concurs

THAT instead of being rivals for public attention, as they have long been considered, motion pictures and libraries may meet each other half way and walk hand in hand along the highway of culture, to their mutual benefit and the common good, is the conclusion which the Library Journal arrives at editorially in its current number. The issue is specialized on this subject. The editorial points out that motion pictures are now more and more finding their subjects in great books, such as "Quo Vadis" and "Les Miserables," and that many house managers are appending a word to their films to the effect that the books may be found upon the shelves of the local libraries. As a feature of the issue the Journal prints a list of book films recently approved by the National Board of Review and states that the list will be augmented from time to time if libraries prove sufficiently interested.

Among several articles on this subject is one written by Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review, in which he discusses the responses to a questionnaire sent out to libraries throughout the country some time ago, the article being entitled, "Motion Pictures and Reading Habits." In taking up the questions contained in the questionnaire, he says: "In response to the question: 'Have the motion pictures changed the reading habits of your townspeople?' the majority seemed to feel that the influence upon library readers had not been appreciable, but that with the group of non-readers there was a decided change. Among those who frequented the libraries evenings there was a falling off of requests for books and also of readers within the buildings because of the attractiveness of the motion pictures. There was also an increased desire to read popular fiction, some of it not up to the standard of the books on the shelves of the libraries. Some few readers had been stimulated to request books of travel, and another small group to demand the standard works of fiction and the classics as a result of pictures discussing these themes in the commercial motion picture houses.

"One direct result of the motion pictures exhibited in given centers is an increased demand for fiction dealing with the stories exhibited. In a majority of cases this was after the film had been shown.

"In response to the inquiry: 'Do new readers request books which have been made into motion pictures?' twenty-six answered unqualifiedly in the affirmative. Nineteen stated that requests came to a limited extent and six answered in the negative. It is, of course, impossible to decide just what causes a new reader to request a certain book of fiction unless he makes a positive statement. There is apparently a drift on the part of motion picture habitués to the libraries without a very decided attempt being made by either the motion picture exhibitors or the librarians to accelerate it."

"Smoke Week" Sees Big Drive

Country-wide Campaign Set in Motion in the Interests of "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund"

ARRANGEMENTS had been made by February 16 at the headquarters in New York of "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" whereby the following week, designated as "Washington's Birthday Smoke Week," would see in force a concentrated drive, participated in by every city in the country, in the interests of the fund.

Not only have the various newspapers and magazines which are now receiving contributions for the sending of tobacco to our boys across the seas given wide-spread publicity and assistance to make "Smoke Week" a success, but negotiations were completed whereby a chain of large tobacco stores stretching from coast to coast will donate a certain percentage of their receipts to help swell the already large fund.

In order to properly impress the minds of the public with the importance of "Smoke Week" a series of appropriate posters for display in railroad stations, street cars and on various bill-boards throughout the country were prepared under the supervision of Bert Ennis, publicity director. These lithographs are striking in design and were executed by a leading magazine artist.

It is deemed especially appropriate that the seven days in which the celebration of the birthday of the country's first President, George Washington, occurs, should have been selected as the time for a vigorous campaign to secure contributions for our present-day fighters now enduring the discomforts and dangers of the trenches "over there," in order that we may have security and peace.

Monday "Boost" Attacked

Much opposition has been expressed in Richmond, Va., regarding the "holiday rate" that has been charged at the motion picture theatres on heatless Mondays. Protests are heard on the streets as well as through the columns of the papers.

Ticket Tax Proposed in Manitoba

Hon. Edward Brown, provincial treasurer for Manitoba, moved the second reading of his Amusement Tax bill in the legislature at the first session of the current week. He said its purpose was to entirely supplement the province's revenue. There had been three and a half years of war and, except for the patriotic levy, this was the first war measure tax to be levied on Manitobans. This province and Saskatchewan were the only ones in the Dominion without a theatre tax at present, he said.

The bill, said Mr. Brown, provided for a voluntary tax, for nobody was compelled to go to the theatre. He had been informed that the tax on amusements was the most popular one in Ontario and Quebec. He expected the revenue from the tax to be about $200,000 yearly and that would practically take the place from the lost revenue from the sale of liquor licenses, which followed the passing of the Temperance Act.

The second reading carried, and now the bill is to go before the law amendments committee, where it will be fought tooth and nail by the motion picture men and proprietors of legitimate houses, who have retained legal counsel for that purpose.

Another Cameraman Answers Call

Harry Thorpe of the Douglas Fairbanks photographic staff, while in the midst of filming "Headin' South," the new Artcraft Picture, received a notification from Washington, commissioning him to report immediately to the Aerial School of Photography, San Antonio, Texas.

This leaves the photographing of "Headin' South" entirely in the hands of chief Cameraman Hugh McClung, who is training three new students, Glenn McWilliams, Len Powers and Connie De Roo, to turn extra cameras on the scenes in which Fairbanks does a difficult stunt or when a great number of "extras" are employed.

Bulletin Merges with Picture Digest

The Motion Picture Bulletin, which for the past two years has been published by the Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd., as a combined trade paper and house organ, has effected a merger with the Moving Picture Digest of Montreal. The new publication will be issued weekly in Toronto, to be known as the Canadian Moving Picture Digest. Merrick R. Nutting, who launched the Digest some years ago in Montreal, will act as business manager and Raymond S. Peck, who has been in charge of The Bulletin, will become managing editor of the Digest.

Omaha Theatre Makes Red Cross Record

During the Red Cross drive in Omaha, Neb., the Strand, a motion picture house, raised more money than any two of the $2 "legitimate" houses combined. This theatre reported the largest returns of any amusement places in Omaha.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Greene?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

NO, gentlemen, this is not a likeness of a university professor of Pedagogics.

Film man, is right.

Mr. Greene knows the film business from A to Z.

This doesn't mean from Abrams to Zukor.

Mr. Greene got his film knowledge first hand, dating back to the days of Greene's Features in New England; since which time no other name has bobbed up more frequently or centrally in the swift evolutions of the American picture mart.

W. E. Greene was Hiram Abrams' first boss. Boss and employee were so necessary each to the other that they did the inevitable thing—became partners.

And partners they always will be—in some form or other.

They make an ideal partnership because they are as unlike as two poles.

A good story is told of their early business association. W. E. Greene fired—in righteous indignation—a salesman who spoke discourteously of his partner, Hiram Abrams. Hiram Abrams—with a smile—took him right back. "He was a good salesman," said Mr. Abrams.

Two personalities more different could scarcely be imagined. If Mr. Abrams' personality is pink in tone, Mr. Greene's is lily white. If Mr. Abrams radiates the genial warmth of Southern climes, Mr. Greene — with all his nice courtesy — is—well, he's practical New England all over.

We had an interview with Mr. Greene, but modesty forbids us to publish it.

It turned out to be an interview with ourselves.

We proposed questions and answered them at length. It would have made a good editorial, but it would scarcely be classed as an interview.

Mr. Greene simply said:

"Yes!"

—or—

"No!"

He reminds us of the diplomat—who could keep silent in seven languages.

His reserve, however, is that of reserve strength. You have a feeling that he is holding a lot back—a lot he knows and a lot he intends to, and can do.

He takes things easily in his quiet, unassertive way, and is hard to provoke. But when he is provoked he will go the limit.

His clothes reflect him. They are negative. He is neatly dressed; but he evidently doesn't give a rip about their effect upon you.

He is argument proof. If he agrees with you he says "Yes," if he doesn't he says "No." That's all there is to it. He just smiles at you—pleasantly, but frigidly—back of his professorial glasses.

He seems to regard conversation as a weakness no man should indulge in.

Of course, this gives him lots of time to execute. Not talking much, he acts a great deal. And he certainly does execute. In his quiet, concentrated, self-contained way—he does things.

He knows picture values.

He is not creative or imaginative. He leaves that end of the business to the producer. But he knows pictures when they are made and what to do with them.

There are few men in the trade as deeply and thoroughly interested in pictures. They are the soup-to-nuts of his daily life. He opens his interest in them as he opens his eggs each morning at the Hotel. He eats, drinks, thinks pictures all day long. At night he crawls into bed and reads Motion Picture News.

It is stated to us that Mr. Greene doesn't know a war is going on—except that between the Shuberts and Klaw & Erlanger. We don't believe this is true—of a man by the name of Greene from New England.

Just the same, we do believe that Mr. Greene takes more interest in the distribution map of the United States and

The Reader Has His Say

An Eighty Per Center Tells of the War's Effect on Business

Motion Picture News.

Gentlemen: Enclosed please find check for the "News." A remarkable trade journal—what would the 80 per cent. man do without it?

By the way, it may interest you to hear how the tax has affected us. Well, we have lost about $350 since same was "wished" on us. Unless a small town has some war industry the inhabitants have all they can do to exist with the H. C. O. L. and contributions to the various charities, etc. Therefore, the luxuries of life have to be omited by most of our former patrons. Some day, some practical administrator will be able to distinguish between the city theatre and the "small town" theatre and adjust taxes accordingly. It amused us to read that "big business" was done the Monday holidays in the cities. We had an attendance of 118 and 116 respectively, so what do we care which day we close? We advertise in the local papers and post our town like a circus, but until the war is over we will be lucky to continue, even as we are at present.

You will occasionally read where some egotistical yap will roast any exhibitor who complains and will assert that it is the unfortunate exhibitor's fault. The charms of a good healty country life cause many a "live wire" to put up with the financial situation that exists in most small towns. The small town man, usually, owns his own home, and is content with a small margin on his investment.

Had the tax been adjusted properly, there is no doubt that no complaint would have been made by the "small town man." However, if our sacrifices will win the war, they will not have been made in vain. We will try to keep going, as we want to do our bit. We are not squealing; we are just stating matters as they exist, and Mr. Critic, remember, the Big Town man of to-day was the Small Town man of yesterday. It takes some nerve to run a theatre in mountain and valley towns with blizzards, 30 to 40 below zero, and taxes to be counted in.

Yours very truly,
H. E. CANE, West Street Theatre,
Coudersport, Pa.

P. S.—How many city theatres would pay taxes on a loser? Patriotism is easy for a Winner!

What's Good Enough for the Small House Is Good Enough for the Large

Editor, Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir: On Page 736 "Motion Picture News" issue February 2, 1918, I read a review of two comedies and note the reviewer said they were inexpensive productions, and would serve as fillers for the average small town house.

Now Mr. Johnston, if those comedies are not good enough for the large houses, certainly they are not good enough for the small houses. I cannot see why producers and distributors alike think that anything will do for a small house. This is one of the things which is playing an important part in killing the 80 per centers. Give the small town house good films, and a very good part of their battles are won. The small man has to await the minimum price, and this means worn-out film and poor satisfaction to his patrons.

Now Mr. Johnston, you are wrong in thinking that films which are not good enough for the small house. Our patrons demand as good as any house, and I believe if a comedy is not good enough for one house, then it is not good enough for the other. Wishing yourself and the "News" continued success. Yours truly,

LUDWIG GEILING, Proprietor.
Majestic Theatre, Baldwin, La.

A Word Regarding the Ever-Shifting Exchange Managers

Motion Picture News.

Gentlemen: In reply to your recent article under the heading, "Never Shifted-Exchangeman" permit me to say a few words.

I heartily agree with "Never Shifted" in many of his statements, for when you "deliver the goods" your position nowadays is usually secure. The writer was employed by only one company, which covered a period of three and one-half years, and worked up from office boy to manager, but have now been in business for myself since 1913.

There is one exception I wish to make, and at the same time request the New York office to give heed to, it being the rule and NOT THE EXCEPTION.

A man is selected who has made good in a certain territory and sent to a new field; because he has done things back home he is expected in ten to thirty days to show a profit, systematize the office, stop exhibitors' complaints and get acquainted with the trade, etc.

Is there any other business in this fair land of ours that asks these impossible things? No motter how well posted Mr. Manager is in the motion picture business he must familiarize himself with the the local conditions, and you give him a Herculean task when you insist upon results before two or four months.

The frequent changes are the cause of so much dissatisfaction and lack of confidence of the exhibitors in the exchanges with the above described policy. For the betterment of the picture business the BIG BOYS IN THE SWIVEL CHAIRS should change their policy.

Hoping to see these few lines in your valued columns, and with best wishes for your continued success, I am

Sincerely yours,
ABE H. KAUFMAN.

WE SENT IT

Exhibitor Wanted Name for His Theatre and He Got It

IN the course of its varied and detailed work for the benefit of the exhibitor the Motion Picture News is sending out a blank to certain exhibitors asking for information.

One of these lines provides for "Name of Theatre."

The man who received the letter was just building a new house, but he knew the sort of service that the NEWS is giving. So he filled out that line: "Send us one."

And he got a suggestion of a name by the next mail.

There isn't any sort of service that you cannot ask from us.

And the best part of it is that YOU GET IT.

Suggests Campaign to Store Up Coal This Summer

Motion Picture News.

Gentlemen: I am enclosing a clipping from the Cleveland News. We are situated right here in the coal district and there is no reason why we should be shut down, only that it is our patriotic duty as Americans to take our medicine with a smile. Next year we may have heatless weeks instead of heatless days if we do not put in our coal this Summer. So I suggest every picture show in the United States run a slide reading: "To avoid heatless weeks next Winter put in your coal now." Every picture magazine should run a page ad. reading the same.

We have the power to help—why not use it?

A Word for the Small Town Motion Theatre Man

Editor, Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir: I have always thought that as for the little show, I mean of 200 seats, that the items in the different trade papers took no notice of us. For that reason when Mr. Rembusch asked me if I had sent him in a report on my war business I asked him "What's the use?" and when he got through telling me "What's the use," I sent in my report. Now all you small exhibitors get busy and help these men out. Out here we don't grumble at the Government, but if a lot of us are to keep our business, there will have to be a change for the better. Whether we pay or the public pays the admission tax depends upon your local conditions. I tried collecting it for three months. Three of my near competitors paid it themselves, and, I am sorry to say, so it came to the point where I had to pay it also. As to raising prices, there is a limit. You can't say to the public "pay me more"—suppose the public won't? As Mr. Laemmle says, "Well, you can quit." I do think, though, that this fifteen cent tax is awfully unfair to us. I wrote to the Revenue Collector at Washington and asked him if there was a tax on films of a year old, and they said there was no tax on films released or sold previous to October 3, 1917. But, all the same, I was paying fifteen cents tax on films twelve months old. You got to hand it to the film men on that question, for, according to that, the fifteen cent tax must be a good clear profit. I may be mistaken in my surmise, but all the same it will do no harm to send in your report and try for a square deal. C. M.

Porter Makes Trip in Interests of Simplex

The recent five-day shut-down imposed by the Fuel Administration was utilized to good advantage by Manager E. M. Porter of the Precision Machine Co., who seized the opportunity to visit the various Simplex distributors in the eastern and central states.

Mr. Porter's flying trip comprehended the cities of Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and Kansas City, and he found the business in Simplex projectors to be satisfactory in all quarters. This, he avers, speaks well for the zone system of Simplex distribution, with an exclusive distributor in each territory. Mr. Porter also believes in active competition between manufacturers.

Industrial Film Shows Motors in War

In co-operation with C. D. Studebaker, manager of the Firestone Time and Rubber Company, Inc., Universal's industrial department has produced a picture titled, "Over the Roads to War," a patriotic film.

Based on the saving of Paris by General Gallieni in August, three years ago, when he commandeered every available automobile and motor truck and rushed thousands of the republic's warriors to meet the onrushing hordes of the Kaiser, turning them back and saving the French capital by his quick thinking, the film shows how the motor car is helping the Allies win the war.

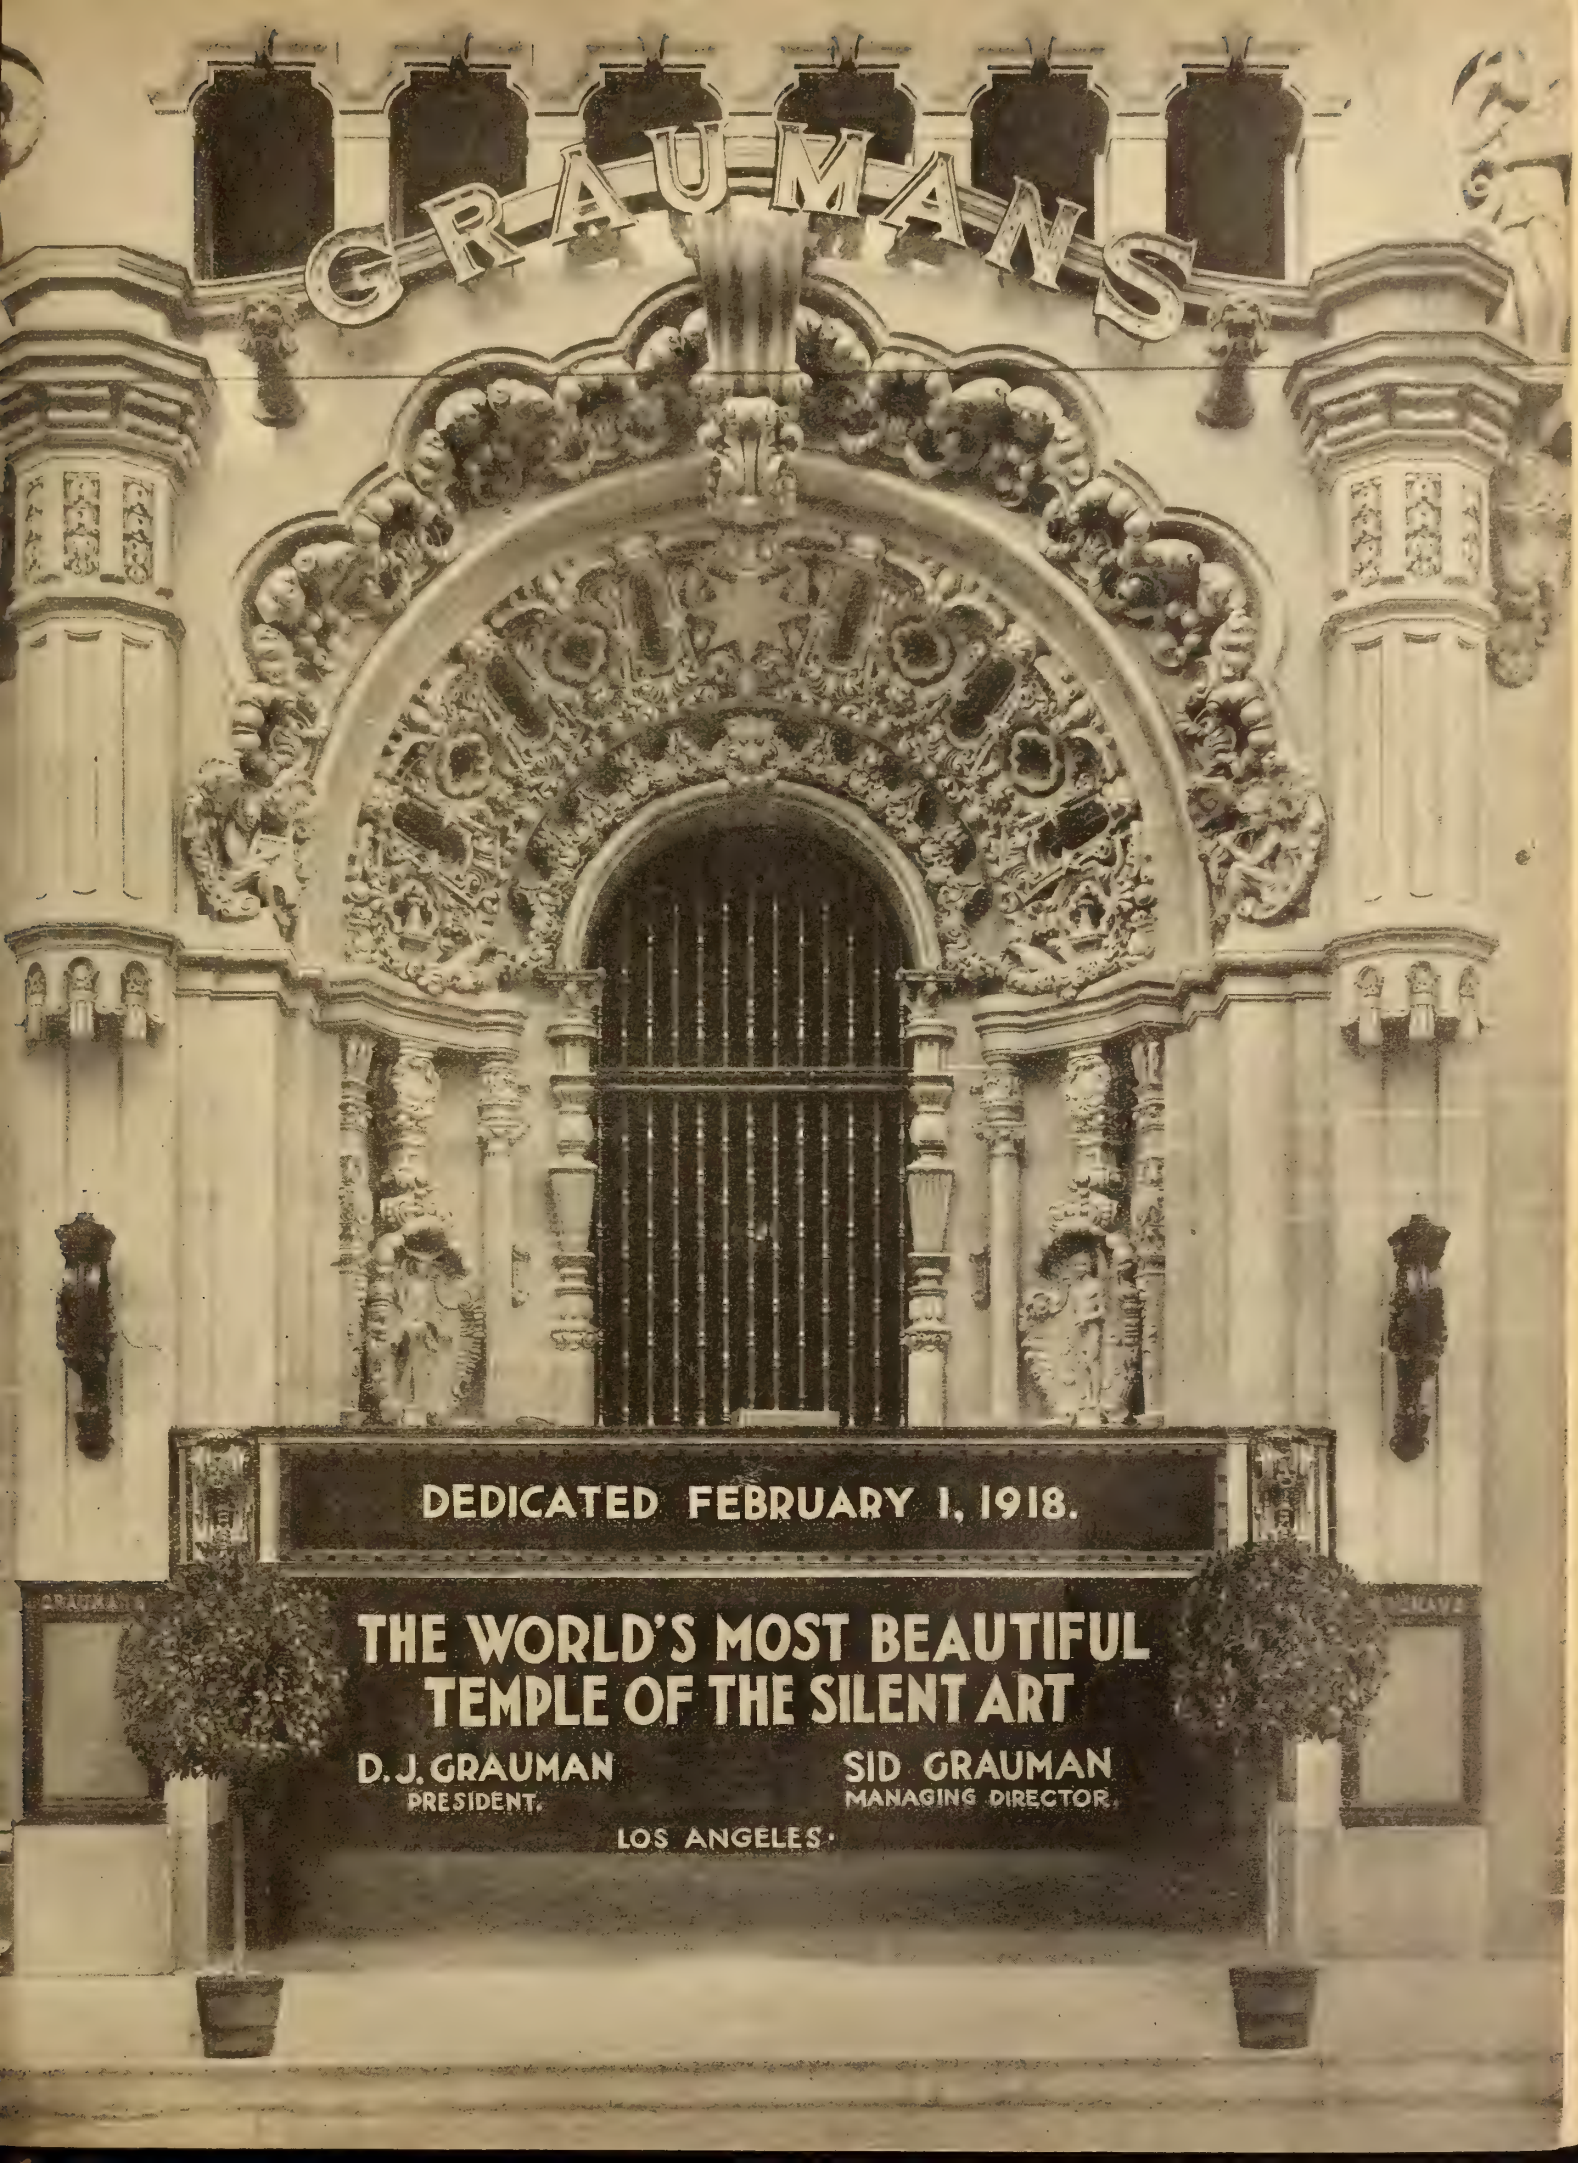
Canada, than he does in the war map of Europe.

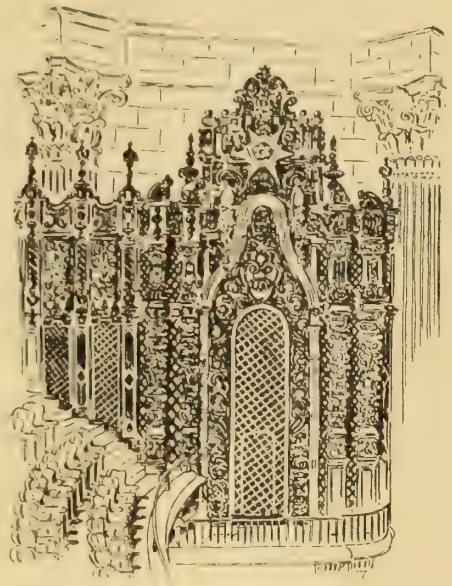
It is not quite fair to Mr. Greene to say that our interview was wholly negative on his part.

He said two things of considerable consequence and close to our heart.

First, that business is mighty good and going to be even better.



Secondly, that the smaller house needed help and was going to get it.



And, as we say, we have great faith in Mr. Greene's judgment and execution.

New Theatre Crowns Grauman

A NEW shrine—a richly marvelous one—was dedicated to the cinema art, its lovers, and creators, on February 1, when Grauman's million dollar theatre in Los Angeles, was most auspiciously opened with principals of the west coast film colony, the elite of Los Angeles society and business circles, and scores of people of prominence, now wintering in the southwest, making up the audience.

The building of this wonderful house was inaugurated with the intention of combining beauty and art for purely commercial reasons. In the past few years there has been a decided change in the business district of Los Angeles. Formerly all of the principal stores were located on South Broadway between First and Fifth streets. Expansion of the city caused more or less of an exodus from this district to a new shopping center in the vicinity of Seventh street. Property owners of the former popular district sought some magnet that would hold the business interests in their original locality. Homer Laughlin, a most prominent man in investment circles and a student of art, was the moving spirit in the organization of the Stability Building Company, which resulted in the erection of the Edison building and Grauman's million dollar theatre.

The men composing the company represent millions, and when first plans were made for the theatre, the early day Western phrase, "The sky's the limit," was adopted for a motto. No matter what it cost, this theatre was to be the finest conceivable.

After such plans were made by the influential men of the Broadway district—all real Californians—they sought a director for their amusement palace, and it was then, after brief negotiations, that D. J. and Sid Grauman, then of San Francisco, were selected. Eighteen years ago they had opened the first ten-cent vaudeville house in America at San Francisco. Fifty feet of film constituted one number of the program and the theatre was called the Unique. It had a seating capacity of three hundred. The venture was so successful that a circuit of houses was opened in five other California cities.

Sid Grauman

In 1900 the Grauman Lyceum theatre with twenty-eight hundred seats, was built at San Francisco, where vaudeville and musical comedy continued most successfully until the San Francisco fire, when the edifice was totally destroyed. As soon as the ruins were cleared, a canvass top was erected, and in this was given the first amusement for the people of the stricken city. The National, as the canvass theatre was named, was shortly after replaced by one of corrugated iron. Three performances were given a day, and not one was missed in the reconstruction of the theatre.

Three years later the Graumans constructed on Market street between Fifth and Sixth streets, a 1,900 capacity house at a cost of $330,000. This theatre is still operated by the Graumans. In the past few years Graumans' Imperial, seating 1,700, was built, and is still in operation under the name of the Strand. More recently these men caused the erection of the Globe theatre in the Mission district of San Francisco, seating 2,500. It is the intention of both D. J. and Sid Grauman to give all of their attention to the conduct of the new Los Angeles house.

Promptly at eight o'clock on the opening night, the fire curtain with its weird mural painting, disappeared and the orchestra of thirty pieces played the "Star-Spangled Banner," while the auditorium and stage of the theatre was most dazzlingly lighted with red, white and blue effects. The Liberty Medley of 1918, arranged by Rudolph G. Kopp, orchestra director, and composed of popular patriotic song melodies, followed by William Tell Overture, constituted the opening orchestra numbers. Reverend Baker P. Lee of the Episcopal Christ Church made the dedication speech, and urged the harmony of the church, educational and amusement interests for the general betterment of mankind. After a short scenic furnished by the Mutual, which showed scenes in Holland, Jesse Crawford, organist, gave a short recital.

Grauman's Topical Review, consisting of selected portions from Universal and Mutual-Gaumont Weeklies, constituted the fourth number of the program.

The feature number of the program was the Thomas H. Ince-Artcraft production starring William S. Hart, "The Silent Man." Preceding the projection of the picture, the beautiful crimson and cream curtain rose, and out of the nightlike blackness of the stage appeared a gigantic bronze bust of William S. Hart in his make-up of the Western man. The theme of the incidental music for the Hart subject was a new composition entitled "Big Bill," written as a special compliment to Sid Grauman by Victor Schertzinger, now a director of Thomas H. Ince Productions, who formerly served this noted producer in the capacity of preparing musical scores.

Prolonged applause following the picture was broken when William S. Hart appeared in person on the stage. He made a short, but appropriate talk pertaining to his work in "The Silent Man."

"A Trip Through the Sennett Studios" is the title of a short travelogue showing back of the wings scenes of the famous comedy factory of Edendale, Los Angeles. This film was prepared especially for the Grauman theatre opening as a compliment to Sid Grauman from Mack Sennett.

The program was concluded by vocal solos of Mme. Lina Reggiani, and the showing of the Paramount comedy in which Mack Sennett presented Chester Conklin in "His Hidden Purpose."

Sid Grauman has contracted for many of the Paramount and Artcraft subjects, and in the attractive program of thirty pages, announces the showing of subjects filmed under the directorial supervision of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and other Paramount and Artcraft films together with comedies from the Mack Sennett studios.

The scale of prices provide any seat in the house with the exception of loge, for fifteen cents at matinees. Loge seats will be twenty-five cents. The evening prices are, balcony 15, dress circle and orchestra 25, and loges 35 cents. All tickets are subject to Federal war tax.

D. J. Grauman is president; Sid Grauman, managing director, and his staff of assistants are: John D. Callicott, assistant managing director; J. Leroy Drug, business manager; Leonard J. Meyberg, house manager; Arthur E. Dunning, publicity director; Florence Houtalinge, secretary to Sid Grauman; George Becker, master electrician; Mayburn Taylor, assistant electrician; Archie Smith, projection engineer; Edward Davis, assistant projection engineer; Samuel Jamison, special officer; Charles Nagle, doorkeeper; Florence Reichert and Dorothy Alleyne, cashiers; Edward Temple, costumer; Witzel, official photographer. Jesse Crawford is organist and Rudolph G. Kopp, orchestra director. The orchestra is composed of thirty musicians, many of whom are soloists who have been identified with numerous symphony orchestras.

Music by the orchestra and the immense new organ, not yet ready, are to be features of the presentations.

Construction Shows Today's Best

GRAUMAN'S contains much that is new in theatrecraft. Architecturally it is decidedly California-esque, being of the Spanish-Mexican Mission type within and without. In the construction new means of obtaining desired results were introduced most successfully.

When the builders selected A. C. Martin to design and serve as construction engineer, he began a study of motion picture and speaking stage theatres of the country. By personal visits he learned their defects, and sought remedies for the unsolved problems.

The theatre is built in connection with a new office building, designed especially for the needs of the Southern California Edison Company in Los Angeles. The office building consists of twelve stories, with a frontage of 115 feet on Broadway and 65 feet on Third street. Behind this office building is the theatre, which has an entrance on Broadway through the center panel of the office building. The auditorium of the theatre is approximately 106 feet long, 103 feet wide, and contains a balcony 70 feet long. On the main floor there are 1,400 seats and 950 are in the balcony.

The balcony is reached by two wide stairways, one from each side of the main lobby. These reach a mezzanine floor over the rear part of the balcony. On the mezzanine floor there are entrances to the front part of the balcony in the center and on both sides, and also an incline which leads to entrances to the upper part of the balcony.

As substitutes for structural steel, reinforced concrete was used. A reinforced concrete arch, 12 feet wide and 3 feet thick, was erected across the auditorium about half way between the front of the balcony and the back wall of the auditorium. The truss of this arch is taken by a tension member containing seventy one and one-quarter inch steel bars.

Six reinforced concrete cantilever trusses were erected to support the balcony, and these rest about midway on the arch and are anchored to the back wall of the auditorium.

The top of the cantilevers form the framework for the floor of the balcony, and the lower side of the trusses serve as framework for the mezzanine floor under the balcony. When this construction was employed members of the building department of the city of Los Angeles questioned the advisability of it and refused to accept the construction until a thorough test of the entire balcony had been made, and required loading the balcony at the rate of 250 pounds per square foot, placing a total of 1,400,000 pounds of sand thereon. The deflection of the arch at its center under this load was three-sixteenths of an inch, and the deflection of the cantilevers at their extreme ends an equal amount, which was about half the expected deflection. This test satisfied the inspectors and the construction was passed by the city building department.

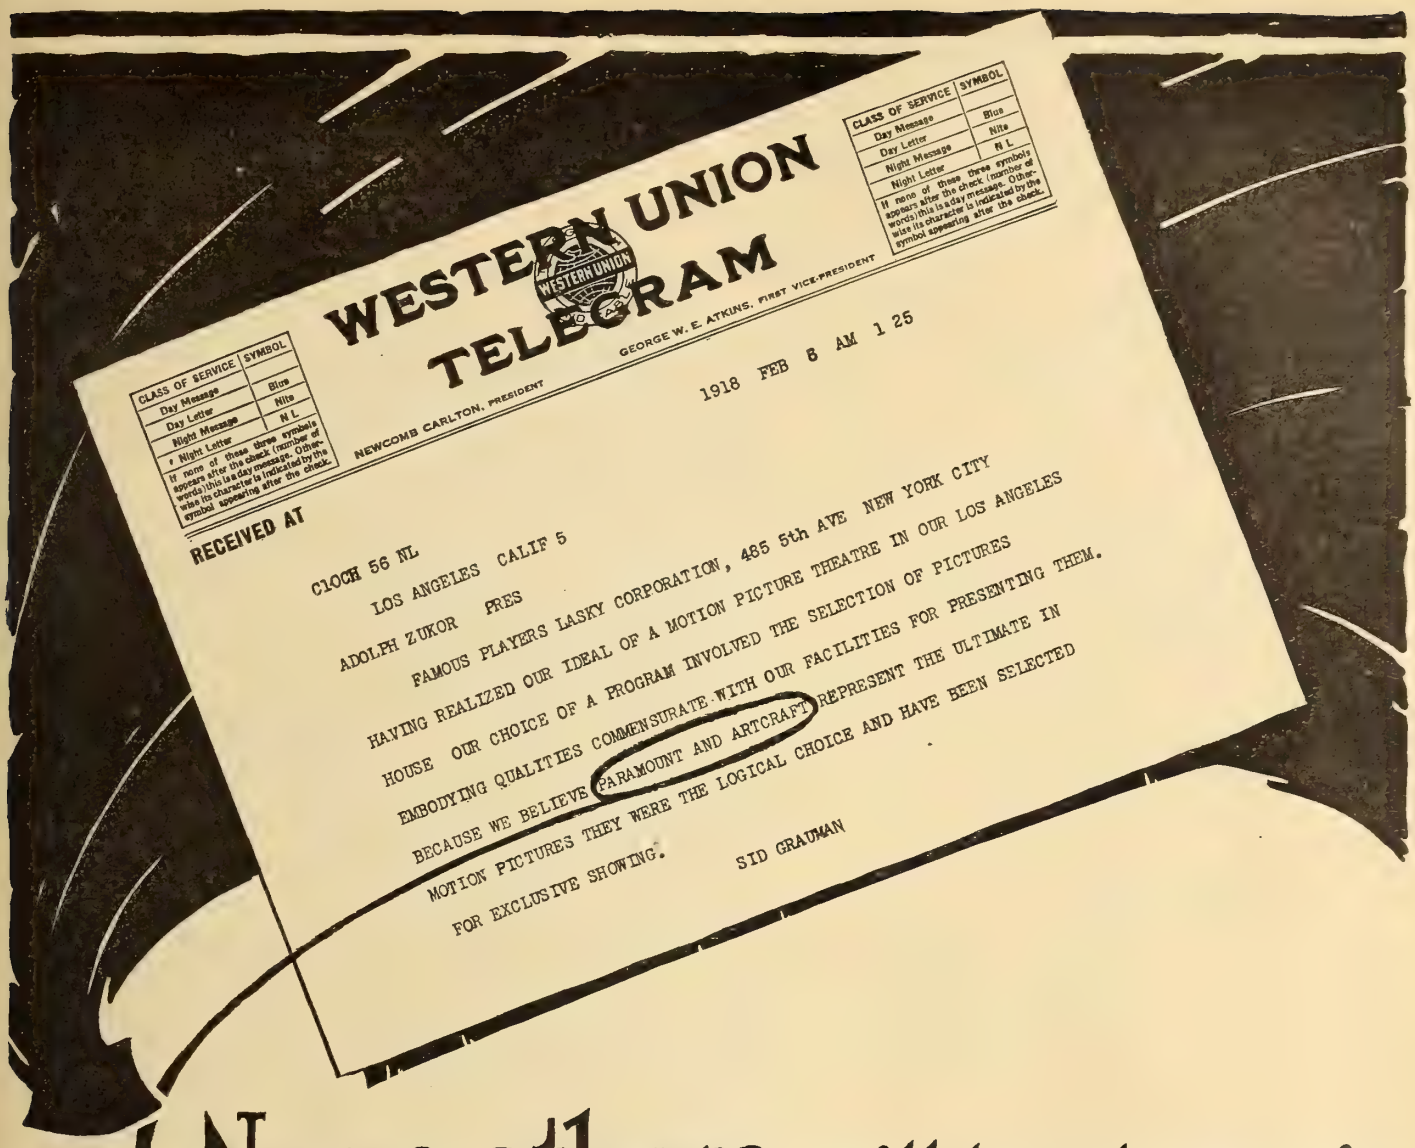
The projection room occupies a place between the upper and lower bars of the cantilevers, a few feet from the front of the balcony and immediately in the center. This places the lens of the projection machine on a level with the center of the screen, which, when hung squarely with the auditorium in the center of the stage, is square with the front of the lens, and but sixty-seven feet distant. The advantages of this location for the projecting machines are several. The proper light can be secured at a very low amperage, and an excellent picture, free from distortions, in any seat of the house is secured.

Grauman's, although it is to be used at least for the present as a motion picture theatre, was designed and has facilities for the spoken drama or vaudeville. The proscenium arch is 40 by 40 feet, and the stage back of this is 35 feet deep and almost the full width of the building, 103 feet.

The acoustics are exceptionally good, due to the auditorium being of an oval shape with no square partitions parallel with the stage.

It is estimated that with the ample exits the building could be emptied in two minutes.

The aisles and lobby spaces throughout are ample and there is a general appearance of spaciousness. On the mezzanine floor the atmosphere of security is enhanced by the remarkably large areas given over to circulation. Here there is a vaulted corridor, a rotunda and the various retiring rooms, parlors, etc., for the use of the women patrons. The men's smoking room is approached by wide staircases leading from the main floor to the basement.



The ventilation system, installed by Munger and Munger, of 174 East Union street, Pasadena, Cal., is thoroughly modern. Tempered air is brought in from under the seats of the auditorium and balcony floors, and is exhaled through the great dome which surmounts the entire heating space. The outlets are evenly distributed over the dome area, thus assuring an even distribution. The system is operated in conjunction with a steam heating plant, installed by the same firm.

General View of Building and Theatre

To the California Glass and Paint Company goes credit for the beautiful glass in the doors and windows of the theatre, as well as the entire front of the office building. These were designed by this California firm, which also furnished much of the paint, varnishes and other material necessary for the finishing. This firm supplied similar materials for practically all of the new office and business buildings erected within the past few years in Los Angeles.

All doors of exits and those of dressing rooms and in other partitions are of a fire-proof nature, made under a new process by the California Fireproof Door Company, of 1933 South Los Angeles street, Los Angeles. The process provides for covering doors of wood with metal and making the metal covering not only air-tight, but fitting the wood portion of the door so tightly there are no air spaces within. This elimination of oxygen prevents the wood from taking fire, no matter how hot it becomes, and makes this kind of a door superior to an all-metal door, because the latter, under heat, will warp badly. At the same time the wood serves as a non-conductor of heat.

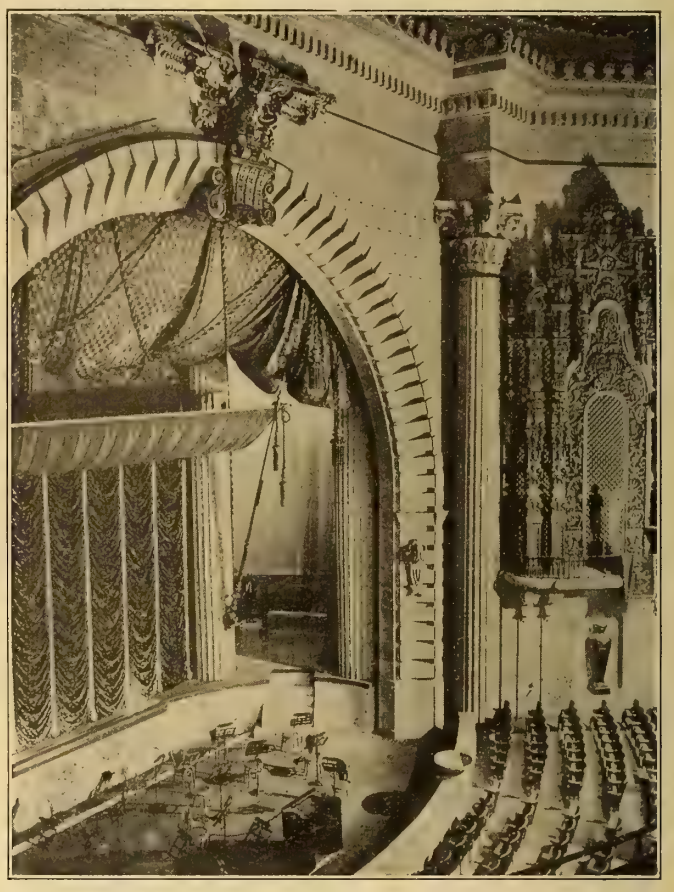
Stage Setting Strikingly Original



THE stage setting including all curtains, drops, canopies, panoplies, massive columns of travertine of the ninety-foot cyclorama were prepared by the Edwin H. Flagg Scenic Company at their mammoth Los Angeles studio by the staff of nationally known artists maintained by this scenic company. The setting was designed by William L. Woollett. The back drop for the stage setting was painted by F. M. DuMond, and the curtain by Mr. Woollett.

The stage set represents the porch of a Greek temple which looks out on a vast impersonal Bakst-like interpretation of "Death Valley" with the "Funeral Range" in the distance. These mountains open in a great purple "Gate of the World," the whole surmounted by a greenish yellow sky. Between the columns are hung dark, richly colored curtains and the so-called porch or stage is roofed by a canopy of the same general color scheme of the curtain, but decorated with two winged figures which depict the Spirit of Good and Evil fighting in mid-air.

The picture screen is arranged between the columns of the portico, in such a way that it seems to be a temporary stage set composed of canopy and curtains. The columns are travertine stone in harmony with the travertine stone columns of the inside of the theatre, and the color scheme and decoration is carried out on the stage in such a manner as to create the impression that the architecture of the theatre auditorium itself has been extended into the stage areas.

The curtain carries out the technique of a sketch giving the impression that some giant hand with enormous crayons had made the drawing. It is a study in grays. Giant redwoods are shown in profile. On either side of the trunk of the trees are enormous forms which form two of the three chief decorative spots of color. In the center below these two flame forms is a figure of Creation, shown as a child with wings. The child being surrounded by a mystic goblin-like creature which seems to grow out of the tree trunks. This feature is intended to depict Civilization of the World with unseen and evil forces near. Below the flames on either side and emerging from a belt of gray which covers the lower portion of the picture, as a mist, are seen two groups, one depicting Work and the other Worship, and in the center two unobtrusive figures which in a satirical way depict the relation of the sexes. The idea back of this design is that life on the physical plane is seen as through a mist, darkly, whereas the flames and the figures of Creation are shown in the astral plane where the real forces of life are located.

The superior work executed by the Edwin H. Flagg Scenic Company, coupled with the fact that it has as its staff some of the most noted scenic artists of the country, caused Sid Grauman to place with this company the important work of preparing the stage setting, which work represents an investment of more than ten thousand dollars. Edwin H. Flagg, president and general manager, established the company in the Marlow theatre building, Chicago, in 1898. He outfitted theatres in the East, South, Middle West, and Canada, and incorporated the first scenic studio in Los Angeles. He is an authority on the construction of a theatre, auditorium, stage, arrangement and equipment. Since opening their Los Angeles studio, it has been found necessary, because of increased business, to three times enlarge the plant. Now it is one of the largest in the world, with capacity of twenty-six regulation paint frames, the largest of which is 50 x 90 feet. On this the one-piece cyclorama drop for Grauman's was painted. The studio is equipped with every quality assuring time and labor saving facility. In addition to furnishing stage setting and scenic effects for Orpheums, Pantages, Hippodrome vaudeville houses on the coast; Clune's, Tally's, Kinema, and T. & D. Motion Picture houses, the Flagg organization has outfitted many smaller theatres on the coast and others from Jacksonville, Florida to Winnipeg, Canada.

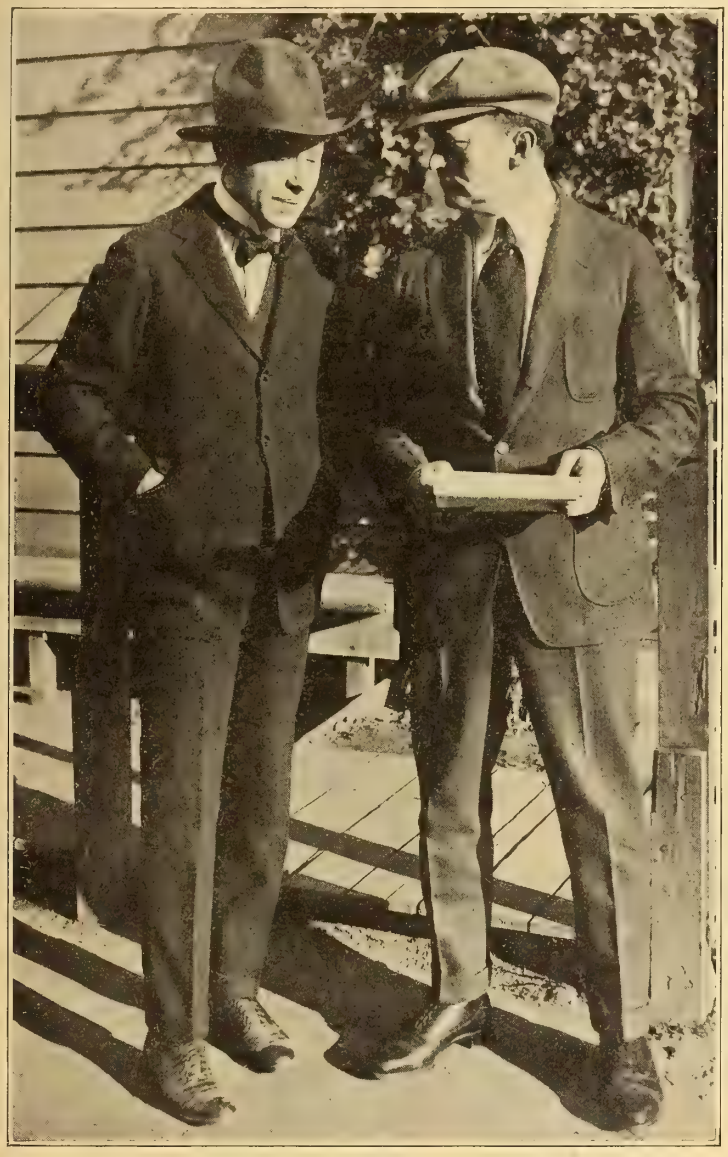
Curtain Emphasizes Byzantine Spirit



A GLORIOUS, glowing, magnificent magnet is the crimson curtain which lifts from the screen of this theatre of many marvels—drawing all eyes to the centre of attraction—the stage. This is one of the secrets of the distinct success of the decorative scheme of Grauman's already famed theatre.

Despite the attractiveness of the carvings, the statuary, the murals—and all the rest of the art wonders—yet the stage and the screen are the most important features of this, as of any, cinema playhouse. The very liveness of the curtain at Grauman's keeps the thought of the spell that lies behind it uppermost in the mind of every guest.

A Parisian shade creation, originated and created by Barker Bros., sustains the stimulation of the decoration scheme. It is fashioned of lustrous, sheeny silk, with inserts of silken gauze. A stencilled green Maltese cross is the motive of ornamentation—a unique conception of a connoisseur of "vibration." Color vibration is life! It brightens the spirits, quickens the pulse and makes it seem infinitely worth-while to be alive and to be there. As Grauman's flaming curtain lifts, slowly, a border of dazzling brilliants shimmer, and when the full revelation of the screen finally comes, the audience is thrilled by its triumphal introduction.

The carpets of Grauman's "temple of art," also designed by Barker Brothers, are daring in their colorings, they accord effectively with the Byzantine mood of the entire arrangement, they rise to meet the tread and spring with soft, deep buoyancy as footsteps sink and rise again. Purple, green and gold are their colorings. The carpets, complete, for this immense auditorium—main floor, mezzanine, balcony, parlors, smoking rooms, retiring rooms, etc.—were woven specially, each to fill its own particular mission.

So, also, the furniture—the aristocratic, exclusive studio pieces, Italian masterpieces of artistry, lovely creations in precious woods, cunningly carved and embellished—was provided especially to the order of this theatre. Many of the pieces were created to order, as in no other way could the fastidious ideals of Barkers' expert decorators be satisfied.

Sid Grauman conferring with Thomas H. Ince, the noted producer, concerning the opening program of Grauman's Theatre where "The Silent Man," an Ince Production for Artcraft, was the featured offering.

"A Thomas H. Ince Production is synonymous with a great star, an interesting story, beautiful photography, and masterly direction.

"I chose 'The Silent Man,' a Thomas H. Ince Production, starring William S. Hart, because it typifies the motive behind every Ince Production—wholesome entertainment combined with box office attraction."

Million Dollar Cinema Temple

Illumination a Science

WHEN the illuminating system for Grauman's Cinema Temple was planned the architect was confronted with a problem that made necessary the carrying out of an entirely new lighting scheme, in order that the same would harmonize with the architectural plan, and at the same time make possible an illuminating system that could be made to synchronize with the music and picture such as was desired by Sid Grauman. It is possible to see any seat in the house from any part of the theatre without the use of aisle lights, or flashlights frequently carried by ushers.

The Spanish mission type of architecture in the auditorium made it impracticable to use the lighting system employed in most theatres. In the period when this type of architecture was created there were no suspended lighting fixtures from the ceilings. All illumination was obtained by lights about the walls. To carry out this architectural scheme, architect A. C. Martin secured as his consulting engineer, Frederick S. Mills, supervising engineer of the National X-Ray Reflector Company of Chicago, who was responsible for the many innovations in exterior illumination introduced at the Panama-American Exposition at San Francisco.

The "eye comfort," or indirect system of illumination, was adopted, and an entirely new way of using it was devised by Mills.

At the rear of the auditorium a screen to prevent drafts extends the entire width of the auditorium, serving as a partition between the promenade and the auditorium proper. In the top of the screen are mirror reflectors with hundreds of lights in three colors. The light from these harmonizes with the color scheme of the decorations on the ceiling below the balcony, and gives the auditorium and promenade a subdued light more intense than in the rear. The foyer, immediately between the promenade and the lobby is still darker at all times. The purpose of this lighting effect is that people entering the theatre are given a few seconds before reaching the auditorium in which their eyes may harmonize with the lighting conditions.

All light is projected by lighting units, each of 57,000 candle power, totally hidden behind the decorative grill work on the front sides of the auditorium, and in front of the projecting booth in the immediate center and at the front of the balcony.

More than a million feet candle power is projected to the main ceiling dome, which is of such shape that it will not deflect the light that is not absorbed by the dead colors to the screen. The projectors at the sides project in the opposite direction from the screen, and consequently the auditorium can be intensively lighted and still not affect the picture in any way.

There are two ceiling domes. One of perhaps thirty feet in diameter in the center of another which extends almost to the walls of the auditorium on each side. The smaller one is decorated in bright colors and gold leaf, while the larger one has more somber hues, and therefore absorbs more light.

Reds and blues are used for the projectors at the front sides of the auditorium. The lights from these bring out many wierd colorings of the dome, and are worked in harmony with the other lighting effects which change the hues all over the house to fit the scene upon the screen and the music accompanying it.

Back of the organ grills at each side of the auditorium are additional banks of reds and blues which are used to accentuate the lighting effects throughout the house. Another decided innovation is the indirect lighting back of the massive columns extending above the center of the forty-foot proscenium arch on either side. Here successfully masked are strip lights in greens. The effect secured by this is to divide the stage from the theatre proper.

General View from Orchestra Pit

The entire lighting system of the theatre is operated by two mammoth switchboards, one upon the stage and the other in the stage basement immediately below.

Operation is so simplified by master levers for the dimming devices, that but one electrician will be necessary for the system's successful operation. Telephonic communication with the box-office, projecting room and organist or orchestra leader, makes possible necessary communication.

Below the balcony, and in the promenades of the mezzanine and balcony floor are numerous electric fixtures designed under the supervision of Western Underwood of the Forve Pettebone Company of 514 South Broadway, Los Angeles. There are several distinct types of fixtures ranging from the massive wrought iron chandelier which hangs in the lobby to the small ones on the organ screens at each side of the front of the auditorium. There is a wide range of types used, but all are harmonious in design and finished in old Spanish iron that blends with the shades and tint of the decorative scheme. All lights are of the indirect lighting type.

The lighting of the lobby carries out the scheme adopted for the auditorium and promenade. In the center hangs a massive fixture harmonizing with the decorations within the theatre. This is built on the indirect system, but differs from the lighting within the theatre, in that it reflects upon the mural paintings which occupy three walls of the lobby. There are no bright blinding lights in front of the theatre or within the marquee, small frosted globes being used.

In short, the results obtained, fulfill the desires of everyone, and give to the theatre an individuality. In no building of the world today is there such a lighting system used, and it is certain there are no motion picture theatres in America that are lighted to such a high intensity as this.

Decorations of House a Delight

SYMBOLS of ancient, medieval and modern art have been employed in the decorating and furnishing scheme of Grauman's Cinema Temple. All have been woven or welded into a whole of remarkable harmony, beauty, warmth and attractiveness that will make the theatre another place of note, not only for the residents of the West, but one the thousands of visitors who tour California will seek before returning to their homes.

There are many famous places in the southwest, but a prophecy that this wonderful theatre will have a call heeded by greater numbers than any other, is not an idle guess, but one made after hearing the exclamations of wonder made by such well-known men of the cinema industry and theatrical world as D. W. Griffith, Adolph Zukor, Mack Sennett, Thomas H. Ince, Eugene Roth, Jesse L. Lasky, Charles Chaplin, Frank Reicher, S. L. Rothapfel, Alexander Pantages, Mark Klaw, William S. Hart and scores of others of the west Coast film colony.

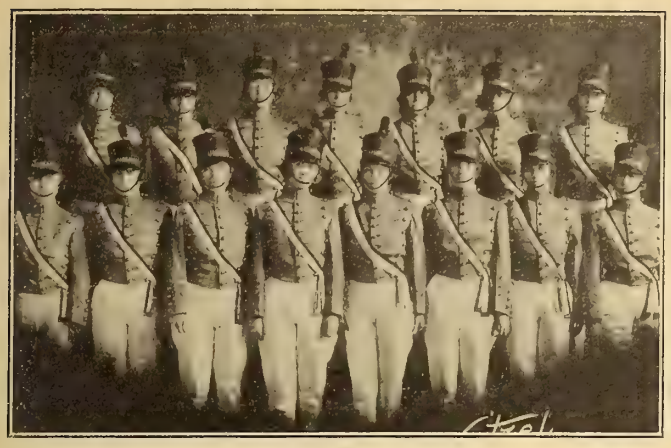
The aesthetic side of Mr. Grauman's nature finds its counterpart in the aesthetic values of the theatre. There is a winning, wholesome atmosphere totally devoid of any supercilious attempt to be grandoise, also a thoroughly modern American note is struck. The valuable contributing factor in the atainment of this expression is its unity.

The largest portion of this work was done on the building site. Practically all of the modeling for the interior decorating, such as the organ screen, ornaments in the dome ceiling, electric light fixtures, the decoration proper—murals and the coloring of the plastic ornaments, was done under the exacting supervision of chairman of the building committee, Homer Laughlin, a leading capitalist of Los Angeles.

In the decorating there is an attempt to interpret the emotional values appreciated by the present-day American. The minor wall decorations are done in primitive colors and gold, directly on the concrete structure, or rough plastering, as the case may be, thus dignifying the basic parts and bringing to the consciousness the engineering qualities of the building.

The theatre proper is a temple of stone. This sounds cold and forbidding, but the character of the richly carved Corinthian capitals, the ornate organ screens, rugs and tapestries, the gorgeous dome and elaborate lighting effects inspire to alleviate the austere proportions of the great stone walls which dominate.

The walls of the lobby, foyer, promenades, and the auditorium as well as the massive columns at either side of the proscenium arch, and the six used in the stage setting, are of a manufactured stone made in imitation of travertine. Travertine is the building material used in constructing many of the famous buildings of Rome, including St. Peter's. It is an agglomerate of small fragmentary materials of volcanic origin compacted together by water from springs holding lime solution. The stone contains cavities, all of different sizes, depending greatly upon the formation. Frequently leaves, reeds and branches of trees add to the coloring of the stone, which becomes more pronounced after years of exposure. The imitation is made by a new process, and has been used for but few buildings, the most notable being the Pennsylvania station in Philadelphia. The substitute travertine was manufactured by the California Stucco Company of 1522 Bay street, Los Angeles.



Special attention was given to the chairs for the house. These were especially made for the theatre by the American Seating Company for the C. F. Weber Company of Los Angeles and San Francisco, who have equipped the better class of theatres on the Pacific coast for the last quarter of a century.

The chairs are deep and roomy with a curved back, and have spring seats, leather upholstered, of the same type of construction as automobile cushions, which are known as form-fitting. The seats for the Grauman theatre constitutes one of the largest single shipment of chairs ever sent to the Pacific Coast for any one house, and they will surely receive comment from the patrons of the theatre.

In order that the spectator might be able to see with ease from any part of the house, the staggard or zig-zag plan was put into effect, so that instead of being forced to peer around the heads of the persons seated in front, one is able to look between their shoulders. Although one hundred and thirty seats were lost by using this scheme, the management feels that it is amply repaid for the effort. As to dimensions, each seat is twenty inches wide.

Instead of using the ordinary iron grill work, which is found on the aisle seats of most theatres, a special hand carved wood standard has been substituted, which adds to the artistic effect, and enhances greatly the beauty of the seats. The color scheme is quite in accord with the predominating theme of the theatre.

The Grauman has several very attractive signs. On the north, or Third street side is a large one of unusual design which was made by Greenwood Advertising Company (Western), of 1942 South Main street, Los Angeles. This is in the shape of an ancient lamp, and is known as "The Lamp of Knowledge." Both sides are brightly illuminated and a red flame plays from the lamp. Over the entrance are large letters which spell the name Grauman, and below this is a changeable letter sign made up of transparent letters which will be changed weekly to announce the bill. At the end of the building is another mammoth sign which flashes red, blue and opal, and spells the word "Grauman's." The two letter signs in front of the theatre were furnished by the Tucker Electric Sign System, and the one of the transparent letters by the Electrical Products Corporation.

Girl Ushers at Grauman's

Girl Ushers Costumed as Cadets

SID GRAUMAN has seen to it that every detail is in harmony and lends to the attractiveness of the theatre. Especially is this true in the costumes of the sixteen girl ushers, who appear as Grauman's Cadets, wearing striking uniforms of gray jackets and white trousers. These were designed by Edgar Temple, head of the Temple Costume Company, of 525 South Broadway, Los Angeles. Temple has had years of experience in costuming for the American stage, following a number of years with the Castle Square Opera Company as tenor, stage director for Charles Frohman musical companies and other theatrical organizations of note.

Paramount-Artcraft Pictures Seated

LOCATED in the "Home of the Motion Picture," the Graumans had every opportunity to go into the greatest detail in their selection of pictures for showing in their new theatre, and the result of this fullest investigation of past productions and guarantees for the future, the product of the Paramount and Artcraft pictures, with special emphasis on the Ince and Griffith productions, and the Mack Sennett comedies have been chosen as the permanent basis of the program.

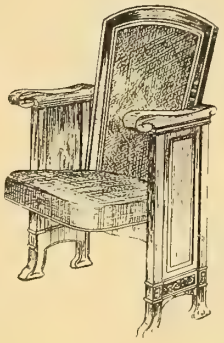
The Graumans have held that it is not enough merely to build a wonderful theatre, equip the projection room with the best picture machines manufactured, give the best effects in lighting and music and to provide the patron with every physical comfort. The Graumans in their initial program announced that "the play's the thing," and that they mean to live up to this rule, and that it has guided them in the selection of pictures that has been made.

Hart's "The Silent Man" will be followed by the appearance of a group of stars identified with the best achievements in motion pictures, including Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clark, Sessue Hayakawa, Charles Ray, Pauline Frederick, Jack Pickford, Enid Bennett, Dorothy Dalton, Julian Eltinge, George Beban and Billie Burke.

These programs will be supplemented by clean, bright comedies, interesting scenic views and pictorials.

No less important than the play will be its complement of music. Directed by Rudolph G. Kopp, whose artistry has won him a wide reputation, a symphony orchestra of thirty members will render programs of the highest merit. Selections from the masters and popular melodies will be included and specially arranged numbers will create a symphony of vision in co-relation with the theme of the picture.

Under the wizard touch of Jesse Crawford, whose mastery of the keys has gained him a following throughout California, the splendid new organ will be an attraction which in itself will draw thousands to this playhouse. Mr. Crawford's genius promises to create an atmosphere of rare charm. Special solo engagements also will be presented for the entertainment of Grauman's patrons.



Because the theatre is located in Los Angeles and because the new house has immediately stepped into wonderful popularity with the player colony, the Graumans will be able to offer an innovation that no other theatre in the country has been able to give,

Projection Room at Grauman's Theatre

PROJECTION room at Grauman's has a most unique and ideal location in the front of the balcony, where it is level with the centre of the screen, and only sixty-seven feet from it. The front of the booth can be seen from only a few seats in the balcony. This is a very desirable arrangement in many ways, especially from the standpoint of projection. Securing these advantages, of course, restricted the size of the room, but Archie Smith, the chief operator, has arranged his machines in a manner that will give plenty of room and save many steps.

The two latest type "S" Simplex motor-driven projectors are placed, one on each side of the centre line, the stereopticon with its double lamphouse is on the extreme left, the spot and flood lights on the right. These machines are the first to be sold on the Coast that are fitted with the new take-up device on the upper magazine. The machines were installed by the Pacific Amusement Supply Company of Los Angeles, distributors in the Southwest Coast territory. Elbert & Huegel arc controllers automatically feed the carbons and keep the arc steady.

On the extreme left of the rear wall is located a metal cabinet with a film magazine and drawers for tools and parts. Above this cabinet is the automatic fireproof rewinder of the latest design. Both the cabinet and rewinder are manufactured by L. D. Hooker of San Francisco. A metal work bench is placed on the side wall.

H. F. O'Brien of the Los Angeles office of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, designed the electrical layout. Both 110-220 volt, three-wire, direct current and three-phase, 220-volt, 50-cycle, alternating current circuits are brought to the switchboard, which is located in the centre of the rear wall within easy reach.

It is planned to operate all the arcs on the Westinghouse motor-generator set primarily, using the 110-volt direct current for emergency only. This was done for two reasons: First, because it gives very steady D. C. voltage, practically independent of the fluctuations in the power circuit. Second, because it effects a direct saving of at least $50 a month in operating costs by eliminating the excessive loss in the resistance on a 110-volt circuit.

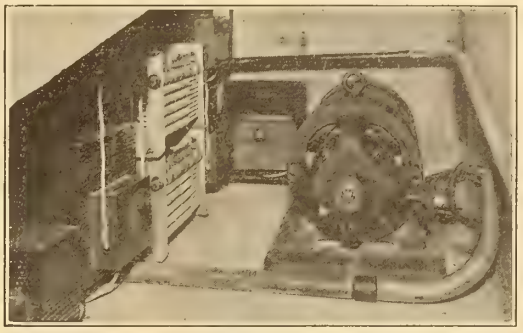
In accordance with the latest code rulings, the 6¼-kilowatt, 90-ampere, 75-volt Westinghouse motor-generator set and all the resistance grids are placed in a separate room adjoining the projection room on the rear. The motor starting switch is located to the left of the switchboard, so that the operator need only go into this generator room for inspection or to alter the rheostat connections.

The switchboard is equipped with two ammeters and one voltmeter, all Westinghouse type "SL" instruments which Operator Smith selected because of their accuracy and readability. By means of a plug switch, either the generator or the D. C. power voltage can be read, and each of these circuits is provided with a separate pilot lamp. Beneath the voltmeter is the field-rheostat mounting. Separate 100-ampere, three-pole, double throw, fused switches are provided for each individual circuit, so that any or all arcs can be switched from one service to the other. Small fused switches are also provided for the motor and light circuits in the projection room itself, while push switches operating remote control switches for house lighting circuits are located on the rear wall. The operator's phone and buzzer are located in the centre of the front wall.

Mr. Smith has taken pride in having his projection room a model. For instance, all wires to the projection machines are brought up through the pedestals, out of sight; the ceiling lights in the room have been placed behind the beams, so that the room will seem practically dark from the outside. High grade glass windows are placed over all portholes, to make the room practically noiseless to the audience.

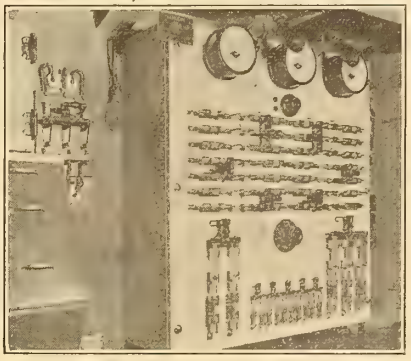
The motors on the projection machines are started and stopped by pull switches located on the ceiling between the two machines. This will enable a quick change to be made at the end of each reel. Both projection machines will have four-inch vent pipes leading from the lamphouses outside the room.

Messrs. Smith and O'Brien worked together on the installation of the electrical apparatus, with a view of raising the standard in the interior of projecting rooms, in Los Angeles at least.



The Los Angeles fire chief said that this was the most fireproof installation he had ever seen.

Notable Gathering of Stars



PROBABLY more motion picture stars, directors and film officials were present at the opening of the Grauman theatre than ever before in all history. A part of those recorded as present were: Jesse L. LAST MINUTE REPORTS

A few of the reports received on recent productions too late for classification in our tables are given here.

It is understood that these are the expressions of individual opinions of exhibitors in various sections, and have not been averaged up according to the careful method employed in preparing our "Box Office Reports Chart."

The Bargain (Wm. S. Hart—W. H. Productions)—"Went over as good as any Hart we have ever played." (Extra big business).

Brown of Harvard (K. E. S. E.)—"This is a good picture—well liked." (Average business).

Dodging a Million (Mabel Normand—Goldwyn)—"They should make more of this kind." (Extro big business). "This is a very pleasing picture, the star has 'come back,' a picture elaborately produced." (Big business).

The Fighting Grin (Franklyn Farnum—Bluebird)—"Way below Bluebird-Farnum standard." (Poor business).

Flare-Up Sal (Dorothy Dalton—Paramount)—"Dalton does fine work in this; Ince style of direction shows to advantage. (Average business).

The Heart of Romance (June Caprice—Fox)—"A very poor picture, far from being up to Fox standard." (Business poor).

His Robe of Honor (Henry Walthall—Paralta)—"Walthall's acting wonderful; nobody like him, I think; more like this and he will surely make good; title sounds too much like costume play." (Business average).

Innocent (Fannie Ward—Pathe)—"Fannie looks ten years younger than other pictures; clean, nice picture—patrons liked it." (Average business).

Intolerance (State Rights)—"Best picture ever made; had to keep open till 1:30 A. M. opening night to accommodate the large crowd." (Extra big business). "Greatest of all motion picture spectacles." (Extra big business).

Madame Jealousy (Pauline Frederick—Paramount)—"People didn't know what to think of this; expected something quite different." (Big business). "Why don't they give Frederick a real play?" (Average business).

Madam Who? (Bessie Barriscale—Paralta)—"Very good picture, well liked—just a little too long." (Big business).

The Other Woman (Peggy Hyland—Pathe)—"They liked this." (Big business).

A Petticoat Pilot (Vivian Martin—Paramount)—"Martin is gaining; a few more like this, please." (Average business).

Uneasy Money (Taylor Holmes—K. E. S. E.)—"High-class comedy; our patrons enjoyed it." (Big business).

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Blazing the Way in Advertising

Lewiston, Idaho, House Proves that Big Use of Newspaper Space in the Smaller Cities Pays Best

RECENTLY we have had some few comments on "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," which suggested that the writer of these articles was recommending things which are not practical, especially the extent of his advertising every day in the week.

These articles in question are not being written by A. H. Hilton, manager of the Paramount theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. The theatre whose proprietor is writing the articles is located in a town whose census population was given at something like 11,000; it has now about 15,000. Last census gives the figures for Lewiston as 6,043, so we may figure on two or three thousand increase over that for the present. But the argument is that the Paramount theatre answers every objection of the small city man who opposes big expenditure for the exploitation of his pictures.

Mr. Hilton's efforts have not been spasmodic and he has been successful. His case is one of the most convincing answers we have ever seen, to those who dispute that "it pays to advertise." We have selected a number of his displays for reproduction on the opposite page. These are not picked because they use unusually large space or have especially striking effect, but because they represent the average exploitation policy of that theatre. A careful study of these will be worth more to the small exhibitor than all the theories in the world.

Whether you know much about Idaho or not, you know that it is not a state of dense populations and that conditions that would be true of a city of equal size in the East where there are many other thousands in easy reach would not be true of Lewiston. And yet, this theatre is pulling the people in, and we would make it as a guess that he is pulling a number of them from a distance, because of the way that he advertises and because his sensible exploitation of his pictures has convinced the people that they are well worth while.

Possibly some of our friends in other sections have become a little peeved at the references that have been made in these columns from time to time, of the superiority that seems to mark motion picture advertising generally in the Northwest. But it is true. We would figure that it comes from the willingness of theatres of that section to take some risk, to spend a little more in exploitation than they could be certain that they would get back and take a chance on cleaning up the big profit. But that doesn't mean that advertising is a gamble. It means only that when you have become convinced that a certain policy is a good one, it will pay you handsomely in the long run to go to it.

Large space is one of the things that marks these displays. Full two and three and sometimes four columns are used and because big space is used, it does not mean that Mr. Hilton tries to say everything that he can about a picture. He follows something of the style of "Hundred Per Cent" Fullerton, of Portland, yet he varies this style by placing the name of the theatre in various positions. He has used various faces of type in the displays that we have reproduced, yet all of them are clear specimens which do not confuse the reader.

In the Bushman-Bayne display (unfortunate in the typographical error in Miss Bayne's name) he has used stock cuts of the two stars at the top of the display with the word "Today" stepped off, the names of the stars and the title in large type and then a scene cut from the production and just a few descriptive words about the picture that tell just enough to whet the appetite.

The second display is an excellent example of an advertisement without a cut. While we have told you many times how strong we are for the use of cuts, still one of the things that you always want to attain is the contrast and this has been well done here. The block effect with the name of the little star running into it, a method of display that is generally pretty certain to make your patrons read all that you have to say.

Now get these lines: "Fine for the Kiddies; Better for Grown Ups." The various catch lines that Mr. Hilton uses show that he thinks about every picture before he starts in to write about it. And this particular display shows that he gives the same thought to a picture that he runs for but a single day as he does to those favored with longer runs.

In the "Wolf Lowry" picture he has used a black and white effect so strikingly that there is no comment required.

"The Outsider" shows one of the best examples of phrasing advertising that we have seen from any source. This line, "From the Famous Novel, 'Nobody,' Comes the Play for Everybody," is bound to leave its impress on all who read it.

A striking scene picture has been used with "Time Locks and Diamonds," and he hasn't featured any star here, probably because of the fact that other players in the cast are as popular in his community as Desmond. The same style has been followed in "Mother Instinct," with a cut of Enid Bennett and a scene picture worked in.

Now, there are some other things to be noted about these displays. Except for the cost of the cuts that he has made, and often he uses the stock and scene cuts that he can get from the exchanges, Mr. Hilton is under little expense to get out these ads. The whole composition of them is type-faces that can be found in almost every printing office—and LIBERAL WHITE SPACE.

You will note that he uses different borders to get different effects, but at the same time they are only ordinary rule borders or combinations of rule borders that any printer can supply. But evidently Mr. Hilton has the co-operation of his newspaper—as every exhibitor who uses liberal space will have—because care is taken in the use of these borders to see that the edges meet and a neat effect obtained. There is a point that can be borne in mind. You know that the big regular customer at the meat shop or the grocery store is apt to get the finest cuts and the freshest vegetables. And it is equally as true that the newspaper owner who sees that there is a theatre manager who is trying to go further than others, who is increasing the newspaper's revenue and building his own business, is just about going to get everything that the newspaper can command.

Smaller theatre owners who argue themselves into believing that they CANNOT AFFORD real advertising, certainly have a lesson for themselves here. We will admit the Lewiston Paramount theatre is an exceptional theatre, but it is exceptional because of the methods that its owner has used in building it up. And one of the chief reasons for this is the advertising policy that has been followed.

There is not a smaller theatre in the country that cannot do the same. Not one of these pictures was a first-run picture, though it was the first showing in Lewiston of all of them. There were no staffs of artists needed to get out these displays. Use of the press sheets and USE OF GRAY MATTER brought about the effective sales arguments.

There are a whole lot of theatres in the country that are spending a lot of money in what they call "experimenting," in changing film services and the like. The quicker they realize that the dollars sent for advertising are not experiments, but new blood in their theatres' lives, the better it is going to be.

Next week we are starting a series of talks about advertising in various communities. While many of these will be studies of conditions in larger cities, practically all of the points brought out will apply to the smaller communities, and the exhibitor who wants to get the fundamental principles of exploiting his theatre will do well to study them carefully, for the adaptation to his house will be easy.

What Great City Theatre Is Doing This Advertising?

Study these excellent examples of newspaper displays and then you will reverse your opinion that liberal use of printer's ink in smaller cities is not a paying proposition.

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

THIS week's show gives us the opportunity for a talk that we have been waiting for since we began writing these "Seeing the Rialto With Rothapfel" articles, and there is probably a greater lesson for exhibitors here than there has been contained in any of the others. So let's get to the meat of the matter.

"What's the verdict?" Mr. Rothapfel asked us when we reached his office after the first show. "The poorest that we have ever seen at the Rialto," we answered frankly, and we explained that the feature picture was the reason for this statement. We have made it a point never to deal with the merits of features here, but to leave that for the regular review department, but we were so impressed with the view of Mr. Rothapfel's young son, who has just come down from a military academy to spend the day, that we have to print his opinion, for he entered the office a little after we did. "Why, it isn't Hart at all," is the way that he expressed it, and it was a perfect description of the way that the popular star has been badly cast in an impossible role.

Many, many weeks ago we told you that Mr. Rothapfel always welcomes criticism of his work. He always wants to know what people think about his presentations. Now, you know that most exhibitors, and for that matter most people of all classes, after they have heard a few adverse criticisms are anxious to get away from the criticisms and to lose themselves. And so Sunday after this first showing he asked every one he saw about their opinion of the picture. Does that mean anything to you?

It shows that here is a manager who owes the greater part of his success to giving the people the sort of amusement that they want, though, through his methods of presentation he has very largely invented it for them. Most managers that we know really don't like it a bit if you tell them that their feature is not good. We know still others that will argue with the patron and insist that the picture is a corker. They seem to think it a reflection on themselves that the work of the producer did not come up to the standard. But Rothapfel is the very reverse. Not only does he know his own abilities, but he fully recognizes the opinions of others, and is ready to agree with such correct opinions even when they are at his expense. We wanted to bring this matter out because it shows you the absolutely necessary spirit that an exhibitor must have to be the big, outstanding success in his community.

Now, don't get it into your head that this is a bad show at the Rialto. We are, perhaps, taking advantage of the case to get some things off of our chest, and now the pictures.

"Martha," the overture this week, got one of the biggest receptions that we have seen accorded a selection at this theatre, and it was shown with gold effects in the lighting, the centre of the huge illumination dome being in greet with a tinge of red at the centre. This was followed by a most interesting picture of "Scientific Fish Farming." Mlle. D'Espinoy is heard again this week, singing Arditi's "Il Bacio."

Rialto Animated opens with Universal pictures of the heroes of the battle of Mons being honored in London. With the first of the scenes was played, "Highlanders' Fixed Bayonet" march, and then "Boys of Tipperary" and the Belgian national anthem as pictures of King Albert were flashed on the screen. Other Universal pictures of sea lions followed, with "Les Sylphides" being played, and then came Hearst-Pathe pictures of the rodeo at San Francisco with which "Wild and Woolly" was the music. Universal pictures of treatment of dumb pets in London was shown with "Funeral March of the Marionettes," and then came a big crash with "Semper Fidelis," with pictures of Yale students joining the marines, the music turning to a one-step "Million Heroes" as the marines were shown at play. Civil War veterans at Youngsville, Cal. (Mutual), got a big reception, as they were shown with the "Blue and Gray" patrol. As the veterans came marching toward the camera with the American flag flying the cheers filled the house.

Now, notice a little turn in the weekly, and with a purpose. The next pictures were those of big glaciers on Hudson Bay Mountains, and all through the house the lights became a deep blue and the orchestra struck up Straus's "Dreams." This was a beautiful effect, but scarcely had the pictures died from the screen than Sascha Fidelman, concert master of the Rialto, began to play "Souvenir" without even a second of pause. You see how the soft effects of the glacier scenes and their dreamy music fitted in with the number that followed. You will readily see that had there been a big smashing effect at the end of the pictorial, had it stopped with the pictures either of the marines, or of the veterans the violin soloist would have a hard time drawing the people back from the spirit of patriotism and into the spirit of the music. But the one little picture inserted in between does the work. Just one of those little things that we are so fond of mentioning in writing these articles, but the little things that count.

"March of Boyars," played by the Rialto orchestra, and "In the Dark," a Christie comedy, rounded out the bill.

We started this off by studying Rothapfel himself, and so we'll leave this thought with you at the end. As we were getting ready to leave, Rothapfel was bubbling with enthusiasm over the next bill at the Rivoli. "Just wait till you see it, BOY!" That's the reason for his success. He is never quitting. He is never grieving over little errors, but working always for newer, better and bigger things for the future.

This Week at the Strand

MANAGER HAROLD EDEL is offering an unusually patriotic novelty at the Strand this week, and one that goes over with a series of big bursts of applause. It is a clever arrangement of music and film, using many sections that were specially taken for this picture and other sections from previously released news reels.

It is the story of the growth of liberty and democracy, and after the title fades into the American flag there comes a water scene representing morning, and then a title with the statement that Democracy was born with Washington. Then appears the statue of Washington that stands in the Sub-treasury, and this gradually comes to life, and the first president is made to repeat some of his famous declarations. Another very realistic picture shows him crossing the Delaware and then we are taken eighty-seven years along to Lincoln and he is shown driviug up to the White House. Of course there was another big burst of applause. Then McKinley brought another tribute. There followed pictures of the Belgian king, the French generals, including Joffre, the Russian czar, the Italian and Roumanian rulers, and finally King George, with Northcliffe and Lloyd George shown later. Even greater applause when the pictures turned back to America, with McAdoo, Daniels and Baker, and when Roosevelt was shown there was a tremendous outburst that was equaled only when the President was shown. The end of the picture came with a scene showing evening, and fading into the Statue of Liberty.

Strand Topical this week is also devoted to patriotic matter. It opens with pictures of the San Francisco rodeo and then shows Lord Reading on his arrival in Washington. Interesting pictures from Los Angeles show "behind the scenes in making Liberty Loaves" with the latest mechanical baking apparatus. Then followed a Paramount-Bray showing what camouflage means and how it originated with the war. The Topical closes with "With the Stars and Stripes in France," which show training with the gas masks, and then large forces of boys from the South drilling, with the music counterpointed with "Dixie," and then a view of Pershing which got a great reception.

Comedy abounds on the bill this week, for there is a large amount of it which features John Barrymore in "Raffles." Marie Dressler is seen in "The Agonies of Agnes." Miss Anita Tagel is heard in "The Shadow Song" from Dinorah and Zelaya, the Nicaraguan pianist plays "Etude de Concert F sharp."

Designer of Splendid Displays for Standard Theatre Wife of Owner

WHEN the writer took charge of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau one of the first things that impressed itself on him was the high class of displays maintained by the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, especially in the Sunday issues.

Week after week we have printed specimens which we have held up as good advertising—and when we wanted to pay some compliment to the person responsible we used the pronoun HE. We were all right about everything else that we said, but mighty wrong on that one point.

Mrs. Joseph Grossman, wife of the owner and manager of the Standard, which is one of the leading theatres and located in the heart of the business section, is the one to whom readers of the NEWS owe the treats of many perfect displays which they can well follow in their theatres.

So we were impressed by the work of this ad. writer, whoever "it" was, and we sent a member of the staff to Mr. Grossman to make the big discovery. "Why, Mrs. Grossman writes those ads," he replied. "That is, we work out together what effect we want and she creates the designs. I'm a showman, consequently I think I know how to reach the public. Mrs. Grossman is an artist and she knows how to catch the eye." But just at that moment Mrs. Grossman entered the theatre, so we'll let her tell her own story.

"Oh, yes, I have been drawing the pictures for the Standard theatre advertisements for the past four years," she began. "It isn't a bit difficult when you are interested in it, and when you can work together at it, as Mr. Grossman and I do. It's Mr. Grossman who suggests the idea he wants to convey, you know, and then I translate those ideas into pictures. Sometimes, however, I do them all alone. 'The Auction Block' was all my own idea, and that one came out fine, but almost always we work them out together. We have no fixed rule to go by. It all depends upon the photoplay we are advertising.

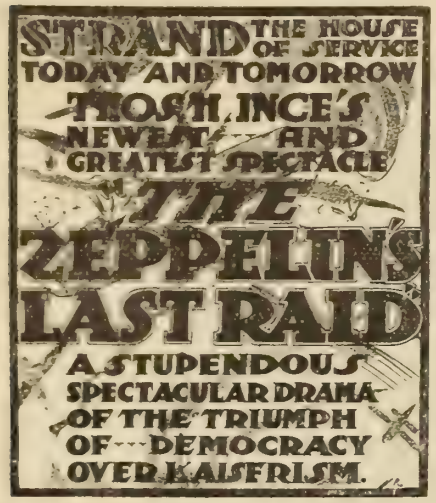
"Sometimes we aim to bring out the context of a picture, like in 'The Price of a Good Time,' where we combined a group of chorus girls and a view of a cabaret with wine being served; sometimes we specialize in a central figure, and put in just enough lettering to explain the picture. That's the way we treated Mary Garden's film version of 'Thais.' Just now, for instance, I am working on a drawing for 'The Warrior.' When this picture was originally made in Italy it was a serious story, but by the time it reached these optimistic shores it assumed gigantic comedy proportions. Now the average theatre attendant knows only so much about a film as the advertisements and the billboards tell him. So I am making my 'Warrior' tell its comedy story, so that the public will not be deceived by the name. For nothing so redounds to the disadvantage of a theatre as the reports of patrons who find a comedy when they have gone in expecting and wanting to see a drama.

"Does it take a thorough artistic training to accomplish what I have done? No, I shouldn't say that it did, but you see I have always puttered around with drawing materials. As a girl I attended the Ursuline Convent here in the city, where I specialized in art. My preference even then was for figures. They interested me far more than scenes or imaginary effects. Did you notice those oil paintings of the movie stars hanging downstairs in the lobby of the theatre?

"I did those a long time ago, when I had more leisure. Now the theatre keeps both of us busy all afternoon and late into the evening. It is after the house is all closed up for the night that we work out these advertisements. It is seldom earlier than two o'clock in the morning when we lock up the office, and sometimes it is even later than that. You see, we always make up five or six drawings for each advertisement. It's impossible to foretell just how they will work out when printed and we try all possible effects. One of them is bound to turn out satisfactory.

"Because I am not certain how my drawings will work out in the newspapers, I am going to take a practical course in newspaper work. We have already made arrangements with one of the daily papers whereby I shall be permitted to study every process through which my drawing goes before it is turned out a finished article. Did you know that the main body of an ad is put in first, and then the background is supplied, and then the lettering, and so on? I didn't. But by knowing in just what order these parts are assembled, and what order of prominence each one holds, I shall be all the better prepared to gather my material and produce a stronger, better, more intelligent whole.

"Interesting? It's the most fascinating work in the world. And it is something that anyone with a little talent and a lot of purpose can accomplish. All wives have more than a passing interest in their husbands' affairs, and grab at any opportunity to help push the ball of fortune up the hill of life. This is not merely a practical assistance that she can render him, it is an opportunity for aesthetic growth that is open to all. If she has an eye for beauty and line, let her cut out any artistic scroll or design that she may run across in a newspaper or a magazine, as well as any particularly expressive or appealing pose. Almost anyone can assemble them into a satisfactory whole, or can, at least, adopt portions of them or get suggestions from them. Original work is, of course, the most successful, but failing originality, the mere act of assembling these clippings brings out a certain amount of originality. Fortunately, no two people express themselves alike, whether it is in words, or actions, or art, and the success of a product is always in proportion to its individuality. Try to develop individuality and your work will always stand out pre-eminently."



Mrs. Grossman is a woman who practices what she preaches. Look over recent copies of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and see how clearly her work stands out amidst a page of advertisements.

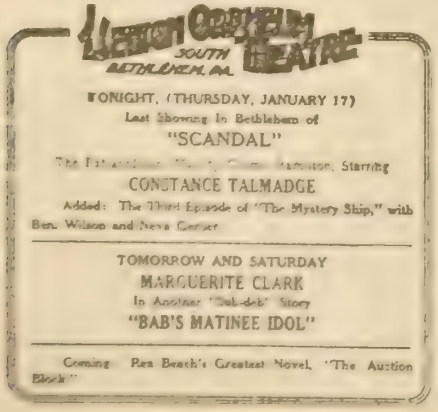
Your Idea---and Ours

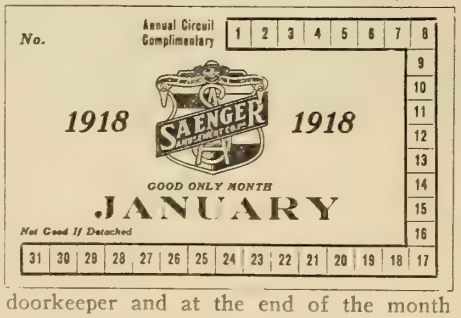
STRAND THEATRE, Syracuse, N. Y., which has contributed some excellent examples of display advertising to these columns, comes to the front now with one of the best advertisements on "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," that we have seen.



Note that there is a minimum amount of reading matter and that only the essential facts are given. The background of swirling aeroplanes and a falling Zeppelin carry out perfectly the theme of the picture, and we haven't the slightest doubt that this display brought much bigger business than would have been the case if this quarter of a page had been devoted to a lot of reading matter.

There is one thing that is always true about these special sketch plates and that is that they stand out by contrast with the type advertising on the same page. But if you will pick up the average newspaper you will be struck by the fact that most of the managers who go to this expense are then tempted to use a lot of gim-crack work that spoils the effect.

Trouble with fronts of so many theatres are that they look so much like scrap heaps that it is hard to convince one that anything is running smoothly inside.



LEHIGH ORPHEUM THEATRE, South Bethlehem, Pa., sends in this sample of display which has much room for improvement. The ad. is two columns wide by 4¼ inches deep. The chief faults in this are the use of the same type throughout and a consequent dead effect. and the fact that all the reading matter is in such small display that it fails to attract attention.

In our opinion the manager did right in advertising both his Thursday show and his Friday and Saturday show in the same display. In this case we believe that he could have gotten a much better effect by using a single column effect, 8½ inches deep. That would have left him more room for display and enabled him to give the proper showing to the relative importance of the two bills.

"Getting the jump" on your patron doesn't mean landing on his back.

WHILE the pass question is probably not a serious matter with most theatres, it is quite important in some of the larger houses. The Saenger Amusement Company, which has general offices in New Orleans and operates some forty houses in that section, has prepared a form of pass which is good at all of its theatres, but prevents the courtesy from being worked overtime on account of the fact that the holder cannot go to more than one of the theatres the same day. There is a page in the booklet for each month, and as the patron presents this it is punched by the doorkeeper and at the end of the month the page for the month is taken up.

It is unfortunately true that in many cases the personal courtesy granted by the theatre is often abused. Certainly there can be only a limited amount of such abuse under the Saenger policy. But it's always a safe thing to keep the number of your passes down to the limit. Fix up the newspapermen and the city officials that you have to care for and let the rest line up in front of the box office.

Printer's ink isn't worth much unless it is mixed with human brains.

EXHIBITORS are getting more and more away from the habit of distributing a lot of handbills, circulars, etc., because there has been so much of this done that they don't get the attention of the public and don't pay for the cost of distribution. So when one of the companies does hit on an unusual idea there is all the more reason why the stunt should bring business.

This little folder is printed in red, white and blue and on the cover are the words, "What's Your Number?" and then the directions, "Draw Here." When this is pulled out it contains an excellent advertisement for "Draft 258." The reverse side bears the name of the theatre. This specimen came to us from the Garfield theatre, Chicago, which used the stunt with unusually good effect. A good policy to pursue with matter to be mailed to your patrons is this: Don't burden them with it only because it is something that you have at hand; use only that with a punch.

If course, being on the job all the time counts, but what counts most is being on the job with a purpose.

MAJESTIC THEATRE, Jackson, Mich., took a space in the Sunday papers four columns wide by ten inches deep, to advertise Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million." And this large space was commendable and the Majestic should have gotten big benefits out of it had not the designer of the display set out to tell everything that he could think about.

That's the first thing wrong about it, and the next is that the repeated rules effects are very trying on the eye. There are lots of good lines used in describing the Normand picture and had a couple of the most catchy ones been employed the effect would have been good. Looks like the writer started out to use everything that was contained in the press sheet. Some one besides the proofreader may have read all of this display, but we doubt it.

What Live Wires Are Doing

Don't keep the eye of the patron jumping around from one thing to another. When you do you leave no lasting impression of any one thing on him, and the result is that you do not get the worth of your display.

It costs nothing to cheer up and it makes a hit with the other fellow.

UNIVERSAL is suggesting a unique "teaser" campaign on "Wild Women," a five-reel feature starring Harry Carey, which will soon be released. According to the frank confession of the producers, this is a "plotless play," without sense or reason, but it is guaranteed that the public will "laugh its head off" at the foolish antics of the actors. There is a series of five advertisements suggested, all of which are frankly aimed to draw the people to the theatre out of their curiosity to see what it is all about. According to the officials of the Universal, all who have seen this picture at its pre-release showings declare that it is a most unusual production.

In these war times, and especially as the bitterness of the conflict is getting closer home to us, the light and frivolous in photoplays is going to be more popular, and Universal proposes to be in the lead in presenting some of this foolish stuff that hasn't even an idea in it. The displays designed by the advertising department enter fully into this spirit and they ought to make good business pullers.

The exhibitor who wears a funereal expression on his face all the time will soon be going to his own.

WE have warned our readers so many times against a large amount of reading matter in displays, that we hesitate to appear to reverse ourselves. But if there is ever reason for such display, it is justified by the circus method that was used by Manager Arthur G. Stolte, of the Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The reproduction here is of an entire page used in the Sunday papers. Large displays were also used during the week.

There is a large amount of type in this display, and we believe that this could have been reduced with benefit to the display, but still, the types have been so well selected that there is no jar and each essential part of the ad. stands out by itself. It is, after all, essentially a circus ad. and effective where you want to work up a lot of interest in some big, sensational picture. But the one thing that makes it worth while is that it should be used only on rare occasions. Many such displays in succession would hurt your business.

Don't be like the old lady who lived in a shoe. If you have too many things to do, its a cinch that you won't be able to do any of the things well.

HOW a theatre can co-operate with the Government in these war days is splendidly exemplified by an advertisement, full three columns, which appeared in the Topeka (Kan.) newspapers on the opening of "Thrift Week."

The Orpheum theatre, in its effort to boost the sales, required its patrons only to buy the stamps and show them at the door to gain admission. In other words, admission was entirely free, but it was excellent propaganda for war-saving and excellent advertisement for the theatre.

It is worthy of notice that the Orpheum did not attempt to use this method to advertise a poor show, but put on a big feature, a sure guarantee that the theatre was really trying to do something for the country. Genuine co-operation of this sort not only wins appreciation of your patrons, but new ones.

Don't take the "I'm right" attitude all the time. There's a whole lot of difference in knowing that you are right with your patrons.

Entertaining Kiddies Without Disorders

This is the seventh of our series of articles, "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," by an exhibitor who tells each week what he is doing to develop his house, the lessons that he learns and the errors that he discovers. It is a frank discussion of the pleasures and evils of exhibition in a town of 15,000, and the tips contained here will probably be of value to managers in all sections.

By a Successful Exhibitor

LET me go on record here as saying that I am not a believer in special children's matinees in smaller communities. I do not mean that such programs are not excellent things in cities of a size where the theatres can afford the expense, but it was impossible for me to provide two sets of films for each change of bill. And still further than that, you have to remember that I was counting a great deal on my country trade, which was largely confined to the afternoon shows, and to put on a strictly juvenile bill would have killed off that element at the very start.

In my advance inspection of the other houses in my town two things had struck me. First, the theatres were so dark that many of the younger folk, some of them hardly old enough to know about such things, went to the theatres merely for spooning purposes. The other thing was that the custom of women in bringing small children to the evening performances resulted in much juvenile mouth music, which was not at all calculated to make the other patrons enjoy the evening.

The other houses had only the ordinary lighting system, which meant that every illumination in the theatre went out when the pictures were being shown. I had installed the indirect system, which is worth far more to even the smaller houses than the additional amount it costs. But even this lighting system results in the lights being dim through the showing of the pictures. So I hit upon an idea, and that was to turn on the lights full force at unexpected times during the afternoon, generally at the end of a reel. I found that this unexpected effect was very discouraging to those who did not come to see the pictures, but it was necessary in a couple of cases for me to ask youths of the town not to come to my theatre again.

Of course, this love-making was more or less harmless, but I wanted to make my theatre perfectly safe for the women and children. I have heard other managers say that they have had a hard time keeping order at the matinees. In my case there was practically no trouble after a week or so at the start. In my last article I told you how I wanted to attract the attention of the women to the afternoon shows. More than that, I wanted to get the children, and the best way to do that was to get the entire confidence of the parents. Within a short time they knew that the little ones would be given as much attention as the mayor of the town and many a mother who wanted an afternoon's rest would send the little ones to my house.

While most of us like babies, certainly everyone will agree that there can be nothing more disquieting to an audience than to have to listen to the sobs and screams of two or three "kiddies," while they are keeping their minds on the picture. It first occurred to me to issue an order barring babies in arms, but I saw immediately that this would prejudice the public against me. And, infants in arms were not alone those who disturbed the evening audiences, for those from two to five years would grow impatient during the evening's shows and run up and down the lobbies causing confusion and often taking Brodies to the floor, with the result of very vigorous yelps.

Solution came to me in a copy of the Motion Picture News, which reproduced a page ad of a theatre on the day of its anniversary, and which consisted of an intimate talk with the public. I immediately realized that this was my solution and so, in the next Saturday issue of our local paper, I took a full two-column space and addressed myself to the women of the city. I explained to them that they should realize that younger children grow very tired in the evening and that if they are brought to the theatre then they are likely to give the parents trouble. Note, that I did not refer to the annoyance to other patrons, even by inference, but I did point out that it would conduce more to their enjoyment and that of the children to come to the afternoon show. This advertisement probably attracted more attention than any that had ever appeared in the local paper and the results were immediate.

Now, some may ask why I went into the public print instead of sending letters to my patrons. They may argue that the mothers would object to such statements about their children in a newspaper. But just the opposite is true. If I had sent out the circular letters every woman would have instantly jumped to the conclusion that I was referring to some member of her flock and I would have lost patrons. Now, look to the psychological aspect of the case. You know that no matter if it is true that the greater part of the juvenile population of any community are a pretty rough sort, the mothers may agree with you, but they will all point out that it's "other" children to blame and that their own are perfect little angels.

As I say, this plan worked in the vast majority of cases and soon it became distinctly out of style to bring one of the tots to an evening performance, and those who persisted were fully conscious that they were attracting not only the attention, but the comment of their neighbors when the infant began to grow lusty.

Daylight audiences do not generally consist of tired working people. And it is especially true that country folk are very liberal in their treatment of children and that there was no complaint when there was an occasional outburst. I instructed my ushers to do everything possible for the comforts of the children, to give them the very best seats and then to see that they behaved themselves. Just a statement by one of the ushers that the little boy or girl was missing the best part of the show was generally enough to secure their full attention for the rest of the bill.

Yes, I occasionally did get pictures that were not entirely fitting for childish enjoyment, and on such occasions I would throw on the screen a slide reading "Children Will not Enjoy this Show," and then I would generally add a couple of lines saying "Tell the Little Ones to Wait for So and So," generally trying to make it my following attraction. In a similar way I called attention of the audiences to bills that were unusually suited for children, and any time that I had such a picture that I could recommend I would note that the receipts increased from ten to twenty dollars.

In a town the size of mine it was necessary to get every possible patron to do a successful business. I made up my mind to study each possible class or division of the people and to make some special appeal to each class without at the same time giving the slightest hint that the attraction might not appeal to others. It can be done easily enough, but it takes careful study and a full understanding of what you are about. The best answer to my argument is that in three months after I had opened I was getting three-fourths of the "kid" patronage of the town.

Not only was I doing that, but I was establishing confidence in my theatre among the grown folk who had not yet become regular attendants. When the children went home and told of some little thing that happened and how order was straightened out, it caused the mothers who really counted to think and wonder whether the motion picture show wasn't really an asset to the town and one that they ought to encourage.

HIS HANDS UP

But This Advice Would Have Helped Him

WE know of one manager of a neighborhood house in one of the larger cities of the country who tried Saturday matinees for the children. He described these sessions as a series of disorders. He would put out the offenders and return them their money, but they would come back again the next Saturday and start the same trouble again.

"Finally I threw up my hands," he told us. "No more children's matinees for me if I have to go out of the business."

But Successful Exhibitor is a man who thinks about the problems that he had had to confront. He did not know, but he went about them in a logical way. Read how he dealt with this problem.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors

Mr. Rothapfel Will Answer Here any Questions Regarding Problems in Exhibition. The Only Conditions Are That the Questions Must Not Bear on the Merits of Particular Pictures or Services and That They Must Come Through the NEWS. Address Your Inquiries "ROTHAPFEL ADVICE, EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU, MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

XXXVII—I have noted with interest the references to the patriotic propaganda work that you are doing at the Rialto, but I have not noticed any references to "The Star Spangled Banner" being played. Now one of my competitors has his orchestra of three pieces play the national anthem before each performance. (As a matter of fact, the man is a German and was very strong in his expressions before this country entered the war.) Now I have taken the position that the people come to the theatre for relaxation and that no matter how patriotic they are they do not want to stand during the repdition of a number. I use patriotic music at every opportunity, but there has been some criticism of the fact that my orchestra does not play the national anthem. Let me have your views of this subject.—NEBRASKAN.

PROPAGANDA work at all times is a thing not to be desired. Frankly, I abhor it, except where the best interests of our country are concerned—and then it is to be used in the very best taste possible.

The national anthem may be played either at the beginning or—more preferable—at the close of every performance. But it is not necessary at the beginning of every performance. Much can be made of the national anthem as a musical number. But I have heard it played at waltz time without any of the required spirit of martialism. If you are going to play it, play it stirringly.

Don't rave about your patriotism. Don't advertise that you are playing the anthem, but do it because you want to do it. And don't do it boisterously, but with thought and sincerity. It is to be regretted that in a great many cases our national anthem is used insincerely—merely in order to get applause—a grand stand play.

Have your patriotic demonstrations in good taste. As an example of careful consideration, hard work and love for what we are doing in the matter of patriotic propaganda—this week we are co-operating with the Marine Corps, and, while we are presenting a picture which is purely propaganda, still it is in good taste. We afford good amusement and yet thrill our audience to the very core. As a point of interest in this connection, we do not use the national anthem once during the picture.

Using the national anthem indiscriminately—merely for cheap advertising purposes—shouting from the housetops—is not good taste. Indeed, it is almost desecrative. Love, reverence, respect for the colors and the national anthem are to be held sacred. Our national symbols ought not be cheapened or debased by crude commercialism. Don't mind what your competitor does. It may be all camouflage.

XXXVIII—Have been trying an overture in my theatre, but I find that the audience rarely pay any attention to them and that it results in a constant hum of conversation that practically drowns out the music. I have even followed the plan of having my two ushers not seat anyone while the overture is being played, but this seems to add more and more to the confusion, and there are constant arguments on the part of patrons who want seats at once. I believe that the overture will be a good thing once I get the audiences accustomed to them ,but the problem is how to do it. I don't think that it is a case of the patrons not liking the music, but that the trouble is due to the fact that it is something new.—MUSIC LOVER.

READING your question carefully, I wish you would let me know how large your orchestra is and what calibre of men compose it. To give overtures with a small orchestra is a precarious practice, unless the few men are excellent musicians. If I were you I wouldn't attempt to put the overture over with the lights on. Try lighting effects; even a little baby spot on the violinist. If you do give an overture and want to make a success of it, darken the house, have a flood light on the musicians, and play some light piece, some pleasant, simple little melody. DO NOT ATTEMPT ANY LONG DIFFICULT CLASSICS because the audience won't stand for it. Unless the arrangement is made for ten or twelve pieces, it will be ineffective. A good way to get an overture across is to take a scenic, play a few bars, dimming the lights and throwing the scenic on the screen. The combination of music and scenic will earn big applause, hold the attention of the audience, and the whole show will look better. Choose the right music—the heart songs, if you please—the violin alone or the piano, all according to your judgment. The very fact that you are TRYING to do something proves that you ARE doing something and that you will succeed.

Even here, where we have a fifty-piece orchestra, where everything is done on a large, elaborate scale and where many people come almost solely to hear the music—even here are we bothered by a few talkative people. Some people will talk during musical numbers, no matter how beautiful and impressive the music is. They are not ill-bred, but merely don't think. Now, if you have a good address and can talk well (you don't have to be a silver-tongued orator), go out on the stage and tell the audience your ideas about the music, explain to them what you are trying to do, and ask them to pay attention to the music as a personal favor to you. Then, if you talk to them in the right way, you will find that they will not only listen to the music, but they will go out and talk about it and discuss the idea, and come again.

During my first attempt in New York I had a pantomimic artist who on appearing before the audience began to speak on what "I did" and "Who I am," and so forth—full of egotism. Some of the audience started to boo her. The lady was at fault, yet at the end of her number some people applauded her, while many were silent. In view of the general situation, I went out on the stage and asked for all lights up. I told the audience I was not a New Yorker and had heard wonderful things about New Yorkers, and that I was certainly surprised and disappointed that some of the people present had forgotten their manners and good breeding. I told them what I was trying to do, speaking for about three or four minutes. When I was through the house just rang with applause, and from that day on I did a tremendous business.

Yes, I have gone through the mill. This instance of what a talk to an audience will do comes vividly to my mind.

XXXIX—Peculiar conditions obtain in my city. It has been the custom to show two feature pictures for one admission, and all of the theatres are doing that. In my opinion, this is a bad thing. It is hard enough for me to cover the field and get one good feature a day. But the moment some one tries to break away from this policy there is a certain amount of the public that jumps to the conclusion that the move is one for saving money. I would like to have some suggestions as to how to round out my program, using only one feature and at the same time making the rest of the program so good that the public will appreciate the change. I have a high class neighborhood house, change my program daily, have an orchestra of three pieces, besides an organ.—AL. K.

I WANT to go on record once and for all and say that I do not believe showing two features for one admission is conducive to the best interests of the management or the industry. Things are in a bad state if the exhibitor is compelled to give a double feature in order to attract business. It proves he has lost the grip and his showmanship. All I can say is that I heartily disapprove of it. Don't you care if some element in your audience think you are trying to save money by using one feature. They will think so whatever you do. Go ahead and do the best you can, and do it as well as you can.

Having a three-piece orchestra and an organ is fine. A violin, a 'cello, a piano and an organ is indeed a good combination. I would suggest changing four times a week. But you yourself must give this question very careful consideration.

DON'T PUT ON TWO FEATURES. I am repeating this for emphasis. Don't put on two multiple reel pictures. It is not good policy and will kill you in the end. It is like a drink of whiskey—exhilarating at the time you take it, but, oh boy! the after effects!

The well-rounded program you ask for is a feature, a scenic, a topical and a comedy. But be careful to choose good pictures.

XL—I understand that you have a great advantage over other exhibitors because you can get any picture that you want and at the last moment you can change it you find out that you have made a mistake. Now, I am a hundred and fifty miles from my nearest exchange and such a course is impracticable. I must book these pictures considerable time in advance, and play the ones that I have booked. But here is the point that I want to get at. I find certain stars are the most popular with my patrons, and yet at the same time I find that some of the pictures in which they have been appearing have been very bad. I have in mind one woman star who probably had the second biggest following in this community, but the last three pictures in which she appeared have been impossible. Would you advise cancelling the other pictures in which she is to appear and booking some other star in her place? The same company is able to furnish plenty of other good pictures and has advised that course.—P. F.

"Biggest Patriotic Punch" on Record Shown In Rivoli Presentation of "The Unbeliever"

UNQUESTIONABLY the most striking presentation ever given a motion picture was that which has just been awarded "The Unbeliever" at the Rivoli theatre. It was a splendid opportunity and Mr. Rothapfel showed his genius to the fullest and employed all of the wonderful effects that were at his command to create the most striking scenes that probably have ever been witnessed in a motion picture theatre.

You probably know that before the beginning of his business career he was a member of the U. S. Marines. Any one who has been a member of that wonderful organization carries with him the pride for it, no matter how many years may have separated them. That was one of the reasons why he was able to obtain a large detachment of marines for the whole week at the Rivoli. Another reason was that the Government has recognized the splendid propaganda for patriotism that Mr. Rothapfel has done at his theatres and knew that in the presentation of this picture he would arouse the enthusiasm for this branch of the service as it probably never had been aroused in a theatre.

In the first place this picture, which is taken from the Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews war novelette, "The Three Things," was produced in co-operation with the marines at Quantico, Va. There is not an inch of faking in it; there is ever the genuine thrill. The picture itself will make a big hit even without the wonderful settings that were given it at the Rivoli.

But let's see how Rothapfel gave it the biggest punch that any picture probably ever carried over. The Rivoli Pictorial, which had gone before, has closed with a beautiful waterfall scenic, leaving an idealistic, peaceful effect. Of course this was done for the contrast that followed. All of the musical setting was especially arranged for this picture, and though it cannot be told here in detail, there can be enough outlined to show the big things that Rothapfel did to put it over.

The first curtains of the series of stages parted showing a marine on sentry. Then came the "all's well" cry from other sentries who could not be seen, then from the sentry on the stage. Then followed descriptive music heralding the break of day, the reveille called in the distance, the cock crows and then the bugles sounding assembly. Then the curtain came together and the Rivoli chorus seated in the orchestra sang the "Marine's Hymn" and once more there was a big demonstration from the audience which stilled when the curtains parted again showing five marine buglers and two drummers. These gave the adjutant's call with the blare of the trumpets of the orchestra being included, and then the music turned into "Semper Fidelis" as another curtain parted showing a squad of marines with the buglers still present. Never had there been such music heard in the Rivoli or any other theatre. The crashing sounds of Sousa's celebrated march set the audience wild and there was again another ovation. But still something was to come and Forrest Robinson, the actor, declaiming before the marines a poem written by Sergeant Percy Webb. Again a wonderful demonstration and with the curtains now dropped there flashed on the screen the words "Semper Fidelis," and some preliminary scenes of marines at drill and the words, "The marines have landed and all is well" brought the audience to its feet again.

There have been some wonderful demonstrations of patriotism in the New York theatres, but we have never seen anything like this one at the opening performance.

With practically all the scenes laid in Belgium where the marines were supposed to be holding part of the line, and with the vivid battle scenes with real marines appearing as the actors, there was of course some splendid opportunities for the musical score and these were taken advantage of to the fullest extent. Unquestionably the screen, with the accompaniment of music and settings, has been shown a wonderful ally of this country in war.

Instead of an overture the program opens with a "prelude dansant" executed by two young women in Eskimo costume, and this serves as an introduction to the second chapter of "Hunting Big Game in the North" to which the second number of the Grief suite was played.

The Animated shows the launching of a full rigged schooner in California, arrival of an American member of the Lafayette Escadrille to train our own flyers; horse racing on the ice at Mt. Clemens, Mich.; sheep raising, and then some very funny pictures, "Speedy New York," which were obtained through trick photography. Somewhere in Italy was shown to "Franchesa Moro," and got a big hand and the topical closed with Waterfalls at Aragonia, Spain, which were made wonderful by the special lighting effects that the Rivoli gave them.

Other musical numbers for the week were Miss Gladys Rice, singing "I Hear You Calling Me," and the Rialto quartet in "Down South." "After Henry" was the Metro-Drew comedy for the week.

NOT only because the aeroplane is playing such an important part in the war and many of our young student aviators were lost on the Tuscania, but because of the local interest since the Curtiss Aeroplane plant is located in Buffalo, Manager Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome put over a stage display of unusual power last week.

This was not merely a painting, but the propeller was automatically operating, giving a very realistic effect. While this setting was being shown there was played a medley of patriotic songs, ending with "Over There." Naturally this caused a riot of applause.

Manager Franklin reports that he has had much success in advertising the time that his feature pictures start. It has not only had the result of relieving the audience of the annoyance of other people being seated during the picture, but it has increased patronage, because the greater share come on time and therefore get out of the theatre just in time for the next show, so that the waiting crowds can be immediately accommodated.

Some details of display on "Wolves of the Rail," at American theatre, Butte, Montana

Realistic Railroad Effects in Lobby Break Records for Noble at the American

AS the result of all the big things that he has done, many of which have been recorded in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, about all of you know that P. E. Noble is the intensely live manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont.

Manager Noble believes that he has put over the biggest one yet, and that was with William S. Hart in "Wolves of the Rail." Certainly he left nothing undone in his advance campaign to bring the thousands to his house.

For one week in advance of the picture he used two hundred feet of film taken especially for him from the centre of a railroad track, showing a train coming first about three miles away and then up until it appears to be almost upon the audience. Then he faded into it the announcement slide the same copy of the big engine effect which happened in his newspaper advertising.

For the front of the theatre he used an engine that measured twenty-two feet from top to bottom. It was arranged so that the bell would ring, and Mr. Noble heightened the effect still further by running a piece of hose to one of his radiators and then inserting a whistle in the end of the hose so that the shrill blasts could be heard two blocks away. The engine was also lighted with electricity.

In addition to this front display the sign over the sidewalk represented a railroad block signal, entirely in red and illuminated from the inside. The lights in the canopy were alternate red and green and two engines used as "sidewalk stoppers" were done in black with a plain, the head of Hart being extended four inches on blocks to give it a good relief. In addition, attractive one-sheets were used in the lobby.

This resulted in one of the biggest weeks in the history of the American, notwithstanding that the weather was zero on the opening night, eight below on the following evening, finally going down to thirty under the mark and gradually rising toward the end of the week.

AID THAT COUNTS

Any Exhibitor Can Have This Free Service

RECENTLY Miss Mildred Newman, who is assisting her father in the management of a theatre in Helena, Ark., wrote us for some advice about advertising and other matters. We were mighty glad to go into full details so as to give every aid in our power. That these suggestions must have borne fruit is evidenced by Miss Newman's latest letter, which says in part:

"Your letter received some time ago and it was my intention to acknowledge it immediately, but you see I have been very busy trying out your advertising methods. We are very much pleased with the changes you suggested and I want to assure you of our appreciation."

This is the sort of personal, intimate service that we are prepared to give every exhibitor. There is no case too large or none too small. The only expense on your part is the stamp that carries your letter.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors' Queries

GET a source from which you can learn the kind of picture you are going to show. If not satisfied with the star, cancel the bookings and get other pictures. We have no advantage here over other exhibitors. Our responsibility and clientele are very exact, and we cannot let things go. But it is hardly true that we can get anything we want at the last moment. If you find that certain stars are more popular than others, get them. But it is dangerous to cater to stars. Rather make the house the thing. Stars are all very well, but make the THEATRE the dominating factor—not the stars. This will give you something to think about. Use your head. You'll get along alright—I know it.

"Tags" Every Auto in Exploiting Film

Fifty thousand automobile owners found facsimile tags of the type used by Los Angeles police department for arresting offenders of traffic laws on the steering wheels of their machines. The tags summoned the automobile owners to appear at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, and give reason why they had not previously witnessed the exhibition of "Whose Your Neighbor."

Manager Charles Gates of the Symphony introduced this novel advertising using fifty thousand tags. It required twelve men four days to properly tag all automobiles that parked on any of the streets in the business district.

It was reported one of the most successful stunts on record.

Ready Made Ad-Talks

Ann Murdock in a Rousing Comedy-Drama
"My Wife"—Strong Supporting Cast
(Mutual Five Reel Production)

Ann Murdock returns to the screen of the ——— theatre in "My Wife," produced by the Empire All Star Corporation and released on the Mutual program. The story was written by Michael Morton and the production was made under the direction of Dell Henderson. In the supporting cast with Miss Murdock are seen Herbert Bruce, Amy Veness, Rex MacDougal, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Grace Carlyle, Jules Rancourt, James Kearney, Carl Sauermann, Harriet Thompson, Romaine Callender, and Dudley Hill. Miss Murdock has the role of Beatrice Hammond, whose aunt dies and leaves a codicil to her will stipulating that unless Beatrice is married before her eighteenth birthday the fortune will revert to other kin. Gerald Eversleigh, a wealthy bachelor and lifelong friend of the family, is appointed executor of the estate of Beatrice's aunt. Beatrice believes that she is in love with Ronald Farwell, who has been called to serve his country in France. When the news is brought to Beatrice of her aunt's bequest and its condition, she persuades Gerald to marry her "in name only," in order that her aunt's bequest may remain in her possession. Ronald is wounded and at the hospital falls in love with a French nurse whom he later marries. Gerald falls in love with his wife "in name only," and becomes jealous of the attentions paid to Beatrice by other men. Ronald returns to America with his wife and offers Gerald a large sum of money if he will clinch his marriage with Beatrice. Beatrice realizes that Ronald cares nothing for her, and Gerald, knowing that his affections are reciprocated, considers the bargain a good one but refuses the money offered, for he has won something more precious than all the money in the world.

William Hart in Story of Lumber Camp Life, "Blue Blazes Rawden"
(Artcraft Five Reel Production)

William Hart's latest—"Blue Blazes Rawden"—at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The good-bad man leaves his sombrero, his chaps and the West behind, dons the hob-nailed boots and the outfit of the lumber-jack and goes into the Northwest. It's something different and presents Bill in a role that rings with interest throughout the run of this picture. In the supporting cast are seen Maud George, Gertrude Claire, Hart Hoxie, Robert McKim and Robert Gordon. The picture was directed by Mr. Hart, himself, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The story was written by J. G. Hawks, popular writer of Western stories who has contributed some of the biggest successes to the screen. This is Mr. Hart's fourth Artcraft picture. He presents the part of a lumberjack who has lived his life in the north woods. He strolls into "Ladyfingers" Hilgard's gambling room and dance hall. He takes a dislike to the proprietor and the feeling is reciprocal on the part of the other. When Blue Blazes wins the smiles of Hilgard's sweetheart and wins at cards, Hilgard suggests that they have it out and in the struggle that follows, Hilgard is killed. Before he dies, he says that his mother is expected and because of that he is glad that he will not be there to meet her for he would not want her to meet him under such circumstances. The mother arrives and in the belief that Rawden was her son's best friend bestows her affection upon him. A jealous half-breed girl tells her brother and in revenge the girl shoots and injures Rawden. Unable to face the woman whom he worships, Rawden leaves the camp.

Frank Keenan in "Loaded Dice"; Powerful Story Dealing with Graft
(Pathe Five Reel Production)

Frank Keenan will appear on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in the first of his series of Pathe productions, titled "Loaded Dice," adapted from Ellery H. Clarke's successful novel of the same name, by Gilson Willets, under the direction of Herbert Blache. Mr. Keenan is an artist whether it be before the footlights or before the camera. His first stage [illegible] under the management of David Belasco in "The Girl of the Golden West." "The Warrens of Virginia" was another of his big successes. Mr. Keenan is supported in this production by Florence Billings, Guy Coombs and Madeline Marshall. The theme of the story deals with food profiteering, politics and big business. Mr. Keenan has the role of Richard Gordon, a promoter who presents to the world his mask of goodness under which lies the cheat who plays to win regardless of the methods employed. He plays with "loaded dice." Rose Ashton comes into his life and she alone is able to break his hardened nature. He gets the news that three powerful men are to attempt to corner the food market. He demands to be included in the deal. They are forced to concede to his demand. Gordon tells Rose that if he succeeds in swinging the deal, he will marry her, but that in the meantime he needs help. He introduces her to Harry Palmer, a young millionaire, as his cousin and arranges matters so that the two are found alone in his hunting lodge. Later he is prepared to demand a check for $100,000. Ann Holden, a former favorite, in a jealous rage, tells Palmer the truth. The next morning her death is reported. But other eyes were looking. What is the result?

Gladys Leslie Has Royal Romance in "The Wooing of Princess Pat"
(Vitagraph Five Reel Production)

"The Wooing of Princess Pat" presents winsome little Gladys Leslie in the role of Princess Pat, daughter of the ruler of the little kingdom of Paxstadt. If you saw "The Prince of Graustark" or read the book by George Barr McCutcheon, you will enjoy every foot of the celluloid that recounts the adventures of Miss Leslie in portraying the part of Princess Pat in "The Wooing of Princess Pat." In the supporting cast with Miss Leslie are seen J. Frank Glendon, Bigelow Cooper, William Dunn, Charles Kent, Carlton King, Templar Saxe and J. Herbert Hall. The story was written by William Addison Lathrop and produced by Vitagraph under the direction of William P. S. Earle. Eric, the Iron Duke of Warburg, is desirous of declaring war on his neighbor, the Grand Duke of Paxstadt. Princess Pat, the daughter of the Grand Duke, is met by the Iron Duke while she is coasting. Not knowing his identity, the Princess and he become good friends and the Princess becomes his wife. War is averted between the two kingdoms. The above is only a short outline of the story. The adventures of the little Princess and nice bits of comedy that develops when she is introduced to her new surroundings and becomes first lady of the land, form the basis for a most interesting picturized drama.

"The Wooing of Princess Pat" with Gladys Leslie and J. Frank Glendon in the leading roles, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Elsie Ferguson Stars in Edward Sheldon's "Song of Songs"
(Artcraft Five Reel Production)

As a vehicle to exploit the great dramatic ability of Elsie Ferguson, "The Song of Songs," the Artcraft production which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— proves to be her most effective motion picture play since her advent to the screen. The picture is adapted from Edward Sheldon's play, which proved a sensation at the Eltinge theatre, New York, several years ago, and provides melodramatic situations of great intensity. Decidedly emotional is the role of Lily Kardos, which Miss Ferguson is called upon to play and the star is supported by no less than three leading men, Frank Losee, Crauford Kent and Cyril Fletcher. Others in the excellent cast are Gertrude Berkely, Ned Burton, Corinne Uzell, Charles Wellesley and Henry Leone. Possessed of unusual beauty, Lily Kardos begins life as a sales girl for an Oriental with branches on the boardwalks at Palm Beach and Atlantic City, where she attracts the attention of wealthy men. Her career is a series of dramatic incidents and she rises to a commanding position as the wife of ex-Senator Calkins, a millionaire who has proposed marriage only after his wily advances have been repeatedly repulsed. Through the plotting of Calkins' housekeeper, a former victim of his perfidy, Lily is caught in a seemingly compromising position, and in a fit of jealous rage her husband drives her away. She plunges into the fast life of the set in which she is thrown and later meets Stephen Bennett, a high-minded young man, and falls in love with him. Through the intervention of Stephen's wealthy uncle the shadows of her past are brought up and loom as a barrier between the lovers. Lily is prevented from committing suicide by Stephen, who disregards his uncle's commands and rushes to her side. His proposal of marriage, however, is refused by Lily, who realizes that their happiness would be short-lived, and she decides to remain with Dick Laird, the very man who had plotted and achieved her downfall.

"Girl with the Champagne Eyes" Drama of Deep Human Interest
(Fox Five Reel Production)

No matter how low a man or a woman may go there is always a chance for a "come back"—always a chance that something will stir the spark of honor and cut out, as with a surgeon's knife, the moral sore that has grown because the correct mental surroundings were lacking. Such a case is shown in William Fox's photoplay by Bernard McConville, "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes," in which beautiful Jewel Carmen is starred, and which will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ———. According to the story Nellie Proctor, "the girl," steals a wallet from a fellow passenger on a ship bound for San Francisco. Fearing detection she slips it into the pocket of James Blair, another passenger, who is finally convicted and sentenced to two years in the chain gang. Nellie, regretting her act, gets a friend named Mulligan to help Blair escape, and he is brought to a rendezvous of thieves in the slums of San Francisco. The girl offers to do anything that she can to recompense Blair for the wrong she has done him, but he continues bitter toward her. Finally, to keep away from the police, they go to a mining town in Alaska. Blair is sent out to find gold and the girl and Mulligan remain in the wicked little town whose chief feature is the Golden Palace saloon. Money is necessary and Mulligan becomes a waiter and the girl the chief entertainer in the Golden Palace. But they have changed. Blair has insisted that hereafter the three shall remain straight. He had made this a condition before he would consent to remain with them at all. They get into some trying situations, but survive the ordeal with honor. A dead miner's children whom Nellie has taken as her wards are of great aid in the beautiful girl's reformation. These children are portrayed by the redoubtable Francis Carpenter, who was Jack in "Jack and the Beanstalk," and Aladdin in "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp"; Gertrude Messinger, who was the cute little maid in the Aladdin picture, and Carmen De Rue and Lloyd Perl, also of fairy tale picture fame. L. C. Shumway, Charles Elder, G. Raymond Nye, Al. Padget, Charles Goreman and Eleanor Washington round out a capable cast.

"Whims of Society" Has Ethel Clayton as Its Star
(World Film Five Reel Production)

Ethel Clayton, who, besides possessing extraordinary good looks, knows how to wear her clothes about as well as any actress in the films, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— in "Whims of Society," a drama by William Addison Lathrop, which cleverly portrays the contrasts between the so-called upper and lower social strata. A well selected cast, including Frank Beamish, Jack Drumier, Frank Mayo, Katherine Johnson, Zadee Burbank and Pinna Nesbit, is seen in support of the star. Nora Carey, portrayed by Miss Clayton, works in the prosperous ribbon factory of John Travers, a cunning business man, philanthropic and highly respected. Travers has a son, Hugh, who, after four extravagant years at college, has gone to work in the factory. Mrs. Van Schuyler, head of the Welfare society, who has her eye on Hugh as a prospective son-in-law, pays a visit to the factory in company with her daughter, Eleanor, and the elder Travers becomes interested in the daughter. Soon after that, at an outing for the employees, Marlinoff, the big foreman, tries to force his attentions upon Nora and he is driven off just in time by Hugh. The young man and Nora soon become fast friends and as an evidence of his friendship offers to send Katherine, Nora's sister whom she has been supporting, to college. The offer is accepted and later he provides an attractive apartment for Nora. In the meantime John Travers has been accepted by Eleanor Van Schuyler and all is well until Marlinoff, discharged as foreman, informs them that High is maintaining an expensive apartment for Nora. The father of the young man is enraged and demands that his son give the girl up, even though he is told that they are entirely innocent of any wrong-doing. Hugh refuses and is disinherited, but Nora decides to end all by turning on the gas in her room. Meanwhile, Marlinoff, in revenge, kills John Travers with a bomb, and Hugh, going to tell Nora that he is free to marry her, though a poor man, saves her from asphyxiation. His offer is accepted.

Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor," Her Fifth Goldwyn Production

(Goldwyn Six Reel Production)

Mae Marsh, the dazzling photoplay star of "Polly of the Circus," fame, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— in her fifth Goldwyn Picture, "The Beloved Traitor." This is a screen version of the successful novel of the same name from the pen of Frank L. Packard and furnishes six reels of delightful entertainment. In the story Mae Marsh has the part of Mary Garland, a Maine fishermaiden. Mary has a sweetheart, Judd Minot, a fisherman, who has talent as a sculptor. His ideal figure is embodied in his fishermaiden friend whose life he saves. Later Mary's uncle dies after having exacted a promise from Judd to watch over the girl, along with Father Anthony, the village priest. But Judd is prevailed upon by Henry Bliss, a wealthy patron of art, to go to the big city to study. There he meets Myrna Bliss, who sees in the good-looking fellow another man to fascinate. Judd meets with success, falls in love with Myrna and forgets Mary. He has finished a statue, carved from his boyhood dreams, but dissipation has laid its heavy hand on him. A scurrilous item appears in a society paper which is seen by Mr. Bliss who sends it to Father Anthony. Mary sees it and determines to save Judd from himself. She goes to the city and gains entrance to Judd's studio, where she is recognized as the original of the prize model. Myrna, who is present, upbraids Judd, and then follows a fight between Judd and Paul Drayton, rival for Myrna's hand, but Mary saves the precious model from destruction. Judd's eyes are opened and he turns again to the girl of his youth. Splendid support is given the star by E. K. Lincoln, as Judd Minot; George Fawcett, Hedda Hopper, Bradley Barker, J. A. Furey, and others.

Victor Moore Drops from Clouds in "Adam and Some Eves"

(Paramount Klever Komedy—Five Reels)

Victor Moore plays the only male role in "Adam and Some Eves," the Klever Komedy by Chester M. De Vonde which will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———. In this fun fest Vic is seen as an aviator who drops from his "flying flivver" right down into the heart of Femininеville. This is a town inhabited only by women, and when Adam (that's Vic) is discovered he is about as welcome as a waiter's thumb in the consomme. Helena Pinch, chiefess of police, puts Adam in the lockup and he is put on trial before a "soprano jury." After a short deliberation the jury decides that he is guilty and he is sentenced to be tickled all over and to be confined in prison. He escapes and when the prison bell gives the alarm the whole town of Femininеville turns out in pursuit. They chase him everywhere, but in the meantime his sweetheart gets word from her pet goose that he is imprisoned in Femininеville and she is off to the rescue in her Rolls-Ford. By the time Adam is within reach of the city gates his sweetheart comes dashing in and rescues him from the women. Moore gets in a lot of very funny work in this comedy and he is capably assisted by D. L. Don, Peggy Adams, Agnes Neilsen and a big cast of girls "de looks."

War Scenes Furnish Thrills for "The Crucible of Life"

(General Enterprises, Inc.—Seven Reels)

One of the strongest screen dramas produced in many a day is "The Crucible of Life," which will be presented at the ——— theatre on ———. War scenes, enacted with splendid realism, give the production a timely interest. Nor does it depend upon its war picturizations alone for its popularity, for the story teems with sentiment. The cast might well be termed all-star, for it includes such artists of the screen as Grace Darmond, Frank O'Connor, Jack Sherrill, Winifred Harris and Edwin Forsberg. Following a sad matrimonial experience, Gladys Dale secures a position as companion to Diana, daughter of Mrs. Dorset, a prominent society woman. Young Robert Dorset, a ne'er-do-well, makes advances to Gladys, but is repulsed. Soon after, Edwin Fairfax arrives with his motherless child for a visit. He and Gladys fall in love. Some time later Fairfax obtains a commission in the army and goes to the battle front, leaving his child in Glady's care. Young Robert Dorset falls in with Fritz von Hoffbert, leader of a gang of society thieves and secretly in German government employ. The boy is prevailed upon to steal a necklace from his own mother and suspicion is cast upon Gladys. The young woman knows of Robert's guilt, and to spare his mother enlists as a Red Cross nurse and goes to France. By an odd coincidence she is assigned to the same command in which Fairfax is an officer. Von Hoffbert, too, joins the army as a spy and becomes a member of Fairfax's company. He is caught signalling to the Germans by Fairfax and the two fight. Von Hoffbert is overpowered, but Fairfax is badly wounded in the struggle. The latter is carried to the same base hospital where Gladys, hurt by a bomb from a German aeroplane, has been taken. A happy reunion, of course, results. Meanwhile Robert Dorset, caught in another robbery, absolves Gladys from guilt, and Mrs. Dorset sends for the lovers to return to her home to regain their health. A furlough is obtained and a war wedding in America follows.

GREAT BENEFIT

Delaware Theatres Find Ad Talks Most Useful

E. WATSON, publicity director for the Queen and Majestic theatres, Wilmington, Del., the two leading theatres of that city, find the service given on these pages of great help in his work. He writes:

"We have been following your various departments in the NEWS and are particularly interested in the Service Bureau and Ready-Made Ad Talks. These departments have been of great benefit to us, as they give us an advance inkling as to the pictures. We feel that every showman will find these departments a real help in the promotion of his pictures."

What are you doing, Mr. Exhibitor? Are you profiting by all these helps or are you saying "very good" and letting the opportunity go at that?

Popular Screen Players Are Featured in "Under Suspicion"

(Metro Five Reel Production)

Those popular favorites of the silent drama, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, are to be seen again in ——— on ———, when the ——— theatre presents "Under Suspicion," a five-act Metro drama. The story is one to create and maintain unbounded interest among the spectators, dealing as it does with crooks, detectives and the clever sleuthing of a woman newspaper reporter. Incidentally, the producers have given the picture a lavish setting. Mr. Bushman is seen in the part of Gerry Simpson, a young millionaire. At a society musicale he meets a girl who interests him greatly. She is Virginia Blake, a reporter on the Sentinel. Suddenly there is a commotion. Burglars have entered the boudoir of the hostess and rifled her jewel case. Her pet monkey has leaped on one of the men and snatched one of the buttons from his coat. Virginia Blake takes the button and determines through it to find the culprit. Gerry secures a position as cub reporter on the Sentinel and with his valet, Rogers, moves into a poorer quarter of the city. He and Virginia work together on many assignments. There is a button missing from his coat, matching the one she has, and her suspicions are aroused. As a matter of fact, Rogers, the valet, is the guilty party, he having worn his master's coat the night of the musicale. How Virginia finds this out and fastens "the goods" on him makes an exciting story which holds the spectator in breathless interest to the finish. Of course Gerry and Virginia marry in the end.

"Under Suspicion" will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———.

"The Woman Between Friends" Is a Highly Dramatic Production

(Vitagraph Five Reel Production)

When Robert W. Chambers wrote "Between Friends" he created a story with wonderful motion picture possibilities, and Vitagraph has made the most of them in its production of "The Woman Between Friends," which will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ———. Lovely Alice Joyce and Marc McDermott are the featured players in this highly dramatic production, but hardly less commendable is the work of the cast, which includes Robert Walker, Edith Speare and Katherine Lewis. "The Woman Between Friends" deals with the tangled fates of Cecelie, a flower girl; John Drene, a sculptor, and Jack Graylock, an artist. On the eve of Drene's wedding the two men, friends, make a declaration of eternal friendship. Drene loves his wife deeply, but he is engrossed in his work, and she seeks solace in the company of Graylock. Finally Drene awakes to the realization that his wife has fled, although he does not suspect his friend Graylock. The latter joins Mrs. Drene in Nice and the two pose as man and wife. There Graylock meets and renews acquaintance with Cecelie, a flower girl, and she, posing as an artist, meets "Mrs. Graylock." Soon thereafter Drene goes to Nice during the carnival. In the revelry of the carnival "Mrs. Graylock" is burned to death, but even then Drene does not suspect his false friend. The two friends return to Paris and soon Cecelie arrives to pose for Graylock. She and Drene fall in love and one day she recognizes a picture of Mrs. Drene as that of "Mrs. Graylock." She tells Drene, who swears vengeance. Going to Graylock's apartment, he exacts from him a promise to commit suicide on a certain day. Later Drene repents his act and sends Cecelie to Graylock's room to divert him from his purpose. Graylock has already shot himself, but recovers. Drene and Cecelie marry and Graylock remains an outcast.

George Beban in "One More American"—Italian Character

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

George Beban's latest contribution to his long list of screen dramas is titled "One More American." It is, without doubt, the best work that Mr. Beban has turned out in some time. The production was produced under the direction of William C. De Mille. The story was written by Mr. De Mille and scenarioized by Olga Printzlau. In the cast with the famous character actor are seen Camille Ankewich, May Giracci, Helen Jerome Eddy, Raymond Hatton, Jack Holt, H. B. Carpenter, Hector Dion, May Palmer, Ernest Joy and Signor Buzzi. Mr. Beban gives one of his far-famed Italian characterizations. This time he is a theatre owner. Luigi Riccardo owns the Marionette theatre in Little Italy. He had worked and saved faithfully. His two great ambitions are to become an American citizen and to succeed in business for the sake of his family. He antagonizes Regan, the ward boss, by refusing to pay graft money. He undermines Regan's influence in the Italian quarter and loses him many votes in the following election. A reporter who has tried for months to "get the goods" on Regan realizes his ambition through Riccardo. Regan works to "get" Riccardo. He goes to Dr. Ross, whom he has started in the profession by getting him a position as physician at Ellis Island, and tells him that he wants him to find something wrong with Riccardo's wife when she arrives from Italy. Ross has to obey and pronounces Riccardo's wife and child unfit to be admitted on their arrival. The reporter learns of the deal and wrings a confession from the doctor, and Riccardo and his family are united and Regan is whipped at his own game.

William Russell in "The Midnight Trail"—Comedy—Drama—Mystery

William Russell will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Midnight Trail," his latest work before the camera. In the supporting cast with Mr. Russell are seen Francilia Billington, who has the principal feminine role; Sidney Deane, Jerome Sheler, Carl Stockdale, Edward Johnson, Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Helen Howard and Alfred Ferguson. "The Midnight Trail" is a five-reel comedy-drama, produced by the American Film and released on the Mutual program. Mr. Russell has the role of Jack Woodford, millionaire clubman and auto racer, who devours the words of A. Conan Doyle and believes himself a second Sherlock Holmes. Alice Moreland, the beautiful daughter of Reverend Moreland, catches the eye of Jack, at his lawyer's office, and she gives him "the icy glare." Her father has been robbed and he asks the lawyer to recommend to him a good detective. Jack secures the card of Detective Irons, and, posing as the sleuth, proceeds to the home of the reverend gentleman and introduces himself and his valet, Stride, as famous detectives. Jack's curiosity is aroused by the actions of Faxon, the rector's private secretary. He overhears Faxon threatening to reveal a secret of Harry's, the rector's son, unless Harry compels Alice to return his affections.

The adventures of Jack in the guise of a detective and the manner in which he compels Alice to recognize him as a friend and suitor are told with interest in every scene of this production.

Live News from the Producers

Barbara Castleton with World

Placed Under Long-Term Contract to Star in Productions of That Company—Independent Features to Her Credit

BARBARA CASTLETON, who has appeared in several independent productions in prominent roles, has been placed under a long-term contract by World Film Corporation, which this week announced its intention of starring her in World-Pictures.

Commenting upon the engagement of Miss Castleton, World Film explained that the association of the player with World is but a continuance of the policy which the company has followed in presenting stars of the better class. It is expected, World announces, that Miss Castleton's regular appearance on the World program will cement permanently the favor in which she is held.

Commenting further upon Miss Castleton, World said: "Her career is disproof of the philosophy of Mr. Micawber 'to wait around for something to turn up.' She assumed the reins herself and in less than one and one-half years has risen from the ranks of extra to stellar parts. Being a cousin of Louise Gunning, the comic opera star, naturally inspired her with ambitions and when still in her teens she played as an understudy of Lina Abarbanell in 'Madame Sherry.' But the family endeavored to prevent her from entering the stage by taking her away to Canada where she spent four years preparing for the next assault upon the booking offices. During that period she wrote a number of scenarios and stories which she confesses were promptly returned. Upon reaching New York, she learned Herbert Brenon was making a prologue to 'A Daughter of the Gods.' The star selected for the role did not appear and Mr. Brenon, searching for a suitable substitute, chanced upon Miss Castleton.

Barbara Castleton Has Been Signed by World Pictures

"Director George Irving having been impressed by her work presented her opposite H. B. Warner in 'God's Man.' Hobart Henley then obtained her services for the lead in 'Parentage,' which was followed by the lead in 'On Trial,' which played over the First Exhibitor's Circuit. 'For the Freedom of the World' was the succeeding photoplay in which Miss Castleton assumed a star part; 'Sins of Ambition' followed."

Hart Directs Himself in Fifth Artcraft

William S. Hart is now working on the production of "The Tiger Man," his fifth picture for Artcraft release. He is directing the production himself, under the supervision of Thos. H. Ince, and according to rumors that have floated forth from the Hart studio, the western screen star will again appear in one of his familiar haunts the Great Southwest.

Meantime, Hart has completed "Blue Blazes Rawden," one of the most dramatic offerings of the star in many months, it is claimed. It is a story of the lumber regions of the North Woods, and has as its theme the regeneration of a man with primal instincts and a rugged exterior but a heart of gold. This picture will be released shortly.

Director Saves Star from a Serious Fall

The publicity department of Metro this week released an announcement that Edith Storey, Metro star, probably owes her life to Frank Reicher, her director, as the latter's presence of mind saved her from a plunge of 600 feet from a precipice into a rocky abyss.

The company is working on "The Claim" near Hollywood.

James Morrison Returns to Vitagraph

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, this week, announced the engagement of James Morrison to play the part of the coward in Vitagraph's production, "Over the Top," in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey will appear in the leading male role.

For a number of years Jimmie Morrison was a Vitagraph favorite, and his return to Vitagraph for an important part in "Over the Top" will be welcomed by exhibitors and fans all over the country, Vitagraph declares.

Theda Bara to Appear in Her Own Play

Following "Rough and Ready," the William Farnum production which is scheduled by William Fox March 24, there will be released on April 7 "The Soul of Buddha," a Theda Bara super-production. This play was written by Miss Bara herself. The inspiration, she says, came to her after she had read of the death of Mata Hari, the woman dancer, who was executed as a spy. Miss Bara wrote the scenario while on a train coming across the continent. It is Miss Bara's first attempt as an author.

It is claimed that Director J. Gordon Edwards has constructed an unusual interior set in this production, the action of the play calling for an elaborate replica of a Buddhist temple in Java.

"Woman and the Law" Ready Soon

Announcement is made from the William Fox studios that R. A. Walsh soon will complete "Woman and the Law." This photoplay is based upon a recent criminal trial that received pages of publicity in the press for a period of several months. In a statement from the Fox organization it is declared that this murder trial was "one of the few incidents that have occurred since August, 1914, that succeeded in crowding the war news into inconspicuousness."

New Film Producer in the Industry?

Beverly Bruce, a Montreal girl who has appeared in vaudeville and stock and who is the author of a number of short stories and articles on the photodrama, intends to enter the film-producing business. This is deduced from an announcement in a New York newspaper to the effect that Miss Bruce would pay $500 for the best scenario submitted to her.

Goldwyn Launches Big Spring Drive

Aims to Render First Aid to the Box Office by Delivering Four Pictures of Exceptional Drawing Power—Mary Garden New Production Is Included

GOLDWYN this week announced itself in a position which it believes will be heartily hailed by the exhibitor, as it is one that promises an outlay of pictures that are expected to have an unusual drawing power throughout the country. The Goldwyn organization has inaugurated what it terms a great campaign "to bring the public back wholesale to box offices."

As the biggest step in the campaign, Goldwyn has announced as one of its next four releases a second Mary Garden production, "The Splendid Sinner," which was completed in December before the release of "Thais."

Surrounded by Secrecy

"The Splendid Sinner" was made with some degree of secrecy, or at least Goldwyn desired to keep it unannounced. It is said to reveal an emotional and aggressive Mary Garden in contrast with the reserve of her "Thais." "It would be no misnomer to call 'The Splendid Sinner' a social melodrama, and it is certain to be one of the box-office attractions of the year," said Goldwyn.

Because of the welcome accorded Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million"—her first picture to be released in more than a year—Goldwyn likewise announces for prompt release a second production for this star, the title being "The Floor Below," and very properly giving a hint of both mystery and drama. Without any further hint Mabel Normand herself is expected to take care of the other important element—laughter.

The order of release for Goldwyn's next four productions is as follows: February 24, Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor," by Frank L. Packard; March 10, Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below," by Elaine Sterne; March 24, Madge Kennedy in "The Danger Game"; April 7, Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner," by Kate Jordan.

Emotional Mae Marsh

Concerning the Mae Marsh picture, Goldwyn said: "Exhibitors have expressed their preference for two types of Mae Marsh productions—the type of story in 'The Cinderella Man' and the emotional type. 'The Beloved Traitor' is the latter type and it is the strongest dramatic role Miss Marsh has had under the Goldwyn imprint. This production was made in Maine and New York, was directed by William Worthington and is an action picture as well as a highly emotional one. Exhibitors are advised that they can emphasize the drawing power of the picture with the catch line 'The story of the good girl who whipped the vampire.' In the cast supporting Miss Marsh are: E. K. Lincoln, George Fawcett, Hedda Hopper and other notables."

Mabel Normand's story, "The Floor Below," combines comedy with a touch of melodrama, and still another new phase of this star's attainments is revealed.

Tom Moore in Cast

"The Floor Below" was directed by Clarence Badger and in the cast with Miss Normand are Tom Moore, under contract with Goldwyn for a long engagement; Helen Dahl, Major Wallace McCutcheon, Lincoln Plumer, Charlotte Granville, Louis R. Grisel, and others.

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn Comedienne

Madge Kennedy's production, "The Danger Game," will be, Goldwyn says, one of the big surprises of the season, and more especially to the following she has created with "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married" and "Our Little Wife." Miss Kennedy has been given an entirely new type of role—one calling for adventure, melodrama and action plus comedy. The first news about the production indicated that it might be known as "Powder Nose Annie," but this was a temporary working title that piqued the curiosity without revealing the strong dramatic power of the story. In the cast are Leslie Austen, Ned Burton, Mrs. Hugo Ballin and other capable players.

Garden Film "Stormy"

In reference to the Mary Garden release, "The Splendid Sinner," Goldwyn said: "Mary Garden in this picture will cause many thousands to exclaim, 'Ah, there is the Mary Garden that we all know!'" It is a big, stormy, thrilling picture of a luxurious woman who yielded to temptation but worked out for herself a tremendous redemption and martyrdom. Kate Jordan, the author, has in her story conceived a splendid realization of the powers of feminine personality, and Mary Garden as the heroine is twice as unusual and challenging as she was when depicted as the courtesan of Alexandria. Edwin Carewe directed this production. In the cast with Miss Garden are Hamilton Revelle, who did distinctive work as Paphnutius in "Thais"; Anders Randolph, Roberto Bellinger and others.

"M'liss" Chosen for Mary Pickford

The next vehicle for Mary Pickford under the Artcraft banner is to be "M'liss," from Francis Bret Harte's novel, one of the most stirring of all California stories by the author. "M'liss" is a mischievous, ingenuous, uncouth, yet lovable character, withal. It should give Mary Pickford an opportunity to again display the gifts that have blessed her. A large cast of principals with ensembles of extra people will support the star. Francis Marion supplies the scenario and Marshall Neilan will direct the production.

The latest Pickford Artcraft picture, "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," has just been finished at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. This story by Belle K. Maniates was also adapted to the screen by Frances Marion and directed by Marshall Neilan. It is said to be Miss Pickford's most humorous play to date, and will probably be released in March.

Farnum and Company Back in New York

March 24 has been set as the release date of "Rough and Ready," the William Fox production, starring William Farnum. Mr. Farnum and the large company appearing in his support returned last week from Port Henry, N. Y., where they were engaged in making snow scenes. They were gone about three weeks and Director Richard Stanton, who is in charge of the third picture Mr. Farnum has made since his return to the East last year, reports exceptionally fine results from the trip to the Adirondacks. Mr. Farnum has begun work on the remaining "interiors" of the drama in the studios in this city. The subject will be released as a Standard picture.

"The Claim" Promises Novel Effect

Edith Storey, Metro star, and her director, Frank Reicher, claim credit for accomplishing what Metro terms a talking motion picture, perfectly synchronized, which is scheduled to make its appearance in "The Claim," which is now being produced in California.

Miss Storey appears in "The Claim" as Belle Jones, a woman embittered by grief and a man's perfidy. One human trait which adversity cannot destroy is her love of song; and it is when she sings "Annie Laurie" that Director Reicher achieves his new effect.

Miriam Cooper Again in Films

Will Fox Plans to Present Her in "Woman and the Law"—Appeared in Several Big Feature Productions

MIRIAM COOPER, who retired from motion pictures in the latter part of 1917, has returned to the field of the silent drama, William Fox announces, and will be presented shortly in "Woman and the Law." The production is a William Fox picture.

Miss Cooper had roles in some of the biggest productions ever made, among them "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance" and "The Honor System." After being featured in "Betrayed," some six months ago, she announced her retirement from film activities. She stated that she was going away for a long rest. The sincerity of her declaration is evidenced by the fact that until now no news had been heard from her.

Miss Cooper was born in Baltimore and came to New York City when she was twelve years of age. She made her first picture in 1912, when she was a schoolgirl. Then she appeared in the land of the screen, and from the time of her stage debut, she appeared continuously until the time of her retirement.

When R. A. Walsh began the selection of the cast for "Woman and the Law," he at once realized, the Fox announcement says, that the part of the wife required an actress of unusual subtlety and power. She must not only be capable of registering the tenderness of motherlove, but also possess the power of rising to the great emotional heights which take place towards the end of the drama. Checking over in his mind the actresses who had been seen in somewhat similar roles, he perceived that there was none as peculiarly fitted for the part as Miss Cooper and at once entered into negotiations with her.

Miriam Cooper Has Returned to Stardom in William Fox Productions

For a time she demurred. She had quit the screen, she said, and had no desire to re-enter the field. But Mr. Walsh brought before her so strongly the opportunity which the role afforded her that Miss Cooper finally consented.

Edwin Thanhouser to Retire March First

FOLLOWING a long career in the motion picture producing business, Edwin Thanhouser will on March 1 turn over the duties of his office as president of Thanhouser Film Corporation to his successor, who is yet to be chosen, and retire to Shorewood, his new country estate on the shores of Long Island Sound, according to announcements this week.

After his return from Europe three years ago, following the death of Charles J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser company, Mr. Thanhouser agreed to take the presidency of the company he had originally founded for a period of three years, ending March 1, 1918. This was with the definite understanding that the arrangement would not be renewed, no matter what conditions might be at the end of the specified term.

Edwin Thanhouser was the first theatrical manager to embark in the motion picture business and he brought to the work a knowledge of artistic and dramatic values which made Thanhouser Pictures popular and successful. Several flattering propositions have been made to him by certain big film interests, but Mr. Thanhouser is not inclined to remain in the motion picture field. There is a rumor, however, that he may consider one or two big productions, as propositions along that line, worth while both from a financial and an artistic standpoint, have been made to him.

Edison Proud of Cast of "The Unbeliever"

Edison professes to be proud of the cast which it presents in the Edison Super-Feature, "The Unbeliever." The following were chosen by Nellie Grant, the casting director; Raymond McKee as Philip Landicutt, "The Unbeliever"; Marguerite Courtot as Virginie Harbrook; Kate Lester as Margaret Landicutt, Philip's mother; Frank de Vernon as "Uncle Jemmy" Landicutt; Darwin Karr as Lefty, a private of Marines; Karl von Stroheim as Lieut. Kurt von Schnieditz.

Yorke-Metro Gets Klutho's Studio

The headquarters of the Yorke-Metro Company during its stay in Jacksonville, Fla., to make Metro Star Series Productions presenting Harold Lockwood, will be the Klutho studios. Arrangements have been made by Yorke-Metro to take over the major portion of the plant and the company, already housed in its new quarters, has started to produce Metro's screen version of Holman Day's romantic story, "The Landloper."

Members of the Florida branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, assembled in convention in Jacksonville recently, witnessed the filmization of several scenes for "The Landloper." The party, guided by S. A. Sparks and W. L. Whitehead, both Jacksonville exhibitors, included Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Bennett, Ocala, Fla.; Thornton Parker, St. Petersburg; Franke Genover, St. Augustine; Mr. and Mrs. L. Kalbfield, Palatka; Fletcher Catron, A. H. La Belle and C. D. Cooley, Tampa; Braxton Beacham, Jr., Orlando; H. W. Titus, Daytona; C. E. Daffin, Tallahassee; Wm. Denworth, Fort Lauderdale; Parish Carter, Gainesville; J. E. Rivers, Green Cove Springs; L. P. Davis, Arcadia.

Harry R. Durant Joins Goldwyn Staff

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has closed a long term contract with Harry R. Durant, one of the better known motion picture writers.

Mr. Durant is a Yale man and was a well-known free-lance writer, having over two hundred short stories to his credit when he joined the Munsey staff as editor of All-Story Magazine. During his five years there he contributed many successes to the legitimate stage. Since leaving Munsey he has been in turn managing editor of the Biograph, Empire and Famous Players organizations.

Charles Sarver Joins World Film

Charles Sarver, novelist, short story writer and author of many screen subjects, has been secured by the World Film Corporation as head of the concern's scenario department.

Mr. Sarver will conduct the department on entirely new lines, embodying in his administration of the large force of authors and continuity writers the supreme fact which his long experience has taught him, namely, that the story is 60 per cent. of a production.

Neal Hart Joins Cast of "U" Serial

Neal Hart, Universal cowboy, makes his appearance in the sixteenth episode of "The Mystery Ship," making this current Universal serial a four-star production with Ben Wilson, Neva Gerber, Kingsley Benedict and Neal Hart.

Triangle Points Way to More Profit

Through Manager W. J. Hagerty, of Philadelphia Exchange, Exhibitors Are Told About Co-operative Exhibiting—Warns Against Inflated Advertising Methods

TRIANGLE DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, in further support of its claim that it is helping the exhibitor in every possible way, is giving Exchangeman W. J. Hagerty, of the Philadelphia branch, full sway in a series of articles intended to show the way to more profits—and attendant co-operation.

In the second of his talks to exhibitors Mr. Hagerty offers several ideas and helps that will no doubt be welcomed by the exhibitor who is open to larger profits and a business conducted along better lines. One of the strong points in the Hagerty article is a warning to avoid inflated methods in advertising—a point which has been neglected in some cases and ignored in others.

Too Much Competition

To Motion Picture News Mr. Hagerty said: "In the wild scramble of the average exhibitor to secure pictures that will overwhelm his competitor and give him the bulk of the business, an element has crept into the exhibiting end of motion pictures that is growing every day, and causing a serious loss of business. This is the element of disinterestedness on the part of the average patrons. They have grown tired of the inflated methods of advertising, the overworked superlatives in describing productions. They have grown tired of going to see a picture that has been highly praised and has been found wanting. The consequence is that in the struggle for business, exhibitors have become frantic in their efforts to outdo each other in attracting people to their theatres.

"Almost invariably, the exhibitor blames his lack of healthy business to the fact that he has a competitor down the street who is taking many of his patrons away from him, and he condemns him to eternal torment because he refuses to retire from business. The average exhibitor never approaches his sales problem with the proper spirit. He is so busy thinking up reasons why people won't come to his theatre that he never has time to convince them why they should come. Almost every exhibitor who has had to face the problem of getting more business and has tried to overcome the condition has failed, simply because he has not analyzed his sales possibilities."

From a New Angle

To theatre men, Mr. Hagerty said: "Mr. Exhibitor, do you realize that your real competitor is the American home? It is not the other picture house in your neighborhood, or the war, or any other element that has prevented you from playing to capacity every night. There is enough business in your particular neighborhood for all the theatres, providing you get the people to come. The people will never come to the theatre just because you own it. They must have a real reason. They have become fastidious in their taste for entertainment; they demand a good show, a clean, comfortable and attractive theatre and your advertising must convince them that your theatre can satisfy the demand.

"Once you have attracted them, you must make good every claim that your advertising has put forth. The home is a very attractive place in the evening, and when you expect people to come out every night you must furnish something worth while for their consideration. When a man gets his pipe or cigar and newspaper and gets into a big chair, or when a woman settles down to read her favorite magazine or takes up her knitting, it takes a pretty strong attraction to bring them out of the house. Pictures, no matter how good, will not do it night after night.

Jack Curtis, a Pillar in Triangle Productions

"The theatre must be at least as comfortable as the home; the manager and employes must be as pleasant as the home companions; the general atmosphere of the theatre must resemble the atmosphere of the home as closely as possible. If you have these things, you go a long way toward solving the problem of bigger and better business. Never forget this one big fact. It is the people who remain at home that prevent you from having a full house. It is not the people who go to your competitor. More people remain home every evening than you will find in both theatres together.

Friendly Competition Urged

"Competition of a friendly kind will help your business rather than harm it. It is the life of trade. The combined efforts of you and your brother exhibitor competing in a friendly way will serve to arouse the interest of your patrons. You and your brother exhibitor have a common enemy—the home. Its influence and effect are very subtle. Its patrons are the ones worth while, and the ones that you want for your theatre. If you and your brother exhibitor co-operate properly in your interest-creating methods, you are bound to make new patrons for your theatre every day.

"Competition made the automobile business; it caused manufacturers to build up the most efficient selling organizations the world has ever known. Clever and attractive advertising was used to create business. They never thought of how many automobiles had been sold; they thought of the great number of people who did not own one and who should own one. The sales plans of a big automobile company is a very good one for every exhibitor to follow.

"Think of the vast number of people whom you would like to have for your patrons. Then go out and get them. There is no better method of doing this than holding a council of war with your brother exhibitor down the street. Get your heads together, run your own theatre, but plan all of your activities to co-operate against the common enemy—the home. It will take a long, hard fight to overcome this condition, but you have right on your side because you know that the patrons of every home, no matter how attractive it may be, will be the better for viewing good motion pictures. Plan your advertising to bring the people out of the home."

Billie Rhodes, Parsons' Leading Woman

As leading woman with William H. Parsons, the film producer-comedian, who is to star in Goldwyn's Capitol Comedies, will be seen Billie Rhodes, who for some time has been a star in her own right. Tom Brett, author of the subtitles for Metro-Drew comedies, will write the subtitles for Capitol Comedies, twenty-six of which will be released annually by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Edith Ellis Resigns from Goldwyn

It was announced this week by Goldwyn Pictures that Edith Ellis, in order to fulfill contracts for the writing of two plays for the dramatic stage next season, has resigned her position as head of the Literary Department of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

It is understood that Miss Ellis will shortly undertake a campaign for a national producing theatre, a project which she has been working on for some time.

Balshofer and Gibson Now in Southland

With the arrival of Fred J. Balshofer and Wiley J. Gibson, respectively president and business manager of the Yorke-Metro Company, the full roster of the organization producing the Harold Lockwood photoplays is now at Jacksonville, Fla.

Famous-Lasky Companies Busy

West Coast Studios Enter Upon Period of Unusual Activity—Emerson-Loos Pictures for Fred Stone

IN spite of the fact that the present time is said to be one of a general slowing up of production on account of unusual war conditions, the West Coast studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have entered upon a season of unusual activity. In a statement issued by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the company, the fact is set forth that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is experiencing no difficulties in securing shipments of supplies from the East, a matter which has been given as the reason for the slowing up of production of several organizations making pictures in Los Angeles.

Six feature productions are under way this week at the Hollywood studios, and at the Morosco studios two additional companies have started work on new pictures. At the Hollywood studios the companies engaged in active production are those of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, C. B. De Mille's special production and new pictures under the direction of George Melford, Donald Crisp and James Young. Working under the direction of Melford are the popular stars, Louise Huff and Jack Pickford, the latter of whom has just arrived from New York. Sessue Hayakawa begins a new production under the direction of James Young, while Wallace Reid is being starred in a picture which was started in New York and is being finished here under the direction of Donald Crisp. At the Morosco studios Vivian Martin undertakes a new picture directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

According to Mr. Lasky, who recently arrived in California, this activity at the Western studios is only a start. Within a short time Elsie Ferguson, Billie Burke and Lina Cavalieri will be in Los Angeles ready for a season of picture-making under the Famous Players-Lasky management. Later in the Spring, when he has finished his stage engagement, Fred Stone is scheduled to work in Hollywood in stories which are now being prepared by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Tearle in Clara Kimball Young Subject

PRODUCTION started this week on "The Reason Why," which Clara Kimball Young with her own company is planning as her next Select Picture.

While the casting has not as yet been completed, principals have been chosen, and Conway Tearle as Lord Tancred will play opposite the star in the role of Zara. Tearle, it will be remembered, was Miss Young's leading man in "The Common Law," and his support was one of the features of a notable production. Other members of the company will be Kate Lestor as the Duchess of Glastonbury and Little Eldean Stewart as Mimo. Robert G. Vignola and his assistant, William J. Scully, will handle the direction of the piece, and Lewis J. Physioc has been retained as cameraman.

"The Reason Why" is a story of European social life from the pen of Elinor Glyn. It deals with the love affairs of Lord Tancred and the beautiful Zara, whom he has married. Misunderstandings and seemingly insurmountable difficulties obstruct the way of true love and multiply the complications. The tale is romantic and intensely absorbing, and Miss Young as Zara, is provided with an emotional role of great sympathy.

With the usual disregard for expense, the star is ordering lavish settings.

The new play will be the fifth of Miss Young's Select Star Series and will take rank in every regard with her previous successes, "Magda," "Shirley Kaye," "The Marionettes" and "The House of Glass."

Thomas Bret Writes Titles for Parsons

Thomas Bret, who was responsible for the titles in many of the Drew comedies, has been engaged by Harry L. Reichenbach, for the National Film Corporation, to act as scenario editor and title writer for the Capitol comedies, in which William Parsons is to appear and which are to be released through Goldwyn.

"Billy's Baby" and "Billy's Predicament" are now under way. Lois Zellner, Walter Shrock, Tom Bret and several other comedy writers have already been placed under agreement to submit a number of stories to Parsons.

Lockwood Begins Work on "The Landloper"

Harold Lockwood and his company of Yorke-Metro players have begun the production of "The Landloper" at Jacksonville, Fla., under the direction of George Irving.

The production is being made in five reels and will be released as a Metro All Star Series Production. Appearing in support of the star are Pauline Curley, who was Mr. Lockwood's leading woman in "The Square Deceiver," William Clifford, Bert Starkey and Stanton Heck.

San Fernando Scenes in Blue Ribbon

San Fernando Mission, one of the most visited spots in Southern California, will be filmed in several scenes in "An American Live Wire," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon Feature in which Earle Williams, with Grace Darmond, will be starred. Not only does the Mission provide an artistic and beautiful setting, but to snowbound Easterners who read the railroad guides to California, it will recall all the charm and romance of the spot.

Thomas Mills has been most happy in his selections of locations for this picture, which is adapted from the O. Henry story, "The Lotus and the Bottle," and predicts one of the most finished features in this respect, he ever turned out.

Export House Adds Film Department

The export firm of Rojas, Randall & Co., Inc., which has been doing business in the United States for many years, has added a film department to its other lines and has appointed Jose M. de Aragon as organizer and manager of the new department.

In its announcement to the motion picture trade the company states as follows: "Mr. Rojas has cut to the root the old and peculiar evils hitherto connected with the motion picture business, so that it may prove fruitful for his house, beneficial to the foreign buyers and fair to the producers."

Beach Supervises Cutting of Picture

Rex Beach is directing the titling and assembling of his newest motion picture, "Heart of the Sunset," now in process of editing in the Rex Beach Pictures Company's laboratories in New York. Pursuing the practice he established for "The Auction Block," the author will personally write the subtitles for the new production, which is to be distributed by Goldwyn as a Rex Beach special.

Loew Circuit to Show New Howell Comedy

Marcus Loew has signed a contract with the Universal Film Exchange of New York, whereby "Oh, Baby!" the newest Alice Howell Century Comedy, will be shown over the entire Loew Circuit, covering a period of sixty-five days. "Oh, Baby!" is the sixth Century comedy featuring Miss Howell. In general theme it is a radical departure from its predecessors.

The comedy was directed by J. G. Blystone. In support of Miss Howell appear Eddie Barrie, Neal Burns, Russ Powell, Iva Novak and a "bevy of beauties" loaned by the L-KO Komedy Kompany. It is declared that because of the novel photographic effects contained in the production, eight weeks were consumed in filming it.

"Midnight Trail" Suits Russell

American-Mutual's Comedy-Drama Star Has Congenial Role As Rich Young Clubman in New Production

"THE MIDNIGHT TRAIL," announced by American-Mutual this week, is said to be one of the best of the William Russell pictures recently produced by the American Film Company. Mr. Russell in this, his latest comedy-drama production, is said by many critics to have outdone himself in his wholesome laugh-making.

"The Midnight Trail" was directed by Edward Sloman and is the story of a wealthy young clubman who is addicted to auto racing, polo playing and all the sports to which a rich young man may turn for amusement. The young millionaire, Jack Woodford, wants to be a detective, so one day, the opportunity being present, he impersonates the famous detective Irons, and with his valet as assistant ferrets out the thief in a robbery in the home of a rector who has a beautiful daughter and, despite the fact that the real Irons appears on the scene, marries the daughter.

Francelia Billington is Russell's leading woman, playing the role of the rector's beautiful daughter. Clarence Burton is Irons, the detective, and Sydney Deane is the rector. Carl Stockdale plays the part of an unscrupulous secretary, and Harvey Clark is Jasper Stride, the valet.

Other parts are taken by Jerome Sheler,

William Fox Plants Weather Fuel Edict

ALTHOUGH the fuel situation somewhat handicapped the work in the Fort Lee studios of William Fox, the two new studios in New York city somewhat relieved the situation in the East, while in the West the making of new photoplays continued without interruption.

In the Los Angeles studios Lynn Reynolds is directing Tom Mix in a new photoplay. The story is by Mix and the scenario by Reynolds. In this production, Victoria Forde comes back as leading lady for Tom Mix. Miss Forde played in many of the Mix comedies. Others in the cast are Frank Clark and Barney Furey.

Edward Le Saint has finished photographing a new picture in which Gladys Brockwell is starred. The story is by Charles Kenyon. In the cast are Lucille Young, William Scott, Bertram Grassby, T. D. Crittenden, Henry De Montford and Andrew Robson.

William Farnum and his company of players, having returned from exteriors at Port Henry in the Adirondacks, are at the Biograph studios in New York, finishing work on a William Farnum de luxe production, "Rough and Ready." At the Biograph studios also, R. A. Walsh is at work on "Woman and the Law," the story of which is based on a recent murder, and the Lees, Jane and Katherine, are busy on a new picture to follow "American Buds." At the Victor studio Virginia Pearson is finishing "A Daughter of France," and Harry Millarde is directing June Caprice in a picture which will be one of the April releases.

In Los Angeles also J. Gordon Edwards has begun photographing a new Theda Bara super production. The story has been adapted by Adrian Johnson. The announcement is made from the Fox offices that in this new production Miss Bara does better work than she did in "Cleopatra." Big things are expected of this production.

C. M. Franklin is directing another story in which Jewel Carmen is the star. At the Fort Lee, N. J. studios, Peggy Hyland has finished her first picture for William Fox.

Leading Man Chosen for Peggy Hyland

Irving Cummings has returned to the William Fox forces as leading man for Peggy Hyland, the new William Fox star. Mr. Cummings played opposite Virginia Pearson in "Sister Against Sister," "Royal Romance" and "Wrath of Love." Miss Hyland's first picture for William Fox has been titled "The Debt of Honor."

World Film Saves Light

It was announced this week that a new working schedule will go into effect at the studio of World-Pictures on March 1. This provides for the beginning of work each day at the studio one hour earlier than is now the case. The studio will begin activities at 8 o'clock each morning thereafter, the change being made to save daylight.

The first picture to be completed under the new schedule will be "The Way Out."

May Allison Subject Is Chosen

Metro Will Present Her in "Social Hypocrites," from Legitimate Drama—Capellani to Direct Well Selected Cast

"SOCIAL HYPOCRITES," Metro Pictures Corporation this week announced, has been chosen as May Allison's initial subject as an individual star in Metro pictures. The picture is from the stage play, "Bridge," in which Effie Shannon and Herbert Kelcey appeared. Formerly Miss Allison has been presented by Metro with Harold Lockwood, and this will be her first starring venture.

"Social Hypocrites" will be directed by Albert Capellani, who recently made his bow as a Metro director with "Daybreak," starring Emily Stevens. Mr. Capellani is preparing the screen adaptation himself, in collaboration with June Mathis, and work on the new production will be begun at the Metro studio at once, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Kargor. Leander de Cordova will assist Mr. Capellani.

A real "Capellani cast" has been chosen to support Miss Allison in "Social Hypocrites." Among these are Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Marie Wainwright, Stella Hammerstein, Frank Currier and Stephen Gratton, to mention only a few of the more important.

"Social Hypocrites" affords excellent opportunity, Metro declares, for the display of Miss Allison's talents and winsome personality. The star has the role of Leonore Fielding, an English girl who is somewhat carelessly brought up by her father, a Colonel of the Coldstream Guards. The fact that he has been accused of being a card cheat is responsible for many of the surprising incidents that mark Leonore's life.

A portion of the story harks back to that part of the Victorian era when the quaintest, most interesting costumes worn in the world's history were in vogue.

Alice Brady "In Person" at Many Houses

ALICE Brady has been giving a shining example of "How to live on twenty-four hours a day," according to Select Pictures, since she consented to oblige Loew theatre patrons by appearing in person at theatres where her pictures are being shown.

Miss Brady began her whirl around the circle by appearing at the Loew house in Providence, February 11. There Mayor Gainor received the actress upon her appearance at the Emery theatre, where Miss Brady obliged with a monologue, followed by a song revue.

Returning to New York, Miss Brady spent a busy day at the studio on Tuesday and also on Wednesday, and on Wednesday night appeared at the Loew theatre in New Rochelle, where "Woman and Wife," the second of her Select Pictures, was being presented. Here practically the same program was followed out—and with the same result. Friday found the star at the Loew theatre in Newark, "Woman and Wife" again being the picture on the bill.

This, by no means, completed Miss Brady's "personal appearances." On the night of February 18 she started again, with everything fixed in New York for the right-of-way, and appeared at six Loew houses that evening, beginning at eight o'clock and ending at ten. At each place she was received cordially, and obliged with a "monologue and song."

On February 20 Miss Brady was scheduled to "cover" six more houses, beginning with the Orpheum and closing with the Boulevard. Thursday night, February 21, is also on the program, with some long jumps included to make the "appearances" more exciting. Only four theatres were to be "made" on Thursday, with Friday bringing four appearances in Brooklyn. Saturday, February 23, is slated for three personal appearances of the Select star.

Extra Prints for General Film Serial

Reports received from branch managers by General Film Company indicate that "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the spy exposure serial, starring Jane Vance, has gone "over the top." Important bookings have been reported from many territories and General Film states that the demand from some districts has been so great that it has been necessary to order extra prints to supply the trade.

Alice Howell Overcame Obstacles

Some people are born lucky. Others are bumped right into their fortunes, while a third class struggle along unrecognized until one day Old Man Good Luck suddenly stops in front of them and says, "Howdy, Stranger!"

Alice Howell, who is featured in Century Comedies, belongs to the latter class. "Struggle" but mildly describes this comedienne's existence prior to the time that Old Man Good Luck, cleverly camouflaged in the persons of Abe and Julius Stern, found her out and caused her to be featured in her own brand of comedies.

A modest sort of person, Miss Howell was recently requested to fill out a "History Blank" which would enable the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which distributes the Century Comedies, to give publicity to the various players appearing in its releases. In supplying the film organization with this information some of the performers almost wrote whole books about themselves. Here, however, is all the Century comedienne had to say:

"I've been in the show business about eleven years, and there isn't really much for me to tell. I came to California because the health of one of the members of my family demanded it. Pictures claimed me because I had to earn a living. I've tried my best to make good."

Bushman Host to Fellow Players

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, together with a large company of players, have returned to the Metro studio in New York, following the staging of a number of scenes for "The Brass Check" in and near the city of Baltimore. While in Maryland the company ran into a big snowstorm and some striking snow scenes were taken.

Mr. Bushman's own country estate, Bushmanor, was used as the setting of a number of rural scenes and there the Metro star proved himself a true Southern host, entertaining the players at luncheon each day.

Clymer Joins Yorke-Metro Scenario Staff

John B. Clymer, well-known author for the screen, has been engaged by the Yorke-Metro Company as scenario writer and has left New York to join his new associates in Jacksonville, Fla., where Harold Lockwood, Yorke-Metro star, is engaged in the production of Metro's screen version of Holman Day's novel, "The Landloper."

Mr. Clymer's co-worker is Richard V. Spencer, who has written the continuity of practically all of the Yorke-Metro productions to date.

Barclay Begins New One

Don Barclay, comedian, has begun work on a second Essanay one-reel comedy, title not yet announced.

His first comedy, "Check Your Hat, Sir?" was released on February 16.

Mae Marsh's Fifth Goldwyn Completed

"The Beloved Traitor," Mae Marsh's fifth Goldwyn production, was recently completed at the Fort Lee studios, following the taking of a number of scenes at Sebasco, Me., and Marblehead, Mass. The play is from the novel of the same name by Frank L. Packard.

Supporting Miss Marsh as leading man is E. K. Lincoln, who was one of the featured players in the Goldwyn spectacle, "For the Freedom of the World." In "The Beloved Traitor" he has the role of Judd Minot.

George Fawcett is another featured player, appearing as Henry Bliss, a wealthy patron of art. Hedda Hopper, wife of De Wolf Hopper, who assisted Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," has the role of Myrna Bliss. Mrs. Hopper, before her entry into the cinema world, played prominent parts in a number of Broadway stage productions.

Others in the cast are Bradley Barker, as Paul Drayton, a politician; J. A. Furey, as Father Anthony; Louis R. Grisel and Chester Morris.

Select Opens New Branch in New Orleans

In order better to take care of its augmented business in that territory, Select Pictures Corporation has just opened an entirely new exchange in New Orleans. This makes the total number of Select branches throughout the United States proper twenty-one.

The New Orleans branch has been placed under the management of John S. Taylor, who was formerly associated with Branch Manager C. C. Ezell in Select's Dallas exchange. The new Select branch will take care of the states of Mississippi and Louisiana, which heretofore had been respectively served from the Atlanta branch, under Manager Walter J. Price, and the Dallas branch, under Mr. Ezell.

Petrova Promises New Effect

"The Life Mask," the third special production listed for release on Madame Olga Petrova's starring calendar, for a showing in March, is marked by the introduction of an absolutely new photographic effect. This is done, it is said, without the use of subtitles in the parts of the film where the effect is shown. The idea includes throwing the scene out of focus with the exception of the star, who occupies the center.

Correcting an Error

Through an error in captioning a cut of George B. Seitz, L. J. Gasnier and Bertram Milhauser, of Pathe, which appeared in Motion Picture News of February 23, it was stated Mr. Gasnier is president of Pathe. Mr. Gasnier is president of the Astra Film Corporation, which releases through Pathe.

Vitagraph Chooses Name for State Film

OFFICIAL announcement was made by President Smith of Vitagraph, this week, to the effect that the title of the patriotic American picture which the company is making in conjunction with the State Defense Council of New York, will be "New York, or Danger Within."

Corinne Griffith is to be the star of the picture, with Webster Campbell and Marc MacDermott also featured with her. Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York, also appears in the picture, which is designed to show the nation how New York has protected itself against the intrigues of Teutonic foes within our borders.

The military and civil officers of the New York State government have worked in close co-operation with President Smith and John Robertson, director of the picture, in order to insure accuracy in the presentation of the most elaborate defensive and protective machinery maintained by any state—that is, any organization other than the Federal Government itself.

Work was started on "New York, or Danger Within" just after the first of the year and a large part of the time has been spent in the so-called "vital spots" of the big state—i.e., New York harbor, Erie Canal, Ashokan Dam, the big buildings of New York City itself—all guarded by armed troops. The new National Guard, the regular army, the state military police, the secret service and all of the other protective agencies which enter into New York's defense are to be shown in the picture, it is promised.

"Resurrection" Stars Pauline Frederick

AT the Fifty-sixth street studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Pauline Frederick is again monopolizing most of the floor space with the big settings of "The Resurrection," a Paramount picture, adapted to the screen by Charles E. Whittaker from the story by Count Leo Tolstoi. Last week the company went to Mineola, L. I., where the golf links had been converted into Siberian scenes, and the drop in the mercury simplified the work of Director Edward Jose in registering the pain and discomfort resulting from the cold.

At the Fort Lee, N. J., studio, Director Maurice Tourneur is rushing "Prunella," another Paramount picture, to completion, and Marguerite Clark, the star, is putting in some long hours in order to finish the production this week and make up for some of the time lost on account of fuelless days. It has fallen to Tourneur's lot for some time past to handle big productions, and following the massive Maeterlinck picture, "The Blue Bird," the settings in "Prunella" are occupying the entire studio. Owing to the peculiar nature of the story the exteriors are being taken inside, and everything has been specially constructed.

The property department and carpenter shop are busily engaged in getting together the settings for the new Elsie Ferguson picture, which will occupy the studio next week. Miss Ferguson has finished "The Lie," for Artcraft release, at the Fifty-fourth Street studio under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. The story was adapted by Charles Maigne from the play by Henry Arthur Jones, and Miss Ferguson plays the stellar role of Elinor Shale.

Ann Pennington is taking a few days' rest following the completion of "Sunshine Nan," for Paramount release.

Pathe Reviews Its Exchanges

Speaks of Many Men Who Have Been with the Company for Years in Face of Constantly Changing Conditions

"THERE is so much talk about shifting sands in the motion picture industry," said an official of Pathe this week, "that it is interesting to note a number of men in responsible positions in the Pathe sales force that have been with the company for what is a long time in this or most any other business, and also the number that have been promoted from the ranks to fill the bigger positions.

"For instance, W. S. Wessling, manager of the Cincinnati office, has been with Pathe ever since the days of Electric. He was manager of the Portland (Ore.) subbranch, then manager of the same office when it became a full-fledged branch, and was then transferred to Cincinnati.

"H. M. Osborn of Philadelphia, has been with Pathe about three years. Was manager at Washington and later advanced to Philadelphia manager.

"R. Junet of New Orleans, has been with this company about three years. Was salesman at Chicago and later advanced to present position.

"D. F. O'Donnell of Washington, has been with the company about three years. Was salesman in New York and then advanced to present position. C. S. Edwards, Jr., Kansas City, has been with Pathe almost four years. G. E. Epperson, Denver, has been with Pathe more than three years. Was booker in Salt Lake and later in Denver, and is now manager.

"C. E. Holah of Omaha, has been with Pathe a year on his second engagement, since he was formerly connected with the Pathe organization for a considerable time. I. P. Arnold of Salt Lake City, was manager of that branch when it was only a sub-office and was made manager when it became a full-fledged exchange. Has been with Pathe about three years. M. J. Frisch of Oklahoma City, was booker at Des Moines for about two years, and has just been appointed manager of the new branch.

"L. A. Sheridan of Des Moines, has been manager ever since that branch was opened. Was formerly a salesman at Kansas City. A. Reinlieb of Newark, has been manager of that branch ever since it was opened, which is more than two years ago, and was formerly a salesman at New York. N. J. Filkins of Buffalo, has been with Pathe more than three years. Was formerly salesman in that office and advanced to manager.

"W. A. Aschmann of Milwaukee, has been with Pathe for about three years. Was formerly salesman out of Chicago office and later out of Milwaukee, and after that appointed manager. P. L. Carroll of Spokane, has been in that city ever since Pathe has been doing business there. He was manager of the subbranch. W. W. Kofeldt of Minneapolis, has been in the employ of this company for more than three years and has been advanced from the position of cashier."

Goldwyn in Australasian Field

Gains Entry to Antipodes, Through Deal Recently Closed by Harold Bolster with J. C. Williamson Films, Limited

HAROLD BOLSTER, of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has recently returned from the Antipodes where he closed an important contract for all Goldwyn productions in Australia with J. C. Williamson Films, which is the cinema branch of J. C. Williamson, Ltd., one of the leading amusement promotion concerns of that continent.

This contract was effected on behalf of Goldwyn by Mr. Bolster with F. W. Thring, managing director of J. C. Williamson Films, and means that Goldwyn productions at once gain entry into the Paramount, Star and Victoria theatres in Melbourne, and the Theatre Royal in Sydney. The Williamson cinema interests in Australia have handled "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" and the signing of their contract with Goldwyn marks the entrance of that organization into the active distribution field. Their contract covers all of the Commonwealth of Australia, which is the entire continent, and Tasmania as well.

Mr. Bolster on this same trip closed a contract of equal importance for its territory for the distribution of all Goldwyn productions in New Zealand with the New Zealand Picture Supplies, Ltd., through Mr. Harry Hayward, chairman of the board of directors of that organization. This contract is inclusive, besides New Zealand, of the Samoan Islands, Fiji Islands and the Island of Tahiti.

Mr. Bolster reports that theatrical and other amusement enterprises in Australia and New Zealand faced their war crises with a solid front and have emerged safely, public patronage and attendance being virtually fully restored. "The American people will find," he says, "just as the Australians did, that the theatre is the one diversion and amusement which they will not consent to renounce. In Australia the public came back in even larger numbers than ever before and business and the general feeling of the various cities were stimulated instantly. This change in the tide is already much in evidence in the United States, where altered weather conditions are also hastening improvement throughout the colder Northern states."

Wheeler Oakman Enlists

Wheeler Oakman, leading man for the Metro star, Edith Storey, has canceled a long-time contract with B. A. Rolfe, Metro's Western representative, to enlist as a private of artillery.

Jane Lee, Youthful William Fox Comedienne

Jane and Katherine Lee Busy

That work is well under way on the newest vehicle for Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox stars, is the report from the Fox Corporation. The cast selected some time ago is now engaged in making the early scenes. The size of the production and the number of photoplays that are being made at the regular Fox studios necessitated the employment of many extra studio workers and the renting of the Biograph studio in the Bronx.

New Faces in Triangle Casts

Among the new faces at Triangle's Culver City studios are Zenaida Williams, who has an important role in "The Servant in the House"; Harvey Clark, character actor, who will appear in the same picture; Mary Mersch, leading woman in "The Veil"; five-year-old Frankie Lee, who is working with Director Cliff Smith in "Boss of the Lazy Y," and Alice Knowland, character woman, supporting Pauline Starke in "Innocent's Progress."

Metro Player in Army Circus Event

"Texas" Cooper, who directed the cavalry scenes in Metro's "Lest We Forget," and who is well known in the realm of "outdoor" showdom, acted as official announcer of the home-grown circus staged week of February 11 at Camp Upton, L. I., by the 308th Infantry.

Bartlett Joins Triangle

Lanier Bartlett, scenario writer, and adapter of several photodramatic successes, has joined the staff at the Triangle Culver City studio. His first work since his return to the screen world was the adaptation of Charles Rann Kennedy's famous play, "The Servant in the House," a seven-reel feature that will be among the early Triangle productions.

Doris Kenyon Plans an Early Start

Doris Kenyon will start work shortly on the first picture to be produced by her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc. It will be a screen version of "The Street of Seven Stars," which Mrs. Rinehart characterizes as her most beautiful and most appealing story. It was originally published serially in The Saturday Evening Post, and afterwards attained a book sale of more than 250,000 copies. Mrs. Rinehart is taking a keen interest in the preparations for the screen presentation and is giving much valuable advice to Miss Kenyon as to her own conception of the charming heroine of her story.

In addition to acting ten hours a day before the camera Miss Kenyon recently has been posing for portraits to two artists, Haskell Coffin and Charles Chambers, besides holding conferences with Mrs. Rinehart, making occasional trips to cantonments to appear before the soldiers, and working for the Red Cross.

Blackton Adapts "Missing" to Screen

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is preparing to translate to the screen for Paramount what is said to be one of the most remarkable novels dealing with the great war's problems that has been written thus far. This book is "Missing," by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, and deals with woman's part in war in no uncertain terms, proving that the heroism of the weaker sex, which stays behind when the men go to the front, is no less pronounced than that displayed by the soldiers.

Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, in "Over the Top" for Vitagraph

First National Has Washington Branch

MOORE'S Theaters Corporation, Tom Moore, President and Director General, franchise holder in the First National Exhibiters' Circuit for the territory of Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia, announces the opening of a Washington branch exchange of the First National at 419 Ninth Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., under the management of Walter R. Liebmann, formerly Washington manager for Goldwyn. The new branch exchange is located on the first floor in one of the busiest down town blocks on "the Broadway of the Capital," and is being equipped with the most modern devices for the handling, protection and distribution of films.

Mr. Liebmann, who has been appointed branch manager, is a native of Deadwood, N. D., and has had a continuous experience of about fourteen years in the various branches of the theatrical business. In the position of stage director for Joe Weber he produced "The Climax," "Alma, Where Do You Live?" and other successes, and later, in the same position with Werba and Leuscher, he staged "The Rose Maid." After an extensive experience upon the articulate stage, Mr. Liebmann entered the picture field, serving as branch manager for Mutual, Boston manager for Triangle and subsequently Washington manager for Goldwyn.

Walter L. Liebman, First Nationals Washington Manager

The Washington branch exchange of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will have the distribution in the territory specified of all the Petrova Pictures, the Herbert Brenon's, the Edgar Lewis', the Chaplin's and numerous other products.

Larkin Winds Up Work on "Zongar" Film

GEORGE LARKIN, according to an announcement this week from Physical Culture Plays, Inc., completed his work in and on "Zongar" February 16, after several months of steady activity in behalf of the picture. "Zongar" was recently shown to the trade press.

For the last month Mr. Larkin and Mr. Macfadden have been working in the assembling room till they got "Zongar" down to solid "meat." There are five reels of the stunt picture now. By trimming unessential action and retaining all the thrills, they produced a truly hair-raising spectacle, Macfadden declares.

Grace Davison, Dolores Cassinelli and Jack Hopkins are in the supporting cast. The filming of the interior scenes occupied the late autumn months, following which the titling was done by a literary expert. It didn't seem possible then to condense the picture into less than seven reels, but Messrs. Macfadden and Larkin have achieved the seeming impossible and without sacrificing the love story have played up the thrills more sharply to accentuate suspense, surprise and climax. "Zongar" is an hour and a quarter show.

George Larkin is to make another picture for the Physical Culture Company, probably under next Summer's sunny skies, but in the meantime is said to be considering an offer from a program corporation to star in a serial.

Burr Assists in Paramount Distribution

CHARLES C. BURR, for the past year advertising manager of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, was appointed assistant general manager of the distributing department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week, according to an announcement issued by that company. Mr. Burr will, in the future, be closely associated with General Manager Al Lichtman in the execution of the latter's duties, which have materially increased during the past few months.

Mr. Burr became a member of the Paramount organization in the latter part of 1913 as exploitation manager of the South American Travel Series, which Paramount produced and distributed. He came from the New York Times, where he was doing general promotion work for the business management of that newspaper.

Previous to his association with the Times, Mr. Burr was connected with the McCall Company, publishers of the McCall Magazine and manufacturers and distributors of the McCall patterns.

When the Paramount and Artcraft national advertising campaign was inaugurated recently, Mr. Burr was associated with John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in conducting the extensive work of merchandising this tremendous campaign.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Pathe Announces New Program

Week of March 3 Brings Baby Marie Osborne Feature and First Episode of "The House of Hate," with Pearl White

THERE are two outstanding features, said an announcement this week from Pathe, on the Pathe program for the week of March 3—the latest Baby Marie Osborne Gold Rooster Play and the first episode of the new serial, "The House of Hate."

Baby Marie Osborne stars in "Daddy's Girl," produced in five parts by Diando. It is said to be a charming story of childhood with also a strong dramatic element which gives good action. Little Sambo, the colored boy, who has been in reecnt Baby Osborne pictures, has a prominent part in the cast. Herbert Standing is also in the cast, as is Marian Warner, who has played in many of these Baby pictures.

Indications point to "The House of Hate" as the biggest serial Pathe has ever released. "The Hooded Terror" in "The House of Hate" is declared to be a stronger mystery character than the Laughing Mask. Born of the lust for profit out of blood, he starts through the fifteen episodes seeking to kill the beautiful heroine.

Pearl White appears as Pearl Waldon and Antonio Moreno as Harvey Gresham, a young man of great wealth who is, however, so interested in science that he works in a private laboratory at America's greatest munition factory. It is thus that he falls in love with Pearl Waldon who shows her liking for him but does not realize that he is a man of her own station.

Doris Kenyon stars in the fifteenth episode of "The Hidden Hand," "The Girl of the Prophecy," with Mahlon Hamilton, Arline Pretty and Sheldon Lewis.

Harold Lloyd appears in "A Gasoline Wedding," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. Split-reel is made up of "Yellowstone Park—Its Geysers" and "Buxton (Derbyshire, England)." An International Cartoon and Educational split-reel release and Hearst-Pathe News No. 21 and No. 22 round up this program.

Mary Warren Is Featured by Triangle

Mary Warren, who has appeared with Ilive Thomas in several recent Triangle plays, makes her initial appearance as leading woman with William Desmond in "The Sea Panther," a romantic drama of the days of Captain Kidd. Miss Warren, who is remembered for her work as Ida Haines in "Betty Takes a Hand," and as Grace Antrim, in the new society drama, "Heiress for a Day," has done good work in her first prominent role, Triangle directors say.

"One Woman" Directed by Barker

It was reported from the West Coast this week that the Mastercraft production of "The One Woman," already under way, will be directed by Reginald Barker, of the Paralta staff. Mastercraft does not exploit stars in connection with any of its pictures, but concentrates on the story.

Raymond McKee Stars in "The Unbeliever"

Raymond McKee, the young Edison star, who has been seen in many light dramas, plays the big part of Philip Landicutt in the new Super-Feature, "The Unbeliever," which is released by Edison through the George Kleine System this month. In the beginning he is the idle young American, wealthy, care-free and unthinking. His bitter resentment at any form of oppression draws him into the great war and amid its perils and hardships he finds his own soul.

The picture was shown at the Rivoli, New York, the week of February 10.

Still Another Type for Olga Petrova

The publicity department of Petrova Picture Company, this week, declared that a decided innovation in the type of film story which Mme. Olga Petrova has appeared in during the past few months will mark the release of her third special starring subject, "The Life Mask," directed by Frank Crane. Adapted for the screen by Mrs. L. Case Russell, Madame Petrova's latest picture is said to be an engrossing mystery drama of much originality.

Taylor Holmes Completes Spoor Film

It was announced this week that Taylor Holmes is now on the last lap of his latest George K. Spoor feature, "A Pair of Sixes." All indications are that this picture will rank very high if not the highest among his previous vehicles.

The production is enacted by an all-star cast. Robert Conness, well known on both stage and screen, plays the role of Nettleton, Holmes' business partner.

Chicago Strong for Mary MacLane Picture

That George K. Spoor's picture, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," has a great popular appeal is indicated by the box-office reports so far received, according to an announcement from the George K. Spoor offices. Especially enthusiastic are the reports from the Chicago Band Box theatre where, it is asserted, the photoplay is showing to packed houses.

Baby Marie Osborne as "Daddy's Girl"

Baby Marie Osborne is announced by Pathe as the star of "Daddy's Girl," a Gold Rooster play, which will be released on March 3. This is the picture previously spoken of as "Any Home." The story by John W. Grey and M. Ramirez Torres is said to afford the Baby excellent opportunities to display her remarkable talent. Associated with her in the cast is little Sambo, the pickaninny, whose performance with his battered trombone in "The Little Patriot" will be recalled with pleasure.

Advance Offerings of the Programs

Carmel Myers in New Bluebird

Subject Is "The Girl in the Dark," Screen Version of Charles Edmond Walk's Novel, "The Green Seal"

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC., has scheduled for early release "The Girl in the Dark," a screen adaptation of Charles Edmond Walk's novel, "The Green Seal." This newest Bluebird is made the vehicle for Carmel Myers, who departs from the foreign type she has portrayed in several previous photoplays and appears in the role of an American girl, whose life is menaced by a band of Orientals.

According to the story, an atmosphere of mystery surrounds the life of Lois Fox, whom Brice Ferris, a young man of wealth, rescues from a band of Chinese thugs. When her rescuer takes the girl to his home, he finds a peculiar Chinese ideograph burnt into her shoulder. His Oriental servant also sees the mark and becomes strangely excited. Late that night Ferris hears a shriek coming from Lois' room. He enters, to find his servant dead on the floor. A seal identical in character to the mark on Lois' shoulder is clutched in the man's hand. Investigation proves that a tiny needle, covered with a deadly poison and contained in the seal, had killed the man. These are the early events around which the mystery story is said to be most interestingly woven.

The cast appearing in Miss Myers' support includes Betty Schade, Alfred Allen, Harry Carter, Frank Deshon, Ashton Dearholt and Frank Tokanaga. "The Girl in the Dark" will be released the week of March 4.

Vitagraph Names Releases for April

Vitagraph this week, through President Smith, announced the Blue Ribbon features for release in April as follows:

April 1, Gladys Leslie in "Little Miss No-Account," directed by William P. S. Earle; April 8, Alice Joyce in "The Business of Life," directed by Tom Terriss; April 15, Earle Williams, supported by Grace Darmond, in "The Man from Brodneys," directed by Terriss; April 22, Harry Morey, with Florence Deshon, in "A Bachelor's Children," directed by Paul Scardon; April 29, Nell Shipman, with Alfred Whitman, in "The Girl from Beyond," directed by William Wolbert.

Mary Garden's Second Goldwyn Feature Is "The Splendid Sinner"

George Beban Feature Released February 25

"One More American," the next Paramount production, featuring George Beban, has been set for release February 25. It is a screen adaptation of William C. De Mille's play, "The Land of the Free," and bares the pathetic side of political rottenness and graft which has for its victims the ignorant aliens, newly from Ellis Island, who are the potential good citizens of America. George Beban, the featured star of the play, is a typical Italian, who has come to this country, working hard and conducting his business in an honest manner, while he awaits eagerly the coming of his family from the homeland and his own naturalization as a real American citizen.

The adaptation of the story to the screen was made by Olga Printzlau and the production was staged under the direction of William C. De Mille, author of the original play.

"Revelation" Opens at Lyric Theatre

"Revelation," Nazimova's newest picture, opened for a run at the Lyric theatre, New York, February 17, under the auspices of Metro Pictures Corporation.

"Whispering Chorus" Ready

After several weeks of strenuous work, "The Whispering Chorus" has been completed, under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. In the cast are Raymond Hatton, Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Tully Marshall and others.

"The Wasp" Slated for March 11

Kitty Gordon's next World Picture, "The Wasp," to be released on the program March 11, is said to be entirely different from any of her previous pictures. Miss Gordon has the part of Grace Culver, better known as "The Wasp" because of her caustic tongue, the daughter of John Culver, who is owner of vast canneries working on government contracts. On his death-bed, Culver's partner sends his son, Kane Putnam, to the Culver home, but the friendship between Grace and Kane does not prosper.

Flagg "Girl" Comedy for February 27

"The Matinee Girl," the fourth of James Montgomery Flagg's one-reel comedy sketches, "Girls You Know," will be released February 27 and will run at the Strand theatre in New York.

American Releases Have Food Trailers

Getting promptly in line with the request of the National Food Administration the American Film Company has ordered food conservation trailers for all its releases for the next month.

March Big Month for Famous Players

Charles Ray New Picture Included, Along with Others Starring Billie Burke and Well-Known Stars—Considered Banner Program for Company

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION this week announced, in its March schedule of features, what it terms one of the very best arrays of attractions offered by this organization since its inception. Nine productions with recognized stars are included in the line-up, practically all of the subjects for March having been completed.

Among the stars included are Billie Burke, Charles Ray, Jack Pickford, Ann Pennington, Marguerite Clark, Dorothy Dalton, Pauline Frederick and Enid Bennett. A J. Stuart Blackton production will also be released in March, it is announced.

"Eve's Daughter" First

The initial releases for the third month of the year are subjects starring Billie Burke and Jack Pickford. Miss Burke's new vehicle is "Eve's Daughter," which appeared as a play on Broadway recently with Grace George as the star. The story by Alicia Ramsey, deals with a girl who has been strictly brought up and decides to have her fling with a meager fortune left by her father. James Kirkwood staged this production. In the cast are Thomas Meighan, Lionel Atwill, William Riley Hatch, Florence Flynn, Harriet Ross, Lucile Carney, Mary Navaro, and Henry Lee.

Jack Pickford appears in another Mark Twain story, "Huck and Tom," which takes up the adventures of "the immortal Tom" from his return to his home through the discovery of the grave robbers. William D. Taylor, who staged "Tom Sawyer," is also responsible for the direction of the new picture.

On March 11 two Paramount Pictures starring Charles Ray and Ann Pennington, will be released. Charles Ray's new vehicle is "The Family Skeleton." The story gives a humorous account of the struggle of a young millionaire against an imaginary inherited craving for drink, who is finally cured by a chorus girl sweetheart through a trumped up kidnapping episode. Victor L. Schertzinger staged the picture under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and Chester Lyons performed the camera work. Sylvia Bremer appears opposite Ray, the balance of the cast including Andrew Arbuckle, Billy Elmer, Otto Hoffman and Jack Dyer.

Ann Pennington in Slums

Ann Pennington's photoplay is "Sunshine Nan," adapted from "Calvary Alley," Alice Hegan Rice's book. In the part of Nance Molloy, Miss Pennington portrays the ambitious little slum girl who rises to become the wife of a successful inventor despite tremendous obstacles which are placed in her path. Adapted to the screen by Eve Unsell and staged under the direction of Charles Giblyn, this film was just finished recently in New York and is said to be Miss Pennington's very best screen effort. In the cast are Richard Barthelmess, John Hines, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Charles Eldridge and others.

March 18 marks the release of Marguerite Clark's newest picture, "Prunella"; J. Stuart Blackton's "Wild Youth," and

Thomas H. Ince, Who Produces for Paramount

Dorothy Dalton's new Thomas H. Ince production, "Love Me." Miss Clark's photoplay, "Prunella," is an adaptation from the play by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman, the scenario having been handled by Charles Maigne. In the cast are Jules Raucourt as "Pierrot," Harry Leoni, Isabel Berwin, Marcia Harris, Nora Cecil, William J. Gross, A. Voorhes Wood, Charles Hartley and Arthur Kennedy.

Artistry Rates High

J. Stuart Blackton's offering, "Wild Youth," is heralded as one of the most artistic achievements of this producer. Taken from the story by Sir Gilbert Parker, the scenario was prepared by Mr. Blackton in collaboration with Sir Parker and Beulah Marie Dix. This is the third Blackton-Paramount release, the other two also being adaptations from the works of Sir Gilbert Parker. The story of the age-old call of youth to youth is said to be beautifully portrayed in the new Blackton subject and practically an all-star cast is presented, including Louise Huff, Theodore Roberts, Jack Mulhall, James Cruze and Adele Farrington. Staged by George H. Melford, under the personal supervision of Mr. Blackton, this film is said to be the latter's best Paramount release.

Dorothy Dalton's new vehicle, "Love Me," is an original story by the Ince writer, C. Gardner Sullivan. A society drama, this production tells of a breezy Western girl who marries into an exclusive wealthy family, where she is not "accepted" until she has made a tremendous sacrifice of herself for her husband's sister. Clever Jack Holt, who played with Mary Pickford in "The Little American," appears in the role of the husband. William Conklin is the "heavy" as usual, the balance of the cast including Robert McKim, Dorcas Mathews, Melbourne MacDowell and Elinor Hancock. Roy William Neill staged "Love Me" under Thomas H. Ince's personal supervision and John Stumar is responsible for the photography.

Last—But Not Least

March 25 presents the last two Paramount pictures for the month with Pauline Frederick in "La Tosca" and Enid Bennett in "Naughty, Naughty!" Miss Frederick's "La Tosca" is taken, with as little change as possible, from the opera of the same name. Staged under the direction of Edward Jose, this production is said to be one of Miss Frederick's most pretentious vehicles, the sets are copied exactly from Roman buildings, including the castle of St. Angelo, the interior of the Church of Saint Andrea, etc. The costumes follow those used on the operatic stage. A coincidence in connection with the filming of this production is attached to the fact that Edward Jose, the director, also directed Sarah Bernhardt, who appeared in Sardou's "La Tosca," over thirty years ago. In the chief parts supporting the star are Frank Losee, Jules Raucourt, Henry Herbert and W. H. Forestelle.

"Naughty, Naughty!" Enid Bennett's new Thomas H. Ince production, is another story by C. Gardner Sullivan. The photoplay tells of the struggles of an up-to-date young girl, who has visited New York, in rejuvenating the old fashioned, narrow-minded mid-western town where she lives. Staged by Jerome Storm, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, this subject, it is expected, will even outshine Miss Bennett's initial Paramount picture, "Keys of the Righteous." In the supporting cast are Earl Rodney, Marjorie Bennett (the star's sister), Gloria Hope and Andrew Arbuckle. Charles Stumar is the photographer.

Cardinal Mercier in World Feature

As an opening feature for the post-Lenten season World Pictures will release on April 1 "The Cross Bearer," with Montagu Love. The locale is Belgium and the play deals with Cardinal Mercier's tremendous struggle for humanity in that war-stricken land.

Triangle Offers 7-Reel Special

"A Soul in Trust" Is Drama of Washington's Political and Social Life—"Little Red Decides" Is Also Released

THE expansion of the Government's naval policy following the outbreak of the present war, with the resultant efforts of certain unscrupulous business men to obtain advance information on locations of naval bases, furnishes the underlying theme for "A Soul in Trust," Triangle's seven-reel feature, released February 24. In the plot Wall Street schemers use a clever woman to obtain the desired information from an incorruptible Senator on the Naval Affairs Committee.

The story, which is by Catherine Carr, relates how Nan, a mountain girl, betrayed by Dabney Carter, a wealthy Virginian, sells her child to Mrs. Carter when Carter dies. Mrs. Carter (Belle Bennett) treats the infant as "a soul given into her care to mould." She brings the boy up to an appreciation of all that is honorable, noble and worthy. In after years Nan, who has developed into an adventuress, uses him as a stool in a criminal conspiracy against the man he most respects. A mother's love is awakened and, in the climax which follows, Nan renounces her schemes when she discovers that her victim is her own flesh and blood.

Belle Bennett, last seen in "Because of a Woman," first Triangle seven-reel production, enacts the role of Mrs. Carter, and J. Barney Sherry appears as Senator Franklin. The pleasure-loving aristocrat, Dabney Carter, is portrayed by Darrell Foss. Lillian West is Nan Barker. Grover Franke, as Dabney Carter, Jr., has his first important role as a Triangle player. The supporting body also includes Lee Hill, Lizzie Davis and William Dyer. Gilbert P. Hamilton is credited with the direction of "A Soul in Trust."

"Little Red Decides," adapted from William V. McCoy's American Magazine story of the same name, is the second feature on the Triangle February 24 program. In this story "Little Red," a waif of the range, is saved from a professionally prescribed mother, and finds a substitute and equivalent for maternal love in the affection of Duck Sing, a Chinese cook. Many Americans believe that the Chinaman is a most dangerous enemy to white society, and various plays have been based on the racial differences of the East and West. "Little Red Decides" offers a reversal of this theme, emphasizing the fidelity and trustworthiness of some Chinese characters, this one in particular.

Little Barbara Connolly, three and a half years old, appears as "Little Red," while the role of Goro Kino is played by the Oriental actor, Goro Kino. The cast includes, among others, Frederick Vroom, Jack Curtis and Jean Hersholt.

"The Telltale Shirt," with Fritz Schade, is the Keystone Comedy released for the week of February 24, and "A Coward's Courage" and "His Nimble Twist" are the week's one-reel Triangle Komedies.

"Some Professor" New Vic Moore Comedy

THE newest Klever Komedy presenting Victor Moore will be a Paramount release on February 25, entitled "Some Professor," written by Robert James and directed by Harry Jackson. The scenes of this picture are laid in a seminary, and a bevy of pretty girls take part in the rapid comedy action. The supporting cast includes D. L. Don, Emma Littlefield, Charlotte Gray and Harry Foy.

Moore appears as a professor of elocution at the Sweet Cookie Girls School, and soon becomes popular with all the girls, including Miss Thorn, the old maid principal. The professor is smitten with the charms of Miss Bright Eyes, and arouses the enmity of her sweetheart by monopolizing her attention. The jealous rival soaps the floor of the platform, and the professor and Miss Thorn do a "loop the loop." The school is thrown in an uproar and someone turns in a fire alarm and pandemonium reigns.

The professor makes a heroic rescue of Bright Eyes, ignoring the appeals of the frantic principal, and after the excitement is over she indignantly orders the professor to leave. Bright Eyes announces her intention of going with him, but she changes her mind when the professor's wife and family arrive on the scene. The professor, who has been eluding his belligerent spouse, makes his escape with the determined woman in pursuit.

Changes Made in Fox March Program

The Tom Mix production, "Six-Shooter Andy," originally set for release February 24, and later moved along to March 3, has been restored to its original place on the calendar of William Fox's releases. The March 3 release will be "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes," in which Jewel Carmen is the star.

A third change is the elimination from the present schedule of a George Wash comedy, titled "The Kid is Clever," and set tentatively for March 31 release.

There are no changes in the other March releases. "The Debt of Honor," Peggy Hyland's first picture for William Fox, will be available March 10, "Woman and the Law," an R. A. Walsh production having an all-star cast, March 17, and Virginia Pearson's war drama, "A Daughter of France," March 24.

Happy Life for Vic

Klever Pictures, Inc., released on February 11 a Klever Komedy called "Adam and Some Eves," with Victor Moore the only "mere man" in the picture. Peggy Adams and Agnes Neilson are among the girls in the comedy.

Universal Presents King Baggot in "I'll Fix It," a One-Reel Comedy

Universal Releases King Baggot Film

King Baggot returns to the Universal program in a one-reel comedy, entitled "I'll Fix It," which he both wrote and produced. The picture will be released under the Nestor brand on March 18.

Baggot has been seen in but few roles of a comedy nature. In the years he was a Universal star, this player appeared in about two hundred productions, the majority of which were strongly dramatic in theme.

As John Raymond, who lives at the Hotel Expensible, Baggot meets a charming young lady who seeks to smuggle her little dog into the hostelry, although this is against the rules of the house. Raymond accomplishes this by dropping the animal into a valise owned by a woman, who with her very jealous husband, seeks accommodations. Complications occur when Raymond endeavors to recover the dog, after the valise is taken to the new arrivals' room. The husband promptly conceives the idea that he has just reason to be suspicious of the stranger and endeavors to make things hot for the intruder.

In the cast supporting King Baggot are Paul Porcasi, Virginia Dare and Alice Mann.

Lydia Yeamans in Triangle Drama

Lydia Yeamans appears in the new Triangle play of the New York underworld, "The Shoes that Danced." In her earlier days Lydia Yeamans was a singer, and later was with Sol Smith Russell's comedians. As a buxom old Irish woman of the East Side, in "The Shoes that Danced," she is said to be a counterpart of her mother, Annie Yeamans.

Three New Ince Productions Ready

Three new Thomas H. Ince productions are now ready for Paramount release, it was announced last week. The subjects which have been finished within the past few days are new subjects for Charles Ray, Enid Bennett and Dorothy Dalton.

The final touches upon Charles Ray's new picture, "His Own Home Town," have just been completed and this production will shortly be scheduled for Paramount release. "His Own Home Town" will be released after "The Family Skeleton," which is Ray's next offering under the Paramount trade-mark.

Enid Bennett's new photoplay just finished, "Naughty Naughty!" is her second offering to Paramount patrons, following "Keys of the Righteous." "Naughty Naughty!" was directed by Jerome Storm under the supervision of Mr. Ince.

"Tyrant Fear" is Dorothy Dalton's newest subject which has just been finished. The scenes for this are laid in the frozen northland and were directed by R. William Neill, under Mr. Ince's supervision.

Date Set for New Kellermann Spectacle

The so-called sub-sea photo-phantasy, "Queen of the Sea," featuring Annette Kellermann, has been definitely announced for release as a Standard Picture by William Fox for April 21.

"This production will undoubtedly create even greater comment than the first million-dollar picture ever made—'A Daughter of the Gods,' in which Miss Kellermann appeared and which broke all records in every theatre in which it was exhibited," declared William Fox.

"'Queen of the Seas' is filled with thrills, including one in which Miss Kellermann walks a wire eighty feet in the air and dives into the ocean from this height. But, it is in the under-sea stunts that Miss Kellermann excels. She gives a marvelous exhibition of swimming and diving and the photography is of the best."

Current Judge Brown Story of Boy Matchmaker

The difficulties encountered by a young boy in getting his dad safely married are pictured in "Marrying Off Dad," the current Judge Brown Story among General Film releases. A number of juvenile actors, drawn from real life, are said to make this picture one of the most attractive of the "Stories of Youth" yet produced.

"Sherman Was Right" is the title of the current Jaxon comedy being distributed by General Film.

Marie Dressler in Person

Marie Dressler, whose latest celluloid burlesque, "The Agonies of Agnes," was presented at the Strand, New York, for the first time, February 17, appeared in person on the stage after the presentation of her film at the first evening performance.

Enid Bennett, the Ince Star, and Sessue Hayakawa, Who Are In New Paramount Features

Bennett and Hayakawa in New Pictures

ENID BENNETT, the Thomas H. Ince star, and Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese player, were both scheduled to appear in new Paramount pictures February 18.

Miss Bennett's subject, "Keys of the Righteous," by C. Gardner Sullivan, marks her debut as a Paramount star, and much enthusiasm has been expressed by the producers over this film. It was scarcely a year ago that Miss Bennett signed a contract with Thomas H. Ince to appear under his direction, and when he in turn signed with Paramount and Artcraft, she, together with Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray, commenced work as a Paramount star.

In the cast af the Bennett picture are such players as Earl Rodney, who has recently been working at the Mack Sennett studios; George Nicholas and Joseph Swickard, two of the best loved "old men of the screen"; Lydia Knott, Gertrude Claire and Melbourne MacDowell.

Charles Stumar is responsible for the photography.

Sessue Hayakawa's new screen vehicle, "Hidden Pearls," is from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix, responsible for "The Call of the East," "The Ghost House," "The Hostage," etc. George H. Melford, who directed "The Cheat" and other screen plays, staged the Hayakawa film, and it is felt that this offering should even score a greater success than "The Cheat." The production was filmed in Hawaii several months ago, and tells of a young half-caste, hereditary high chief of a South Sea island, educated in the United States, who returns to his island realm and by fraud and violence secures from the natives their hidden treasure. In the cast supporting the star are Margaret Loomis, Florence Vidor, Theodore Roberts, James Cruze, Noah Beery, John Burton, Jack Holt and other players.

"THE LIGHT WITHIN," starring Madame Olga Petrova at the head of her own company under the direction of Larry Trimble, was presented for the first time on any screen at the Rialto theatre, New York, on Sunday, February 10, and continuing throughout the week. It will be remembered that Mr. Rothapfel presented to his patrons, via the Rialto screen, Madame Petrova's initial starring production, "Daughter of Destiny," made under the auspices of her personal organization, in the latter part of December.

In accordance with the importance of the subject and the prominence of the leading player, the presiding genius of the Rialto arranged for special musical embellishments and settings to accompany the production. "The Petrova Waltz," especially composed by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, leader of the Rialto symphony orchestra, formed the dominant theme of the musical program during the presentation and considerable space in the Rialto Revue was devoted to the discussion of the Petrova play and an interview with the star herself.

Following the showing of "The Light Within," at the Rialto, the picture is to be released to exhibitors throughout the country via the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, who are presenting Madame Petrova in a series of eight starring vehicles during the present year.

The public premiere of this production was preceded on Saturday afternoon by a private showing followed by a banquet at Murray's, given for the benefit of the motion picture trade press in the Pompeiian room. Many notables of the film world were present at the special showing.

Screen Magazine Plants Goal

Jack Cohn Proves He Is Out for Humor and Human Interest All the Time—Strives to Give Public Timeliness

JACK COHN of the Universal, in one of those many strenuous moments when he is trying to put salt on the tail of the elusive ideal, declared he was out for humor and human interest, first, last, and all the time. "Are we getting it?" he demanded, "Show me!"

Whereupon E. H. Culbertson, Jack's very able lieutenant on the Universal Screen Magazine, slammed down on the desk a sheaf of just-completed and soon-to-be-completed subjects designed for the Magazines, and proceeded to "show him."

That was the end of Jack's temper.

For, with entire truth, the Universal Screen Magazine succeeds admirably in presenting "humor and human interest." The two things that impress even the casual observer, are the timeliness and importance of the subjects covered and the witty and interesting titles that make even the highly technical subjects easily understood and entertaining.

As for example, recent topics of the Magazine are the "Coal Supply;" the proposed mammoth electrical generating plant at Niagara; the training given those objects of both partisan and non-partisan concern, the New York police; and the Popular Pig Clubs initiated by the federal government. A forthcoming topic of great interest will be the "Making of a Newspaper," from the manufacture of newsprint to the delivery of the printed sheet. This will appear as three short episodes in successive numbers of the Magazine.

Now, you can throw pictures on the screen about all these subjects, and leave your spectator not only as ignorant as he was before, but resentful of the fact that his evening's pleasure has been interrupted, by some half-told and stupidly told information. He is not there to think and puzzle. If he is to learn anything he must have it handed out easily and quickly, with a laugh thrown in. So the Magazine's editors do his thinking for him. They realize the limitations of his knowledge and supply in brief but clearly-worded titles, the links he needs to add the new knowledge to the old. And since everything under heaven, and we rather think especially in heaven, has its bright and amusing side, they lighten even the most serious subject with a smile.

Human, intelligent, and entertaining, the Universal Screen Magazine offers fresh proof that knowledge need not be dull, humor need not be pointless; that an intelligent and happy combination of the two offers a form of entertainment unique, pleasing and popular.

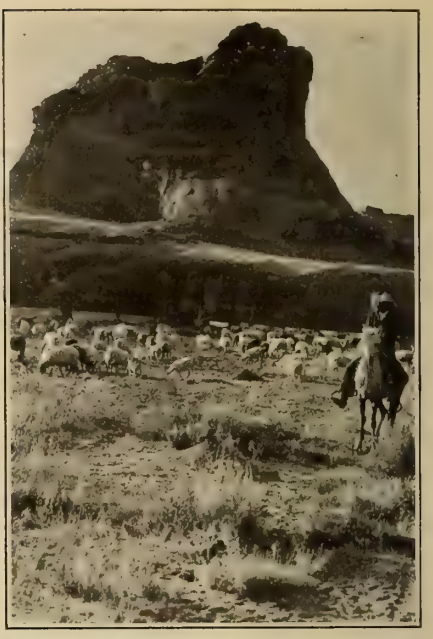
Screen Telegram Organizing Staff

A staff of cameramen and camera correspondents who will supply the material for the making of the Screen Telegram, the Mutual Film Corporation's twice-a-week release, is being organized with such rapidity that before the publication of the first issue, on March 3, every source of news film in the world will have been covered, according to Mutual.

Numerous subjects available for use in the Screen Telegram have been received at the laboratory and arrangements are being made for the handling of up-to-the-minute happenings until a few hours in advance of the time set for shipping the completed news films to the various Mutual exchanges.

Pershing's Care in Current Events



Universal explained this week that the folks at home should find much to comfort them in the pictures showing how carefully General Pershing looks after the welfare of our boys in France, in Universal Current Events No. 40.

The scenes contained in this issue of Current Events were photographed when General Pershing, accompanied by President Poincare of France, and General Petain, commander-in-chief of the French armies, made an unexpected visit to one of the largest of the American cantonments. Our boys are shown practising the gentle art of bombing, engaging in a hike through a driving snow storm and in various other interesting maneuvers.

Dogs of War in Hearst-Pathe News

The outstanding feature of the Hearst-Pathe News No. 14 are some scenes from France and Belgium. Those from France show the real "dogs of war" at work under fire, racing to and fro over "no man's land" in search of the wounded. Shells explode near them but do not prevent them from carrying out their duties. One dog is shown at the conclusion of a successful search. A wounded French officer is lying on the ground unconscious. The dog seizes the man's cap and races away with it to the stretcher bearers as a token he is to be followed to the owner.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Scene In An Essanay Scenic Released Through General Film

Rudiments of Flying in Pictograph

The 107th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "the-magazine-on-the-screen," contains an animated diagrammatical drawing, entitled "The Rudiments of Flying," by J. F. Leventhal, which should make easily comprehensible to the lay mind why it is possible for a heavier-than-air machine to maintain itself in the air. While there have been countless motion pictures showing the aeroplane in flights, this picture for the first time explains why it is that the aeroplane flies, and has reduced the rudiments of flying to a most comprehensible and vivid picturization.

Short Reels at Cleveland Stillman

The Stillman theatre of Cleveland, recently contracted for two short reel programs to be furnished by local exchanges. They are the Bruce Educational Travelogues, released through the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange, and the James Montgomery Flagg series of "Girls You Know," from the Kleine-Edison exchange. The Flagg pictures were to have been shown at the Stillman every alternate week, but after running the first one, "The Screen Fan," Manager Jack Kuhn notified J. H. Norwood of the Kleine exchange, that he wanted them every week.

Paralta Denies Rumor

Paralta Plays this week, denied a rumor which it says was circulated recently to the effect Paralta Plays would be released through Pathe.

As previously announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Paralta Plays are released by W. W. Hodkinson, Inc. The latter is using the various exchanges of General Film for distribution purposes.

WHAT THE NEWS WEEKLIES OFFER

There are times when the News Weeklies seem to unite on certain topics of great public interest, all treating them in much the same fashion. This week, however, it would look as though exclusive features were sought, so great is the variety chosen. The only two subjects to appear in more than one News Weekly are views of the Belgian troops and their loved commander, King Albert, shown in Hearst-Pathe News No. 14 and Universal Animated Weekly No. 11; and pictures of the real dogs of war, doing valiant service on the fighting front. These are shown in Hearst-Pathe News No. 14 and Mutual Weekly No. 7.

An instant appeal to patriotism is made by Hearst-Pathe News No. 13, released February 9, which opens with a picture of a transport at sea and a title recalling the sinking of the Tuscania. There follows a glimpse of a submerging submarine, Germany's cowardly weapon; then comes a fine picture of our great war fleet, one of the strong arms that will sweep the sea clear of the assassin. Equally sure of enthusiastic applause are pictures of Roosevelt in his splendid vigor.

The disaster wrought by the recent winter storms is strikingly shown in the wrecks of big river steamers, buried to the hub of their paddle wheels in great masses of ice. An industry stimulated by the war is the raising of rabbits to supply fur for aviators' helmets. The rabbits, the pelts and the manner in which the latter are used for lining are shown. A pleasant picture on this reel discloses Tommy convalescing in London, and repeating on the snowball field the dexterity he put to such deadly use on the field of war.

The fourteenth issue of the News, released February 13, makes a stirring appeal in its picture of the Boy Scouts launching their drive for funds to carry on the splendid work this organization is doing. The wreck on the New York "L" is a new lesson in the need for steel to replace the old wooden cars.

Mutual Weekly No. 7, released February 11, can claim a number of striking and interesting exclusive features, the liveliest of which, as might be supposed, is the Wild West show staged by Douglas Fairbanks in Los Angeles, which added $18,000 to the Red Cross. "Doug" in all his exuberant vitality rides down center, sure of a burst of applause from welcoming friends. An unusually picturesque ship launching at Oakland and views of a new type of street car, built to run by gasoline instead of electricity, are other topics of interest.

A much-needed lesson in preparedness is given by Universal Current Events No. 40, released February 9, in pictures of the harvesting of the ice crop. Work now will keep down prices next Summer. As for ice now, it is proving its abundance and usefulness in more ways than one. Here, for instance, is how an iceboat comes to the rescue of an army motor transport when the latter breaks down near Cleveland; the machine parts it is carrying for repair purposes are transferred to an iceboat, which makes the fifty mile trip on Lake Erie in thirty minutes.

Pictures on the French front show our troops marching cheerfully through a heavy snowstorm and demonstrate how a Sammy learns to prepare for a gas attack. He seems no worse for the stream of deadly vapor that is turned on him.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 11, released February 13, is full of good things, with plenty of "pep" and timeliness. For instance, when the cameraman wanted to catch the toboganners at Chicago he did not content himself with standing on shore, but took himself and his camera into a sled and snapped what he could "over the top." Another cameraman who must have handed himself a large wreath is the chap who caught the "nose dive" that nearly resulted in the death of an aviator trying out a new type of machine. The machine glides easily off the water, flies a short distance, followed always by the camera, then suddenly twists and precipitates itself and its driver into the water. Destroying the new pest that threatens the cotton crop, women as housebuilders and housepainters, a new type of lifesaving suit and glimpses of the survivors of the famous British "Army of the Mons" are subjects of timeliness and great interest. THROUGH GHOSTLAND TO THE HAPPY VALLEY

A succession of lovely views, differing greatly in character yet linked by their wild beauty, forms the Bruce scenic, "From Here to Summerland." Before the Happy Valley is reached, where foliage is richly luxuriant and the waters flow free of ice fetters, rough, snow-covered steeps must be negotiated and ghostly forests, where skeleton trees thrust bare limbs up through the dritting clouds, must be traversed.

But through it all the pack horses, with their debonnair riders, take their patient way, while the Great Dane bounds joyfully alongside, thrice covering the distance before Summerland is reached.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

WE know, Mr. Exhibitor, that you are hard pressed for time. We want you to read our reviews, of course. But we also want to make it as easy as possible for you to book the pictures they cover. Hereafter, at the end of each review, we will print the name of the film, its producer, and the date of its release.

TWENTIETH CENTURY STAR GAZING

You would think man had quite enough to attend to at present on his own planet without bothering about others. But the astronomer, even now, continues to turn his back on earth and direct his gaze to the heavens.

In a current release of the Educational Films Corporation, "The Mount Wilson Observatory," the wonderfully delicate yet powerful machinery that he employs to search out the secrets of stars and planets is shown in a reel notable for its fine photography and the unusual character of its subject matter.

The zig-zag mountain road over which the heavy telescope parts are being painfully transported to their destination 6,000 feet above is first shown. Then follows views of the long telescope house and the tower, and close-ups of the various clock-driven machines that turn with the revolving heavens. Last, the photographer allows his camera to look through the telescope and register those wondrous creations, the Milky Way, star clusters, the planet Saturn with his famous rings, and nitrogen flames rising to a height of 80,000 miles. MONKEY SHINES

Are you looking for something especially good in short reels? Book "The Confessions of Pongo." It is not the story of a retrospective sinner. Nor is it "rough stuff." It's the perfectly natural but extremely funny performances of a monkey when presented with a mirror and a hose for playthings. As it happened, we sat through two showings of this short film at an evening performance in a big Broadway house. The shouts of laughter accorded it each time rivalled the reception given the very excellent comedy that closed the program.

IN THE WAYS OF THEIR ANCESTORS

A subject probably never shown on the screen, but one of great interest and picturesque quality is "Our Southern Mountaineers," in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 106. These men and women, descendants of an ancient fighting race, by reason of their isolation and poverty preserve customs that date back two or three hundred years. Here the women are seen spinning and weaving on wheels and looms that date back, in type, to Colonial days. Wood is chopped and hides tanned and beaten, also by the women, in the simplest fashion. The grist mill is turned by a rude sluice; ox carts are the only means of travel.

As if to emphasize the difference between then and now, there and here J. F. Leventhal contributes a cartoon, making clear the principles of aviation. With his customary understanding of the limitations of the spectator's knowledge of technical matters, and his remarkable cleverness in visualizing processes, Mr. Leventhal leads us step by step from the kite on a string, upheld by air pressure on its nether surface, to the complete and complex aeroplane.

THE MARVEL OF THE RUNNING HORSE

At intervals too long for the many who marvel at the wonders revealed by Pathe's extra-speed camera, this firm issues a picture taken with its means that reveals the intricate harmony of movements that to normal vision appear so simple as to be of no interest. In this case the horse, walking, trotting, and at full gallop, is the subject. He is photographed first with the ordinary camera, his movements being so rapid except in the walk as to defy analysis. He is then caught with the special camera, that makes 120 exposures to the second, as against the usual sixteen, with the result that the action, when projected, is so retarded that each move of the limbs and neck, and the wonderful and beautiful co-ordination of muscles are clearly seen. These pictures, whenever shown, never fail to evoke intense interest, a ripple of amusement at the novel effect of an animal seeming to float in mid-air, and hearty applause.

On the reel with the above is a beautiful scenic showing French town of Rocamadour and the Valley of the Lot. Rocamadour is a pilgrimage town, and its ancient castle and basilica, built as part of the solid rock wall that rises from the valley, has been recently restored. When this picture was shown at the Strand theatre, the artistic effect was greatly heightened by a chime of bells that sounded gently through the music played during its presentation.

Split reel: "Rocamadour and the Valley of the Lot" and "The Horse in Action" (Pathe Exchange, Inc., February 10).

COAL FOR EIGHT CENTURIES

About the most talked of and unpopular topic at present is the coal supply. But that is not the fault of the supply itself. We had a suspicion there was plenty of coal somewhere! After seeing Universal Screen Magazine No. 60 we are sure of it. For here are pictures of the Pocohontas Seam in West Virginia, and the title man assures us that it is good for eight hundred years to come. Selection of those parts of the process of mining that are most important, from the drilling hundreds of feet underground to the loading of the coal on vessels for transportation, with careful titling, make this short length of educational film both informative and interesting.

The really busy people are those who can always find time to help out. Therefore London, with its terrible burden of war and wounded, extends its sympathy and active aid to injured animal pets. The pictures of the little creatures, trustfully coming to the door of the hospital that ministers especially to them, and their happiness while under the care of the nurses, are most attractive.

So much is said and shown of our army in the making that we almost forget we have a navy. But the Screen Magazine does justice to that institution that shares with West Point in our countrys esteem, and shows how our boys are trained to be officers at the Naval Academy in Annapolis.

Though they would doubtless deny the charge, the fish whom the camera has snapshotted as they swim luxuriously in the Aquarium in New York supply the comedy note, because they are so solemn, to a reel that because of its pleasantly varied and attractive subject matter is admirably adapted to a family audience. SCOFFING AT DANGER

Commissioner Finley of Oregon continues to surprise us with the versatility of his camera. His current release deals with the Indians of the Columbia River section and their primitive methods of fishing. Just as though there were no such things as gill-nets and salmon wheels, the Indians perch on rocks over the roaring rapids and spear the salmon, fish by fish, as they dart past.

Nor is this adventure enough. The Indian becomes so accustomed to the dangerous waters that he does not bridge them with even a primitive contrivance of planks, but fastens a rope from shore to shore and swings himself across, submerged to the neck in the whirling mass that at any moment threatens his destruction.

The subject is handled so as to bring out not merely its picture quality, but its real dramatic value.

"The Blue Bird" Scheduled for Easter

AN announcement from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, issued last week, establishes the release date of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," which has been produced on the screen for Artcraft, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. After a private showing to the executives of the company, it was decided that this film, which is said to present a most elaborate version of Maeterlinck's play, will be offered as a special Easter release under the Artcraft trade-mark.

Already eighty theaters, stretching from S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli in New York to Grauman's new million dollar cinema palace in California, have arranged for the screen debut of the subject and preparations are being made by exhibitors for presentations of a special nature. The executives of the Famous Players-Lasky organization are highly enthusiastic over the screen visualization and have decided on a pretentious exploitation plan. A special music score by James R. Bradford is now under way and everything is being done to give the film an elaborate presentation on an unusually artistic and dignified scale in accord with the high standard of Maeterlinck's piece.

Robin McDougall and Tula Belle have the parts of Tyltyl and Mytyl, the little characters who go in search of the bird of happiness. Edwin E. Reed, Emma Lowry, William J. Gross, Florence Anderson, Edward Elkas, Katherine Bianchi, Lillian Cook, Gertrude McCoy, Lyn Donelson, Charles Ascot, Tom Corless, S. E. Potapovitch, Mary Kenedy, Eleanor Masters, Charles Craig and Sam Blum are some of the important players in the large cast.

Shipman-Whitman Feature on February 25

HAMLIN GARLAND, the American author, will be represented on the screen again when "Cavanaugh of the Forest Rangers," the Blue Ribbon feature with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, is released on February 25, according to announcement this week from Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. William Wolbert directed the film. The cast also includes Otto Lederer and R. Bradbury.

This story, like another Vitagraph feature from the pen of Mr. Garland, "The Captain of the Gray Horse Troops," tells a big story of the great outdoors. It is set in the timberlands of Northern California, and a strong dramatic theme is said to run through it.

Director Wolbert, it is said, has taken every advantage of the opportunities given to him by the author to show the majestic timberlands of the Far West.

Many of the scenes were made in the big pines at Mt. Wilson outside of Pasadena, the spot which has attracted tourists from all parts of the country for many years. On Mt. Wilson is located the observatory which is said to have the most powerful telescope in the world.

Nell Shipman, it would seem, has an opportunity in this picture to duplicate the success she made in the Vitagraph production of "God's Country and the Woman," which also was a story of the forest reaches, and which brought into the play the athletic ability and talent of this Vitagraph star.

"Eve's Daughter" Is Billie Burke's Next

The next appearance of Billie Burke, under the Paramount trade-mark, will be in "Eve's Daughter," adapted to the screen by Margaret Turnbull, from the play by Alicia Ramsey. The picture will be released in March. William Riley Hatch plays father to Miss Burke, who has the stellar role of Irene Simpson Bates, a headstrong girl. Thomas Meighan is the faithful lawyer-lover who brings the girl to her senses. Lionel Atwill, Florence Flynn, Harriet Ross, Lucille Carney, Mary Navaro and Henry Lee complete the cast. The production was directed by James Kirkwood.

Tom Mix, Star of Current Fox Special

Tom Mix appears as the star of "Six Shooter Andy," the William Fox Special Feature release for the week of February 24. It is a play of the gold-mining West. The cast includes several of the children who made hits in "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" and other William Fox standard pictures. Among these little stars are: Georgie Stone, Lewis Sargent, Buddie Messinger, Raymond Lee, Virginia Lee Corbin, Violet Radcliffe, Vivian Plank and Beulah Burns. Enid Markey plays opposite Tom Mix.

The story is taken from a page in the history of the gold rush days of sixty years ago. It is the claim of the William Fox organization that this play gives an entirely new conception of the pioneer days.

Jaxon Serial Gets Official Stamp

General Film Company has announced that the governmental stamp approval has been given "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the Jaxon serial, as the result of the action of the Committee on Public Information in passing for release the early episodes of the serial. No changes were ordered in the story by the members of the Division of Pictures which reviewed the production, according to word received by General Film Company.

Because of the exposes made in the serial, the governmental bureau has been much interested, General says, in reviewing "A Daughter of Uncle Sam."

Triangle Cites Unique Routine

A survey of the Triangle program, it is said, issued for the past several months, presents a unique order of production. On January 20, Triangle released a story with a novel note in Western photoplays. Texas Guinan was featured as a desperate, vampirish sort of woman, a gunplayer of the very first order. The story, while containing the usual Western mining town atmosphere, pictured the "woman" as the terror of the town rather than a man.

From the West with its brawlers and gamblers Triangle patrons were next whirled to Italy and the Grand Canal of Venice, where gondolas carry lovers past the Grand Palace.

"Something new" is ever the cry of the public, Triangle repeats, and those who give their audience "something new" will find "something more" in their box-office results each week.

Nazimova Feature Booked by Loew

Metro's photodrama, "Revelation," starring Mme. Nazimova, has been booked by Marcus Loew for his circuit of theatres beginning Monday, February 25. This is the backing which Mr. Loew has given to his own personal letter to E. M. Saunders of the New York Metro Exchange in which he expressed his appreciation of the picture which he saw at a private showing. The letter follows: "I accidentally stopped at the New York Roof the other afternoon, while Mr. Schenck was reviewing Nazimova's picture, 'Revelation.' I thought you would be pleased to know that I agreed with him that it was a production well worthy of booking, and we are going to book it in our theatres. Nazimova's acting was especially fine."

Triangle Author Was Mounted Officer

Ralph R. Westfall, author of Triangle's forthcoming production, "The Law of the Great Northwest," was a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police for four years, and many of his thrilling adventures provided material for the photodrama. As an officer he came in personal contact with natives and adventurers who in the freedom of the big outdoors developed their own code, which often brought them in conflict with the Canadian officers.

Jewel Gets Letters About "Stars"

Evidence that exhibitors are beginning to realize that overpaid stars are not necessary to the success of a production is said by Jewel Productions, Inc., to be contained in the letters constantly being received from showmen the country over.

A communication characteristic of the many which come in with every mail was recently received from J. E. Rickard, manager of the Hop theatre, Phoenix, Arizona. This exhibitor booked "The Price of a Good Time" for three days.

Charley Murray Remains with Sennett

Charley Murray is to remain with Mack Sennett for appearance in Sennett-Paramount Comedies for another year, according to contract taken up Monday of this week by Mr. Sennett. This will be the fifth consecutive year for Murray with the Sennett organization. Mr. Murray joined the Keystone organization shortly after it was organized by Mr. Sennett, at a time when the plant consisted of a small stage, three dressing rooms, and a two-by-four office and small laboratory. It is one of Murray's pleasures of life to show his friends who call on him at the studio the original dressing room of the company where for more than a year, Ford Sterling, Fred Mace, Charley Chaplin, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Sennett and Murray put on the make-up. In the time Murray has been with the Sennett organization, he has seen all the improvements made to the big plant, and is now entitled to the claim of being the "oldest" member of the organization with the exception of Mr. Sennett.

Brinch Becomes Hodkinson Assistant

P. N. Brinch, who has been sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation since the inception of that organization several months ago, has been appointed assistant to the president and will take up the duties of that office immediately.

Mr. Brinch has been associated with the motion picture industry since 1907 when he joined the sales forces of Pathe.

Vitagraph Company Back from South

Director Paul Scardon and his company, headed by Harry Morey and Florence Deshon, returned this week from Jacksonville, Fla., where the exterior scenes of "The Desired Woman," the Vitagraph production, were secured.

Among the players were Jeane Paige, Julia Swayne Gordon, Eulalie Jensen, little Aida Horton, Charles Hutchinson, William Cameron, Harold Foshay and Herbert Pattee.

Mona Lisa Engaged for Horkheimer Film

THE motion picture industry and the public at large, according to an announcement which found its way east this week, from the offices of H. M. Horkheimer on the West Coast, are about to be enriched by the addition to the motion picture ranks of Mona Lisa.

The young lady in question has been under contract by Mr. Horkheimer, it is said, for a production which he has had in mind for years, but which has been held up—likewise all these years—because he could not secure the proper type of womanhood for the picture.

Mona Lisa, the announcement explains, is a remarkably beautiful young woman. Just who she is is not made known, but it is admitted the stage name is not her own.

The Horkheimer press department claims in its publicity matter that Mona Lisa's resemblance to a well-known painting by the same name is responsible for the title under which Mr. Horkheimer's new star will be known in motion pictures.

The Horkheimer announcement said: "Mona Lisa's first screen appearance will be in an emotional drama of seven reels. The piece is one Mr. Horkheimer has been waiting years to do, while seeking the right player for the stellar role. The play from which the film version has been adapted is to be presented in a New York legitimate theatre about the same time the motion picture version is released."

Paul Powell is filming the production, and predicts success for Mona Lisa.

Paralta Plans Ahead for Louise Glaum

SEVERAL stories have already been prepared for production by Louise Glaum, who started work on her first Paralta Play last week at the Los Angeles studios of that company. The filming of the picture in which she will make her debut as a star of the Paralta organization, is now well under way and the scenario department is losing no time in making plans for "The Lady of the Peacocks."

The first two productions since she has abandoned the real of the screen vampires for dramatic and emotional characterizations, will be "Intelligence" and "Snapdragon." The former was written for her by Monte M. Katterjohn, of the Paralta staff of authors, and the latter is adapted from the story of the same title by Horace Hazeltine which appeared in the Cavalier Magazine. Arrangements are now being consummated to provide Miss Glaum with strong, gripping dramas without the vampire element, to follow the first two releases. All of the first of Miss Glaum's Paralta Plays will be produced under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

The cast for "Intelligence" will include Thurston Hall, Charles Hammond, Joseph J. Dowling, Jay Morley, Arthur Allardt and Baby Mary Jane Irving.

All of Miss Glaum's pictures with Paralta Plays, Inc., will be made by the star's own producing company, of which she herself is the head. Both Miss Glaum, the woman of business, and the Paralta executives are co-operating in the undertaking of removing her from the narrow, confining field of seductress parts, and establishing her as a straight dramatic actress.

Silhouette Photography in Select Film

Unusual photography is expected to be a feature of Constance Talmadge's new Select production, "Up the Road with Sallie," which is now being filmed under the direction of William D. Taylor at the Morosco studios in Los Angeles.

Frank E. Garbutt, who has charge of the camera work, has introduced, it is said, a new and novel system of lighting, with silhouette photography a feature.

Kerrigan's Second Ready for Release

J. Warren Kerrigan's second Paralta Play, "The Turn of a Card," is now ready for distribution through the W. W. Hodkinson Service. The picture is a seven-reel comedy-drama.

"Up In the Air" at Hand

"Up in the Air" is the title of the Strand-Mutual comedy release of February 26 in which Billie Rhodes is featured.

Mutual Weekly is scheduled for release February 25.

"Humdrum Brown" Next

"Humdrum Brown," Henry Walthall's second Paralta play, which has been completed, will follow "His Robe of Honor," which is now showing.

New Producers Entertain Press

Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, New Producing Company, Gives Luncheon--New Studio—Perry Vekroff to Direct --First Production Started

GEORGE BACKER, president, and Gerald F. Bacon, vice-president and treasurer of the new organized Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, announced their advent into the field of motion picture producing activities under the name of Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, with a luncheon, at the new Chatam Hotel, Forty-eighth street and Vanderbilt avenue, Thursday, at the noon hour. Representatives of both the daily and trade press were Messrs. Backer and Bacon's guests. Following the luncheon the party was taken to the company's new studio at 230 West Thirty-eighth street.

The Bacon-Backer studio is one of the finest in the East and is equipped with the most modern improvements from cellar to garret. Everything is new. The studio is a three-story brick building and fireproof, and was erected by George Backer, whose ability as a building constructor and contractor is reflected in many of the big hotels and office buildings in Manhattan. The studio is a model of perfection. Messrs. Bacon and Backer's guests were taken from cellar to garret and all were of the opinion that the studio is one of the finest in the East.

The stage, which is on the second floor, will permit of a 92 by 40 feet shot. The lighting apparatus is complete to finest detail with overhead lights and sidebanks of the most modern invention. The carpenter shop is on the ground floor and is large enough to permit of the construction of the largest set that is of common use. The sanitary conditions that prevail throughout the building is one of the most noticeable facts. The dressing rooms are fit for kings. There are shower baths and closets and every convenience.

Production will be started immediately. Perry Vekroff, who directed Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in some of their biggest successes for the Vitagraph program, will direct the first production. Mr. Vekroff is now casting for the first production. It was expected that the first scenes would be shot Sunday. Alfred H. Moses, Jr., is Director Vekroff's cameraman.

Mr. Bacon has been affiliated with motion picture activities for many years. Recently he was connected with the Sanger-Jordan interests in New York and is acquainted with every phase of the business. He will devote his time to the selection of plays and casting. Ralph Underhill is secretary of the new company. Mr. Backer will act in an advisory capacity.

Hite Joins Forces with R. K. Shallenberger

C. C. HITE, of Cincinnati, prominent buyer and distributor in that section, has bought the Ohio rights of Edward Warren's production, "Souls Redeemed," and other features, contracts for which were signed by Mr. Hite and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation last week.

Mr. Hite announced also that he has taken into partnership with him R. K. Shallenberger, the youngest brother of the head of the Arrow Film Corporation.

W. E. Shallenberger of the Arrow Corporation and the late Charles J. Hite were associated in putting over some of the biggest film deals that took place in this country at that time. They had been schoolmates in Lancaster, Ohio, and were later business partners in many big ventures. They were instrumental in bringing the Thanhouser Film Company into being, as well as several other producing organizations, and both played an influential part in the growth of the industry.

C. C. Hite, who is playing such an important part in picture operations in Ohio, is the youngest brother of the late Charles J. Hite, and his new partner, R. K. Shallenberger, is the youngest brother of W. E. Shallenberger of the Arrow Corporation.

For the past several years Mr. Hite has represented various organizations in Ohio, including Mutual, Triangle, Goldwyn and Jewel. His decision to become an independent operator followed a close study of picture conditions not only in Ohio but throughout the country. The new firm will be conducted in Mr. Hite's name. Offices have already been opened in Cincinnati, Ohio, as a starting point.

Southwest Plans Service Bureau

E. T. Peter, prominent film man in the southwestern section, who has recently been exploiting "Redemption" in this territory, has organized the Exhibitors Service Association, with headquarters in Dallas. Offices will be opened, it is announced, about March 1. The membership of the organization will cover Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana.

Eskay Harris Feature Film Company, Inc., with offices at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, announce that its children's feature, "Alice in Wonderland," played to $2.50 top at a special performance given at the Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles, the latter part of December. The performance was given for the benefit of the Orphans' Home. The attraction has met with equal success in Rochester, New York, Buffalo, Grand Rapids, Salt Lake City, Baltimore, Cleveland and Boston, at prices ranging from 10 to 50 cents. The Eskay Harris Company is circulating eighteen prints throughout the country, booking direct from New York. It is announced that every town of importance in the United States has been covered with circulars through co-operation with the superintendent of schools.

Raver's, "The Master Crook," Ready Soon

"The Master Crook," Harry Raver's late production, will be ready for distribution among the state rights' buyers in the near future, it is announced. Edmund Breese and Alma Hanlon are seen in the principal roles. Mr. Breese is a prominent figure on the speaking stage and is appearing now in a Broadway success, "Why Marry," running at the Astor theatre. Among his successes on the stage are "The Master Mind," "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Third Degree." He scored a big hit in the photodramas, "The Spell of the Yukon," "The Walls of Jerico" and "The Master Mind." Mr. Breese has a crook part in Mr. Raver's latest production. Miss Hanlon's recent picture successes are "The Whip," "The Libertine" and "The Public Defender."

Masterpiece Opens Cincinnati Office

Leon D. Netter, who, with Sol Lesser, operates the Masterpiece Film Attractions in Ohio and Kentucky, announces that their Cleveland office is insufficient to handle their rapidly growing business in this territory. They are opening a branch in Cincinnati, Strand theatre building. George P. Jacobs will be placed in charge of the Cincinnati branch until a permanent manager is appointed. The Cleveland office will be enlarged after the first of the month, it is announced and will take in rooms 404, 405, 406 and 407, Sincere building, opposite the present offices of the Masterpiece.

Present Conditions in Independent Market

By Jesse J. Goldburg

THE conditions of the state right field seem to have made a complete turn about from the position it occupied but a few months ago. My tour of the United States, just completed, revealed a state of affairs never contemplated by me and which is another link in the chain of altering circumstances that would ordinarily baffle one studying the market.

The demand for particular character of productions is completely altered; methods of booking state right or independent attractions altogether changed from those pursued heretofore; prices completely reversed; percentages heretofore assigned to particular territories are altered, and all of this created largely because, not of war conditions, but the uncertainty that the exhibitor has been taught to believe, exists with the regular programs, and in fact the entire producing end of the industry.

What has largely tended to unsettle the buying market of Independent attractions and the booking of them by exhibitors is the attempt to consolidate state right exchanges or to form aggregations to book independent attractions. It is as futile to attempt to exploit a state right production at this time, and to attempt to realize any profit, as it would be to place upon the market an entire new program. This does not, however, apply to the state righting of big productions or the reissue of subjects purchased largely because of the popularity of the star, at present releasing through another medium.

The exchanges are anxious to buy and willing to pay a substantial figure for a real big production, and we have gone back to three years ago when spectacular productions with an altogether modern story was the vogue. Society dramas of the program variety have taken a horrible slump in popularity. One and two-reel subjects, particularly comedies of a clean and nonstapstick variety are a crying need.

The number of state right buyers has been diminished in the past six months by about forty per cent, and of the remainder, not all of them have enough financial resources to pay cash for what they buy. The state right territorial lines have been altered in every instance, diminishing the field of operation so that the exchange is permitted to concentrate their activities. For instance, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia no longer forms a part of the eastern Pennsylvania territory, but is sold and looked from separately. Indiana is now a separate state right field, so that Illinois is joined only with southern Wisconsin. Washington and Oregon hold only western Montana and northern Idaho; eastern Montana and southern Idaho being joined with Utah. Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico are separate entities. It is a ruinous expense to book the State of Utah from the city of Denver. Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma have lost Louisiana and that state is now joined with Mississippi. Missouri and Kansas are separated as a state right territory from Iowa and Nebraska.

The percentages, too, have been radically changed. Eastern Pennsylvania has been widened as a state right field, and open booking is now a set policy, in view of the breaking open of a combination which heretofore was considered to be "a rock of Gibraltar" in the control of profitable bookings. Illinois has proved a more fertile field for state right attractions than any time heretofore, and Minnesota and the Dakotas have followed, whereas Oregon and Washington, as a motion picture field, have dropped about thirty per cent. But the conditions in Oregon and Washington are peculiar. There is really but one state right or independent exchange of any consequence, with the result that exhibitors are compelled to resort to programs. California has also advanced, and to-day the prices received for productions of merit exceeds the prices of a year ago, although far below the amount paid two or more years ago. Texas is a much underestimated field of operation, and there, too, is a lack of progressive, financially responsible exchanges. The South Atlantic States still appears to be as difficult as ever in which to place worthwhile attractions. There are the theatres, there is the population, but there are not the exchanges.

Among the three elements that constitute the motion picture business, namely, producer, exchange and exhibitor, there is but one that has kept pace with the march of events and the everchanging desires of the public, and that one is the exhibitor. The producer continues to produce, refusing to regulate his expenses and without studying the needs of the market.

This tour of the United States, just completed, is the third I have made within twelve months, and if my judgment is of any value, and if my activities as a producer, executive and state right exploiter of independent attractions, permitted me to properly state the needs and requirements of the industry, based upon the lessons learned on this tour, they are as follows:

First—The making of productions with a strong element of the spectacular or sensational, with a plain yet interesting story that will permit of a release of no less than six nor more than eight reels.

Second—The necessity of stars has dropped fifty per cent.

Third—One or two-reel comedies that are not in imitation of any other comedy will prove decidedly profitable.

Fourth—The cost of an independent production cannot exceed $35,000 if it is to bring reasonable profit to the producer.

Fifth—Purchases and bookings are made not on the cost of a production, but only on what the screen reveals.

Sixth—Trade-paper advertising to a substantial extent is indispensable to the proper exploitation of any attraction. The theatre depends upon trade-paper information, but strange as it may seem, reviews of trade critics are not given as much credence to, by any means, as heretofore. The exchange and exhibitor have learned to depend upon their own judgment, but this state of affairs has been occasioned by the reported bias of certain so-called independent reviewers.

My final word is, that when independent producers make pictures with an eye to the exhibitor and not to the state right buyer, he will more speedily dispose of his productions, and at a profit.

Distributing Company Formed

Frank A. Keeney Incorporates Keeney Distributing Corporation—Will Handle Keeney Product—First Picture Finished

FRANK A. KEENEY, producer and theatre owner, has incorporated the Frank A. Keeney Distributing Corporation, it is announced. Papers have been filed with the Secretary of State at Albany. Mr. Keeney is president; Ray C. Owens, secretary, treasurer and general manager, and Mayer C. Goldman, general counsel. The new concern will handle the distribution of all Keeney releases. It is the intention to handle New York State, New Jersey and New England direct. Other territory, it is announced, will be sold on the open market basis.

Mr. Keeney announces also that he is enlarging his offices in the Putnam Building, Broadway and Forty-third street. The new concern will have its headquarters there and will also have branches in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and other large distributing centres.

Work on "A Romance of the Underworld," which is to be the first Keeney release, is progressing satisfactorily at the Biograph studios, it is announced. The picture is now about half finished. Scenes which have been shown in the projection room of the studio indicate that the picture reflects great credit upon the director, James Kirkwood, as well as upon the cast, which includes Catherine Calvert, David Powell, Eugene O'Brien, who has played opposite Norma Talmadge in some of her most important productions; Edwin Forsberg, star in "Jack o' Diamonds," "Madame X" and other feature photoplays, and now taking one of the principal roles in "Seven Days' Leave," and Sybil Carmen, famed as a stage beauty. The films of the picture have been insured for $50,000.

Within the last week Mr. Keeney has completed arrangements whereby work on his new theatres at Kingston, N. Y. and Williamsport, Pa., will be started as soon as the weather permits. The Kingston house is to cost about $100,000 and the one at Williamsport about $200,000, it is stated.

"Triumph of Venus" Completed

Edwin Bower Hesser Will Show His Production to Trade February 26, Strand Theatre—Betty Lee Starred

EDWIN BOWER HESSER'S mythological spectacle, "The Triumph of Venus," is ready for the public and will first be shown to the trade on Tuesday morning, February 26, at the Strand theatre.

The star is Betty Lee, who plays the role of Venus, the Goddess of Love and Beauty. Because of her remarkable similarity to the Venus de Milo statue, Miss Lee gives a startling reality to the portion of the story, the solution of this world-discussed problem being part of the story of the picture, which has to do with both the heavenly loves and the earthly wanderings of the deities of Mount Olympus.

Swimming scenes of remarkable beauty are included, it is said, in one portion of the spectacle, which, from beginning to end, has been produced with an eye to beauty and artistic perfection. Seven states were visited in filming the production, ranging from the White Mountains of New Hampshire, where the company spent several weeks, to the sandy shores of Florida, used in the reproduction of the island of Milo, where the earthly part of the story takes place.

"To create the proper costuming was in itself a great task," said Mr. Hesser, "and then to find the necessary outdoor settings for each of the seven hundred scenes comprising the picture was another accomplishment. To get scenes on the very tops of high mountains, it was necessary for the company to camp far above the timberline, where they went through a four days' storm during which their tents were ripped to pieces and even their food swept away by a sixty-mile-per-hour gale of wind. The swimming scenes were taken amid the icy waters of northern Maine, and such risks as swimming over waterfalls and through dangerous rapids became of everyday occurrence to the company."

Edwin Bower Hesser was both the director of the production and the author of the story. The cast supporting Miss Lee includes William Wherwood, Phyllis Beveridge, Grace Hamel, Hassan Mussalli, Percy Standing and several hundred players in minor roles.

"Bookings Exceed First Estimate"

Foursquare Exchanges Report Favorably on Advanced Bookings for Flynn Serial—Twenty Episodes in All

EASTERN Foursquare Exchange managers, who were in the offices of the Wharton Releasing Corporation this week for consultation in regard to the big national advertising campaign, which will begin within the next ten days on "The Eagle's Eye," made good reports of advance interest in the serial. They declared that the demand for bookings of the twenty-episode serial, written by William J. Flynn, the recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service, has far exceeded all preliminary estimates.

All of the branch managers, it is said, were enthusiastic over the reception which exhibitors have given the first episodes of the authentic revelations of facts of the secret attacks directed by the German Government against the United States.

"The general opinion has been that serials produced now will never touch the records established by the earlier ones," said Mr. Grand, manager of the Foursquare Exchange in Boston. "I handled some of the big successes and I know the preliminary symptoms of a knockout. The Whartons have never produced a disappointing serial. That is one point in favor of 'The Eagle's Eye.' The big demand, however, is caused by the timeliness of the subject matter and its authenticity as attested by the position of its author."

Arrangements are being made for a [illegible] Eagle's Eye" to the police and detective forces of every city in which the Foursquare exchanges, which will release the serial, have branches. The pictures will be shown as an educational feature, pointing out the methods employed by Imperial German agents in the United States, and the up-to-the-minute methods employed to circumvent them.

All of the episodes deal with the largest of the Imperial German Government's plots which were originated here. The first one shows in detail the plot which resulted in the sinking of the Lusitania. The others show attempted crimes of which the public was unaware until Chief Flynn received permission to include them in his serial. One is of the attempt to blow up the Hotel Ansonia in New York while the Naval Officers' Ball was in progress. Another is the plan to blow up the flagship "Connecticut" she steamed at the head of the Atlantic fleet in review for President Wilson in the Hudson River.

After a three weeks' stay in New York, filming scenes in "The Eagle's Eye," Leopold D. and Theodore W. Wharton of Wharton, Inc., who are producing the picture, returned to the home studios in Ithaca, N. Y., last week. With two exceptions, they were accompanied by the entire company, including King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, and a score of additional people engaged in New York, who will be used in later episodes. George A. Lessey, director, and K. M. Turner, an assistant director in charge of locations, will remain in New York for a few days to make final plans for more outdoor scenes when the company returns to film later episodes.

"The Eagle's Eye" company will return to New York within the next few weeks, after the weather has cleared, for only the occurrences which actually took place in the winter were photographed on the trip

Jesse Levine, of Magnet Film Exchange, New York

Levine to Represent Magnet Film in New York

Jesse Levine, who will have charge of the New York territory for the newly-formed Magnet Film Exchange, is one of the most successful and popular of salesmen. Mr. Levine began his film career with the Pathe Exchange. He later joined sales forces of the World Film Corporation as its New York representative and assistant sales manager. He has been associated with the Vitagraph company and for the past year, represented Metro in New York. The Magnet Film Exchange has been organized for the purpose of handling special productions.

International to Release Graphic Product

The productions of the Graphic Film Corporation, of which Ivan Abramson is director general and in which William Randolph Hearst is interested, will be released through the International Film Service Company, Inc., according to an announcement made by the International. The first picture announced by International, under the new arrangement, is "Moral Suicide," in which John Mason and Ann Luther are featured. It will be released about March 15.

"The Orderly," Billy West's Latest

Louis Burstein, president and general manager of the King-Bee Films Corporation, has arrived in New York from Hollywood with the latest Billy West-King-Bee comedy, entitled "The Orderly," which they will release on March 1, and is said to be the funniest of all the comedies made by this famous organization. Mr. Burstein is here on private business of an important nature, and for a meeting of the directors of the King-Bee Films Corporation. He will return to Hollywood on February 18.

Madden to Work a New Field

R. P. Madden, who has been serving as special representative of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in Canada, has returned to New York and will be assigned to another post in the near future. During his stay in the Dominion, Mr. Madden saw to it that the U. S. productions, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgians," were given a fitting introduction.

"Conditions throughout Canada," he declared, "are practically as they were several months ago. There is no evidence of suffering from want of fuel or foodstuffs notwithstanding the fact that Canada has been at war for three years.

"The theatres seem to be doing a highly profitable business and as soon as the cold spell ends they should reap a mighty harvest as the people of Canada seek amusement as relief from the worries of the war."

Improvement Reported in South

Jerome Abrams, general manager in the South for Foursquare Pictures, reports an improvement in business in his territory. A satisfactory number of contracts on "The Eagle Eye," Wharton's serial, have been forwarded by Mr. Abrams, to the home office, whose prediction for volume from his territory touches a new high mark. He said:

"'In 'The Eagle's Eye' we have at once a serial that entertains to an unusual degree, and one which has the strongest patriotic appeal of any picture of which I know. Every American will want to see it—and more than once. Dealing with the machinations of the Imperial German Government against our own government, it will startle many a man, woman and youngster to discover that such methods could be used against a country with whom the German Government was on supposedly friendly relations."

"Tarzan" Playing Still to Crowded Houses

"Tarzan of the Apes," National Film Corporation of America's special feature, continues to draw the crowds at the Broadway theatre. Capacity houses are reported for each performance with an extra matinee on Monday. The engagement which was announced originally for four weeks, has been extended to eight weeks. Harry Reichenbach, in charge of the run at the Broadway theatre reports excellent business.

"God's Man" Has Good Run in Texas

The Tivoli theatre, Beaumont, Texas, reports a successful three days' run of the Frohman production, "God's Man," featuring H. B. Warner. J. C. Clemmons, manager of the Tivoli, said his three days' run on this picture was "good from every standpoint."

Hall Comments on Worth of Specials

FRANK G. HALL, president of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has the following to say on special production:

"When reports of record box office returns followed closely the release of 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' the first U. S. picture, allowance was made for the fact that it was a very special offering with unusual spectacular effects which appealed to the curiosity of the masses, and this was also thought to account for the exceptional demand for early run bookings," said Mr. Hall, when asked to give his views on the subject. "It was merely considered an especially big 'hit' which had been launched at the psychological moment and could not be figured as a criterion upon which to base the amount of business expected from other special productions. But when the Thomas H. Ince seven-part drama, 'Those Who Pay,' featuring Bessie Barriscale, began to duplicate the success of 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' it became plain to us that the demand for extra attractions—pictures that offered exceptional opportunities for unusual exploitation—was even greater than we anticipated and showed money making possibilities far in excess of those generally accepted by experienced exhibitors and distributors.

"Now we are receiving letters and even telegrams acquainting us with the splendid business being done by 'The Belgian' and it looks as if this Sidney Olcott offering would even surpass 'Those Who Pay' as a box office winner. The interesting part of 'The Belgian's' success is the fact that Mr. Gordon of New England announces a banner run of an entire week at the Olympic theatre, Boston, while other theatres in widely different sections of the country report that its appeal is equally strong in their localities.

"Our experience is that special pictures are now proving so much more valuable to exhibitors than formerly, that old calculations of box office and booking returns are in need of further readjustment in favor of the right side of the ledger."

Jewel's Late Production Ready March 1

Jewel Productions, Inc., the companion picture to "The Price of a Good Time," "The Doctor and the Woman," produced under the direction of Lois Weber with Mildred Harris in the featured role, will be shown to the trade within the next week, at the Broadway theatre. It will be released March 4. The story was adapted from Mary Robert Rinehart's work of the same title. True Boardman is co-starred with Miss Harris.

Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., announces that twenty prints have been ordered by the New York branch of Jewel Productions. He promises first runs for this picture within thirty days after the trade showing.

Export and Import Report Big Sales

THE EXPORT AND IMPORT FILM COMPANY, INC., one of the largest exporters of film, announces that despite the drawbacks caused by the war, a record-breaking shipment of film to various foreign countries widely divided, was made last week.

Among the recent sales reported by this concern, are the "City of Purple Dreams" and "Brown of Harvard," produced by the Selig Polyscope Company, all of whose productions are controlled by the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., for the various foreign countries. These, together with the Selig Hoyt Comedies, "Runaway Colt" and "A Bear Fact" and the "Tweedledum Comedies" were sold to the International Variety and Theatrical Agency for South Africa.

They also report the following sales for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile; "City of Purple Dreams," "Brown of Harvard," "Garden of Allah" and a series of ten two-reel Selig Hoyt Comedies; "Painted Doll," "Her Sister's Rival," Russian Art's productions; a series of thirteen Tweedledum Comedies." To Australia they have sold "Garden of Allah," "Brown of Harvard" and "The Crisis," Selig productions, and "Man's Law." Only recently they sold for Scandinavia eleven five- and six-reel Metro productions, also "An Ocean Waif," "Garden of Allah" and "Tweedledum Comedies." To Great Britain they sold the following: "An Ocean Waif," "Tweedledum Comedies," "Man's Law," "Loyalty" and "Humility," Bernstein productions. And for Japan: "An Ocean Waif" and "Black Sheep."

Carlton to Get First-Hand Information

CARLE E. CARLTON, president of Crest Pictures Corporation, left New York, last week, for an extended trip through the country in the interest of Crest productions. Mr. Carlton will gather first-hand information as apply to the conditions which the exhibitor must meet. This step is taken in order that exhibitors will be assured an equitable share of the profits resulting from the booking of Crest productions. His first stops will be at Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City. He will visit every important city from New York to the Coast. E. Lanning Masters will be left in charge of executive work at the New York offices.

Mr. Carlton said, before leaving:

"With the conflicting reports about conditions, it is difficult to sit in New York and decide what is fair and what is not. Distributors claim that exhibitors are beating down prices to the point where exchanges are running at a loss and exhibitors claim that exchanges are holding them up for exorbitant rentals.

"There is nothing to do, if a producer wants to deal equitably by all concerned, but for him to go out into the field and make his own conclusions.

"As an exhibitor myself, I think I shall be able to get the exhibitor's point of view, and at the same time see to it that exact justice is done to the distributors of our first two pictures, 'Lust of the Ages' and 'The Grain of Dust.'"

Standard of Cleveland Has No Affiliations

H. Charnas, general manager of the Standard Film Service Company, announces that this company, with offices in Cleveland, Ohio, and branches in Detroit and Cincinnati, has no connections with the various Standard exchanges in other parts of the country. The Standard Film Service Company, of which Mr. Charnas is general manager, has operated in the territory covered by Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky for three years.

Exhibitor Speaks Well of Crest Picture

Mayer Silverman, Liberty Film Renting Company, Pittsburgh, who is handling the Crest Pictures Corporation's feature, "Gold; or, The Lust of the Ages," in his territory, is in receipt of a letter from H. Goldberg, manager of the Majestic theatre, Rochester, Pa., in which Mr. Goldberg says that this production drew fine business at his theatre during its run. He wrote:

"I played 'Gold; or, The Lust of the Ages' yesterday during the rainstorm. Unfortunately, I could not break my house records on account of the weather, but I received very fine comments from my audience. One man from Kansas requested me to give him some of my advertising matter so he could have his family see the picture. The photography is beautiful. The scenes and the theme are wonderful. The music score is fine, and with my four-piece orchestra, was greatly appreciated by my audience. I expect to break my house record to-day if it doesn't rain. My people informed me that they wanted their friends to witness it.'"

"Carmen of the Klondike," Alaskan Picture

"Carmen of the Klondike," the first release of the State Right Distributors, Inc., produced by Selexart, is said to be one of the best Alaskan pictures yet shown. The locale of the story is laid in Alaska during the day of the gold rush. Clara Williams has the principal role. One of the tense moments in the picture is the fight which takes place in the latter reels. C. M. Simmons, general manager of the organization, is handling the distribution.

Abramson Returns from Palm Beach

Ivan Abramson, president and general manager of Graphic Film Corporation, has completed the exteriors for Graphic's late production, "Moral Suicide." Mr. Abramson returned to New York, last week, from Palm Beach, Florida, where the exteriors were taken. John Mason, Ann Luther, Leah Baird, Alan Hale, Claire Whitney, Sidney Mason, Jack McLean and William Lampe accompanied Director Abramson. Because of the many requests from exhibitors throughout the South, for public appearances of these principals, Director Abramson will arrange a tour, on which the members of the cast will appear in person at the different theatres throughout the South.

Pittsburgh Buyer Praises "The Warrior"

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., which concern is exploiting on a state rights basis "The Warrior," "Mother," "The Crucible of Life" and "The Liar," are in receipt of splendid reports from the various territories in which "The Warrior" is now playing to large audiences. C. F. Schwerin, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange of Pittsburgh, from whose office "The Warrior" is being distributed throughout Pennsylvania, writes:

"Rowland and Clark's Regent theatre, the most beautiful house in Pittsburgh, ran 'The Warrior' for three days, breaking all house records, and then repeated the picture for an additional two days' run. Following this, the Princess theatre at Jeannette, Pa., showed the film spectacle for two days and, with the temperature 10 below zero and a ten-inch fall of snow, broke all records. The Princess theatre has rebooked the picture. Joseph Lombardo of the Empire theatre, DuBois, Pa., played 'The Warrior' for three days and had to call the police reserves to take care of the crowds. He has arranged to play the film again. Reports of this nature are pouring into this exchange daily.

Chicago Hears Pettijohn News

Learns He Has Withdrawn from A. E. A. to Devote Attention to Independent Producers—Affiliation Plans Still Progress

MEMBERS of the Chicago branch of the American Exhibitors' Association received some interesting news at their last meeting, Friday, February 1, when a letter from Frank Rembusch to Louis Frank, treasurer of the local organization, was read and they learned for the first time that Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., was no longer connected with that exhibitor body.

In stating that he had just attended the recent convention of Michigan exhibitors and had found the A. E. A. very strong there, Mr. Rembusch went on to give assurance that the impression which holds sway in certain quarters, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association are amalgamated, is erroneous, and that the plans are still going forward for the national convention to be given by the latter organization.

In continuing, Mr. Rembusch threw the bomb that made everybody sit up and take notice.

"I will also enclose a financial statement of the A. E. A. for the time it has been in my hands," he said. "I say, in my hands, because Mr. Pettijohn has taken a position with some independent producers, and of course, is now practically on the other side of the fence. They are going to exploit a booking plan. I think it is really absolutely imperative that exhibitors book together and a booking plan that keeps a report of the bookings of competitive theatres and adjusts their differences is well worth the time and money necessary to carry it out."

Mr. Pettijohn, it was learned, had thrown his lot in with the independent producers, among whom are included the Frohman Amusement Company, Harry Rapf, Triumph Film Company, Ivan Film Company, the Herbert Brenon Corporation and others. In conjunction with Louis L. Levine Mr. Pettijohn is working out and issuing propaganda on a manufacturer to exhibitor direct method of doing business. Under the new plan manufacturers are to spend not less than $25,000 on a picture nor more than $50,000. They are permitted to make a profit of 25 per cent on their outlay and after 2,703 days of bookings participate with the exhibitors in the excess profits on a 50-50 basis.

Prior to getting this news concerning Mr. Pettijohn, the members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association took a smash at the photoplay critic on the Chicago Tribune, the paper that modestly calls itself "The World's Greatest Newspaper," by adopting a resolution censuring its manner and style of reviewing pictures.

The question of having to close on Lincoln's birthday came up, but the exhibitors decided, in view of the fair and equitable treatment they had received at the hands of the fuel administration, that it would be unwise to ask to have their closing day during the week containing Lincoln's birthday changed so as not to fall on that holiday. They declared in favor of letting well enough alone.

The meeting was conducted with George Henry, vice president, in the chair, Edward Beatty, the newly elected president, still being in Hot Springs, Ark., recuperating from an attack of pneumonia.

Pettijohn Successful in Ohio

Charles C. Pettijohn and Harry Rapf, representing the newly-formed Producers and Exhibitors—Affiliated, report from the Middle West where they now are working in the interest of launching the new organization, that the direct booking plan has been accepted and approved by the entire quota in Ohio and that a committee of nine has been appointed to incorporate and guarantee the quota. Mr. Pettijohn and Mr. Rapf left New York last week for Chicago and have been working in the Middle West since. They carried with them a print of Herbert Brenon's latest production, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," featuring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson which they have shown for the review of the exhibitors through this territory.

The New York office announces that Joe Hopp of the American Exhibitors' Association and Louis Frank, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, have sent the following telegram to Mr. Pettijohn:

"We both just promised Pettijohn that we would bury the hatchet and put over this Exhibitors' relief offered by you at tomorrow's meeting. It's good enough to make us shake hands.

"(Signed) Joe Hopp and Louis Frank."

"The Master Crook" Without Usual Titles

"The Master Crook," Harry Raver's late production, featuring Edmund Breese and Alma Hanlon, will be released without the customary sub-titles, it is announced by Mr. Raver. Mr. Raver says that for the five thousand feet of film there are less than thirty explanatory titles, and these represent the spoken words of the characters. Mr. Raver announces that he will sell "The Master Crook" to territorial buyers on a twenty per cent profit basis.

"Bandit and the Preacher" Next

The second of W. H. Productions' Hart releases will be "The Bandit and the Preacher," it is announced. William Hart is supported in this production by Robert Edeson, Gladys Brockwell, Herschel Mayall and Rea Mitchell. The release date will be announced soon.

"Foreign Sales Better Than Before War"

PAUL H. CROMLIN, president of Inter-Ocean Films, in commenting upon conditions in the foreign market and particularly the French and Italian markets, says that American films are breaking into these markets in surprising volume and that Inter-Ocean's business in these countries shows a better scale than before the war. He said:

"The reports which I have received recently from the Paris office of Inter-Ocean, which sells both France and Italy, is one to make anyone with faith in American film feel good. I think Inter-Ocean's experience in French and Italian sales is an item for fuel administrators and others to think over. The cinema theatre is held to be a necessity in these war-torn lands, as the sales figures show, and the people insist on motion picture entertainment despite the pinching war conditions. The government, which was first disposed to curtail amusements, now encourages them. Officials told me during my tri pabroad last year that without the diversion given by the cinemas the people could not have borne their war griefs.

"I am disposed to feel that the German revolt failed because that government had seen to it that the people had plenty of amusement. There is even a report that the motion picture shows have been subsidized by the state, but we shall not have the truth in the matter until the great struggle is over. Lloyd George voiced universal official sentiment when he stated: 'The people's entertainment must not suffer interference.' The motion picture today is necessary to the happiness and well-being of whole nations. Our own President recognized this to a greater degree than any other head of a nation."

W. H. Productions' Campaign Book Unique

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY has published for the use of exhibitors a campaign book on William S. Hart, as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," their first Hart super-feature, which is claimed to be one of the most elaborate ever compiled for the mutual benefit of the exchange and exhibitor.

Phil L. Ryan, general manager of the Standard Film Corporation, says in a wire to W. H. Productions Company: "The campaign book on 'Two-Gun Man' is great, wonderful, best ever. Will help us secure additional bookings and will help exhibitor to sell more seats."

This book is expected to be of material benefit, particularly, to small independent exchanges. It embodies the story of the play, reasons why exhibitors should book the production, stories on the cast, the punch situations and big scenes, photographs of all posters, complete campaign of newspaper cuts and publicity, star cuts, advice on the heralds, lobby displays and finally suggestions for free advertising.

Aileen Brenon with Producers—Affiliated

Aileen St. John-Brenon, formerly of the editorial staff, Morning Telegraph, has been placed at the head of the publicity department of the Producers and Exhibitors—Affiliated, with offices in the Longacre Building, Times Square, New York. Miss Brenon is a niece of Herbert Brenon, producer-director. She will handle the publicity of the new company in addition to her work for Mr. Brenon.

Christie New Comedy Is Named

"Never Surprise Your Wife," is the title selected for the new Christie comedy in which Betty Compson and Harry Edwards are featured. Al. E. Christie is directing the picture, following an accident to Billy Mason which discontinued for a short period the production of "Betty's Adventure." but under Mr. Christie's direction things are now moving apace, and bid fair so to do until Mason's recovery.

"Exhibitors See Before Buying"—Steiner

"In the Wrong Flat" is announced as the fourth Jester Comedy, featuring Twede-Dan. It is scheduled for release in May. It is said that the comedian does some real thrills in his latest picture.

William Steiner, founder of the Jester Comedy Company, said that he was surprised to find, during his trip across the country in exploiting this product, that a great number of exhibitors insisted upon seeing before buying. He said that a great number of the bigger houses have installed private projection rooms and in many instances the services of a critic are engaged. The smaller exhibitor either attends the showing at the larger theatres where such action is convenient or have the picture shown at their own theatre after the regular performance. Mr. Steiner said that it is not an uncommon sight in traveling through the country to find the exhibitor at his theatre as late as one or two o'clock in the morning looking at pictures. "This signifies," said Mr. Steiner, "that the exhibitor is getting away from the old policy of booking on a paper flash."

Canadian Company Expanded Its System

In order to give subjects released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation wider distribution in western Canada, Super-features, Ltd., one of the largest independent concerns in the Dominion, has expanded its system to the coast. Offices have been established in Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver by Charles Stevens, general manager of the concern.

Mr. Stevens, who has spent the last few weeks in the western section of Canada, declares that conditions in that territory are rapidly improving and that milder weather will surely see a return to normal. Few exhibitors, however, are complaining, he said.

"There is far more optimism in western Canada," he stated in a letter to Frank G. Hall, president of the U. S. Booking Corporation, "than we find in the eastern section. The hand of the war has not fallen with such serious effect in the West as in the East."

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Vitagraph News Bits

To facilitate production of serials at the Vitagraph Hollywood Studio, it has been found expedient to place the production in charge of two directors, and Paul C. Hurst, remembered for his work in the Signal Serials, where he served as director, and who later made many of the "Stingaree" series, has been engaged to alternate with Director Dave Smith in the filming of "The Woman and the Web" serial. This story has scenes laid in many different lands, all of which require considerable research work and careful study of technic and detail. With two directors working on this serial, one can edit an episode and prepare for the filming of the next episode while the other director is at work with the players.

As soon as the Earle Williams company makes the few remaining scenes for the O. Henry story, which it is now working on, the filming of "The Man from Brodney's," by George Barr McCutcheon, will be starred. Williams will appear in the role of Hollingsworth Chase, and Grace Darmond will play the feminine lead. This story has a Treasure Island locale, and many instances of adventure should make the action snappy. Locations on Catalina Island have been selected for many of the exteriors. The direction will be done by Thomas Mills.

Joe Rock of the team of Montgomery and Rock, producing Big V Comedies for the Vitagraph Company, is wearing his left wrist in bandages as the result of a jump made for a scene. Rock jumped from the third story of a building to a moving street car and then to an automobile. He misjudged the distance from the street car to the machine, and states he hit the now broken wrist on Earle Montgomery's head.

Live Triangle Items

The first of the Ralph Westphal stories, "The Law of the Great Northwest," is in production by Triangle under the direction of Raymond Wells, with a cast that includes Margey Wilson, William V. Mong, William Jeffries, Eugene Corey and a number of others.

"The Veil" is to be made by Thomas Heffron, and the leading players selected are J. Barney Sherry, Edward Brady, Mary Mersch, late of the Lasky Company; Frank Bond and Dora Rogers, who will make their debut in dramatic subjects.

Joe King, George Hernandez, Eugene Burr, Wilbur Higby, Mary Warren and others, have been selected as the cast for "The Vortex," a drama to be filmed by Gilbert P. Hamilton. This is a story of a forced spite elopement, in which the minister shows the couple there has been a grave misunderstanding, and then follows a love affair between husband and wife.

Cliff Smith has begun the direction of "Boss of the Lazy Y," with Roy Stewart in the name role. This is an adaptation from the Charles Alden Seltzer novel, and gives Stewart the role of a serious ranchman. Josie Sedgwick is to be leading woman, and a cast of well-known Triangle players has been selected to support.

The big plunge of the Triangle Studio was used last week as a plunge of a country club, the walls being of marble and very elaborate decoration for the set. These scenes were for the society drama, "Smoke," being filmed by Jack Conway. In the plunge setting, a bathing party was given, all those present being in the abbreviated costume of the beach. Gloria Swanson, George Hernandez, Edward Peil, Darrell Foss and Claire McDowell are principals.

At the Ince Plant

Many of the members of the Los Angeles police department, together with Mayor Woodman, Chief of Police Butler, and members of the City Council, were guests of Thomas H. Ince recently when a private showing of the six-reel subject, "Police!" was shown at Clune's Auditorium. Others in the big audience that saw this picture were Jesse L. Lasky and executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation studios. The film is a special production from the Ince plant for release on the Paramount program.

"Police!" was filmed under the direction of Irvin V. Willat, and has as its principals Thurston Hall, Marjorie Bennett, Rosemary Theby, Melbourne McDowell and J. P. Lockney. The story is laid in Chinatown of San Francisco, and portrays the heroic work of American police. Prior to the showing Mr. Ince explained to the Los Angeles officials his reason for making this subject and dedicating it to the policemen of America.

"It had long been my ambition to provide the patrons of motion picture theatres with a drama based upon the heroism and self-sacrifice of American policemen," said Mr. Ince. "Soldiers, sailors, workers for the Red Cross—these have I paid tribute to in stories on the screen. Yet, in my opinion, the conscientious, honest policeman is as deserving of the nation's gratitude for protecting the rights of mankind at home, as is the warrior who safeguards their liberties on the firing line. While we give praise to the brave boys 'Over There' we must not lose sight of the valiant boys 'Over Here.'"

Universal Newsettes

Within the next week production of a new serial will be commenced at Universal City when the filming of "Pleasure Island," an adaptation from the Frank R. Adams story will be commenced under the direction of Harry Harvey. This story ran serially in one of the national magazines, and has been adapted for the screen by Walter Woods. A new manner of producing serials will be introduced at U City in the making of "Pleasure Island." Heretofore continuity has been prepared on but one or two episodes before the filming was actually begun, but with this, the entire series of working scripts has been completed. This, it is believed, will effect a great saving for the company, inasmuch as scenes for the entire serial can be made on the location at the same time. In other words, if an interior setting is required in the first, seventh, etc., episodes, they may all be taken at one time, while the set is up. The same applies to exterior locations, and to mob scenes. In the latter case, if a large number of extra people are needed in a number of different scenes, these may all be taken while the people are engaged for one, two or three days, instead of calling out a great number on a greater number of days. The cast for this serial has not been decided upon.

The other companies continuing work at U city are those making the serials, "The Bull's Eye" and "The Lion's Claw." Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips company are at Bear Lake Valley securing snow scenes, and Rupert Julian and company are continuing at U City, making a total of four companies at work there.

With Pathe Players

Another producing unit was added to the Pathe west coast forces last week when Bessie Love arrived at Los Angeles to be in work in forthcoming Pathe Plays. The Bessie Love Company, as well as Bryant Washburn and Frank Keenan, will work at the Paralta Studios, where the subjects will be made under the general supervision of Production Manager Robert Brunton. Miss Love, accompanied by John M. Quinn, her manager, arrived February 8, and it is now planned the first scenes will be made within a few days. Supporting cast is now being selected. It is understood that all future subjects starring Miss Love for Pathe will be made on the west coast.

Fannie Ward, another star for Pathe Plays, is now on her way to the coast, and should arrive early during the coming week. No plans have been made at the studio for Miss Ward's first subject to be made there.

Work of preparing the scenario for the first Mastercraft Production, an adaptation from the Dixon novel, "The One Woman," is going forward at the Paralta plant, where Reginald Barker is to direct the making of this film. Walter MacNamara, who for the past eighteen months has been devoting his time to the writing of comedy scenarios, has been engaged to prepare continuity and sub-titles for this first film to be made for the Mastercraft trade mark. Mr. MacNamara was until this time affiliated with the Keystone organization at Culver City.

Here and There

For the first time since the early days of his screen career when he was with Sennett, Charles Chaplin last week worked nights at the new studio. The reason for this was that he wished to get the picture out on schedule time, and not because of any particular effects possible only at night were being made.

Mr. Chaplin and his studio manager, John Jasper, have selected their entire staff and stock company. The regular players will be Edna Purviance, leading woman; Zasu Pitts, ingenue characters; Henry Bergman, Fred Starr, Albert Austin, James Kelly, Thomas Riley and Tom Wilson. The photographers are Rollie Totheroh and "Happy" DePue. Alf. Reeves, who was technical director for Carno Attractions, in which Chaplin did his first stage work of consequence, recently arrived from London, and will serve as a co-director. Danny Hall is technical director, and Charles Reisner and Melville Brown constitute the scenario staff. Carlyle Robinson will continue as publicity director, and Charles Lappworth, formerly editor of Lord Nordcliffe's London Times, and Sid Chaplin, will look after the personal affairs of Mr. Chaplin.

An examining board of Hollywood, this week summoned Sid Chaplin to appear for examination charging that he had failed to register. At the same time they gave out the story to Los Angeles newspapers which caused many columns of undesirable publicity. Mr. Chaplin proved to them conclusively that he was over draft age, being thirty-three years old at the present time.

Both Metro companies will begin the production of new stories during the coming week. The final scenes for "Breakers Ahead," a Viola Dana subject in which Clifford Bruce is leading man, were taken at the studio recently when a big set showing the deck and interior of a fishing boat was burned at the studio. A recent fire in Hollywood, caused by a motion picture fire scene, caused the chief of the fire department to urge producers to take extraordinary precautions. The Metro company had a number of firemen on duty with six fire hose, which were turned on the burning set as soon as the scenes for the picture were made. By that time the entire set was a charred ruin, all props being burned, including an expensive barometer. All of the big sets standing at the Metro Studio were wet before the fire was started, and the burning ship scenes were taken without damage to any other property, which resulted in the precaution taken by Studio Manager B. A. Rolfe. Charles Brabin directed this production and wrote a portion of it in collaboration with H. P. Keeler.

Director Frank Reicher has completed all scenes for "The Claim," which features Edith Storey, and is now at work on a scenario for his next production which will be titled "Treasure." This is an original story by Leighton Osmun of the Metro scenario staff, and pertains to the heroic efforts of a business girl to recuperate the family funds lost because of the treachery of her father's business partner. The story is laid in both the East and West.

The toll-gate evil in Kentucky a few years ago is to form the basic for the next Viola Dana subject, at present known as "The Night Rider." John Collins, who will direct this, is author of the original scenario, and Clifford Bruce will appear as leading man.

Monte M. Katterjohn has turned over to George Beban the original story which he has written for the Italian star, and this will form the first independent production to be made by Mr. Beban. Mr. Katterjohn is now at work on the initial stages of a new story for Louise Glaum, who is at work on her first Paralta production, also written by Katterjohn, and based on the insidious intrigue of the Wilhelmstrasse. The story on which Mr. Katterjohn has started work will be along the lines of "Golden Rule Kate," which he also wrote for Miss Glaum, and the author claims it will eclipse anything of this nature which he has ever written.

"Primitive Woman," is to be the next starring vehicle for Margarita Fischer, and the play is now in production at the American studios. This is an adaptation from the Henry Albert Phillips story by William Parker, and Miss Fischer's supporting cast will include Jack Mower, Philo McCullough, Mildred Wilson and Mollie McConnell. Lloyd Ingraham, who has directed four previous releases of this actress, is in charge of filming this. The play requires an entire new wardrobe for Miss Fischer which was purchased during the past week in Los Angeles. The first scenes required some exceptional exterior locations, and these were filmed this week in San Marcus Pass.

Earle Williams has begun work on a new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Man from Brodney's," from George Barr McCutcheon's book of the same title. Mr. Williams will play the title role, Hollingsworth Chase, the man from Brodney's, with Grace Darmond as the

THE ROMANCE OF ROTHSTEIN
(Maybe a Serial)

Nat Rothstein was in town last week, and left under rather complicated circumstances. Nat went to the station in time, but the California Limited could not be made up to leave on the scheduled time for want of an observation car. The station master told Nat it would be at least an hour late, and Nat, after asking to be notified when the train was ready, started to get exercise by walking up and down the platform. On the paralleling platform was a very attractive girl, and frequently there were glances in her direction (business of time flying).

An hour later, Nat rushed to the station master's office, upon noticing there were no other persons about who seemed to be waiting a train, and then it was he learned the train had gone.

His remarks were in a high falsetto voice, and they attracted the attention of the maid. Said she to the station master, "I must catch that train, too, or I won't get to New York in time to bid friends good-by."

Everything Nat had in California was on the train, and he threatened a damage suit. The train dispatcher reported the train at Pasadena, some fifteen miles out. It was ordered to wait there, and the last seen of Nat was when the station master closed the door of a taxi-cab after he and the girl had entered.

It was definitely understood Mr. Station Master would pay for the taxi. (The next installment will be written from New York.)

Rumors are few.

Weather—Fairly fair.

J. Lasky is still in town.

Raymond B. West has filmed "The Wave."

Dean Fifield was in our town from Santa Barbara.

Bessie Love is back West with her wonderful smile.

H. H. Van Loan threatens a tour around the world.

Bill Burlock, of London, was on our street this week.

Bryant Washburn viewed the exercises at Vernon Arena recently.

Tom Geraghty has abandoned the idea of popularizing the continuity necktie.

Roy Stewart is going to make a picture without smiling until the last hundred feet.

Pat Dowling has moved his Ford and bathrobe to the Paralta lot, where he is hammering the Underwood.

Woody Woodside, of Triangle Pub., is gaining weight under his strenuous duties of writing ninety pages of copy weekly.

Charley Fuhr denies the report that he was killed in an automobile accident, and is very indignant that a publication should carry such a story without verification.

Baby Marie Osborne calls her director, William Bertram, "a pippin," and also refers to her Rocky Mountain canary in the same term, so Bertram don't know whether he or the mule is complimented.

Margarita Fischer has a trick chauffeur. When she is not in the car, he substitutes a hat for his uniform cap, and is such a quick change artist that he got away with it for weeks. Now Miss Fischer is going to use the stunt in her next play, "Primitive Woman."

When HOOKUM staff attempted to verify the rumor that Paralta was broke, we bumped into H. Katz, who emphatically denied the rumor, insisted the industry was still in its infancy, and that Paralta had eighteen million-dollar production, each one of which would bring a quarter of a million in rentals. Therefore, HOOKUM claims the rumor was false.

The producing field is so overrun that it is almost an impossibility for a new company to get a name of distinction. One was organized the other week under the name of Pyramid. No sooner had they received the incorporation charter, than they learned there was such a company in the East. Mastercraft was selected, and three days later came Motion Picture News, announcing the formation of such a company also in the East. Mastercraft was adopted, but some one else had beaten them to it. Graphic was suggested, and this also was found impossible. So what did they do—they took the initials of the members of the company, and so they have a name—Delcah.

Edith Storey Is Expected to Reach the High Plane in Her Metro Career in "The Claim." Viola Dana's Newest Picture for that Company Is "A Weaver of Dreams"

Princess Generva playing opposite. The story is an acknowledged "best seller" and offers splendid settings in the "treasure island" locale, and a plot stirring with incidents of adventure and dramatic tension, provide a splendid vehicle for the star. Tom Mills will direct the production, in five reels. The island and sea scenes will be made at Catalina, Cal., where also the interior settings will be constructed.

Fox Studio Doings

Theda Bara, accompanied by her sister, Lola, and personal publicity manager, A. L. Selig, arrived in Los Angeles, February 8, and will remain here for the making of several productions, the first of which will be a screen adaptation of "Salome." As announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS recently, she was preceded to the coast by her director, J. Gordon Edwards, who at the time of her arrival had practically everything ready for starting the filming of this production. Director Edwards and Miss Bara both insist that this shall be the most elaborate production in which she has appeared, and plans for such are being made at the William Fox Hollywood Studios.

Now that Lynn Reynolds is to be the new director for Tom Mix Western Fox productions, it is also learned that this company will have a new leading woman in the person of Victoria Forde. Production of the first Reynolds-made play is now going forward, the company spending its time in the making of exteriors for which several big sets have been built. Reynolds having specialized in the making of outdoor plays, combining as he did, scenic beauties with melodrama action, makes him a very valuable man for the production of Western plays.

The Gladys Brockwell Company has completed its Apache story which was made by Director E. J. LeSaint from story by Charles Kenyon. S. A. Franklyn is directing Jewel Carmen, supported by L.

Universal Tries New Method On Public

A POLICY which marks a radical departure from the generally accepted method of advertising and publicising of motion pictures has been put into effect by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. According to instruction, issued by Carl Laemmle, head of that organization, the public is not to be informed hereafter as to the production cost of any of its subjects, nor is information concerning the salaries paid to the players on that company's roster ever to be given out.

This policy was adopted following a conference in which the executive heads of Universal took part. It was felt that to the flamboyant and bombastic methods in advertising costly productions and the salaries paid to stars, the industry in general owes the various millstones now weighting it down. A field which ranks fifth or sixth in point of importance deserves advertising and publicity treatment less suggestive of the circus side show, and more in keeping with its dignified position, say the Universal officials.

According to Mr. Laemmle, the general tendency to shout from the housetops the cost of a production or a star, savors too much of the spirit which prompts the owner of a new diamond ring to find it necessary to twirl his moustache or stroke his chin, with his beringed hand. Worse than this, it presents a standing invitation to the unscrupulous politician to come in and get some of the easy money he hears so much about. The only exception to the new policy insofar as Universal is concerned, will occur when a production of unusual merit is produced at a low cost.

"From this day on, the dollar mark will find no resting place in Universal advertisements or publicity stories," said the Universal's head in confirming his organization's new policy. "Neither the general public, nor the trade will ever know in the future whether any of our productions cost one hundred dollars, or one million dollars, to make. Nor will information concerning the salaries received by our stars ever be given out."

Washington Buyer Praises Ivan Features

SIDNEY B. LUST, Super Film Attraction, Washington, D. C., who is distributing two of Ivan Film Productions, Inc., in his territory, writes the New York office of Ivan of the success which these productions are having throughout the East-Central territory. Mr. Lust has "Babbling Tongues" and "Married In Name Only," both Ivan productions. He writes:

"I am handling your productions 'Babbling Tongues' and 'Married in Name Only.' Both subjects are giving satisfaction and are of good construction and photography. The exhibitors have shown their approval of the first-named subject, but the latter is only starting off. Tom Moore played 'Babbling Tongues' to a wonderful business. The Hippodrome, Baltimore, also announces successful runs, and as a result of the advertising from these engagements, we enjoyed a number of good bookings throughout the state of Maryland."

Ivan Film Productions announces that it is gratified with the co-operation of those handling Ivan production, urges all handling their product to co-operate to get the best possible results.

Screen Examinations

Bringing Them Into a Close-Up

By Longacre

PICTURE producers still scramble for the rights to a stage play, whether or not that play has been a success. For that matter it matters little whether the play was an utter failure, for the press department can tell all about its "record breaking run on the stage" and usually will stand uncontradicted, because common folk have forgotten. However, there has been many a stage failure that has been a success in pictures, and the rule, not being a poor one, works the other way as well. But it seems as if the modern day producer might use more discretion in selecting material from the stage to convert into pictures. Of recent date there have been two adaptations made from plays of more or less success that have contained matter so objectionable that either the producers themselves, or the censors, have called for alterations. We refer specifically to "The Knife" and "The Guilty Man." With the case of the first the "punch" of the spoken drama was done away with before it was transformed into a scenario. And well it might be, for that punch would have been fatal if delivered before the cosmopolitan type of audience that visits the picture theatre. As a play it was just about the most sensational thing in town and the sophisticated, the morbidly curious and the usual collection of persons who like to be thought sophisticated and morbid enjoyed it. But it played to a limited public. It would never, never do on the screen. And yet it was bought, the objectionable passages eliminated and the rest produced. The results show a picture that is average, though the eliminations may be cause for misunderstanding on the part of the picture-goer. Its sensational nature as a play may be brought out in the advertising to commercially valuable results, and there are those who may be attracted to it by the promise of seeing a duplication of the Broadway play. But why not come right out with it, if this be the aim? The answer is that some of the public would object. And here we come right back where we started from to the question, Why does not the producer use more discretion in his selections?

With the case of "The Guilty Man," there appears to have been an attempt to tone down a drama that didn't need toning down unless the modern standard of morals is molded after that maintained by the Puritan fathers. Surely the picture public isn't shocked at a mere mistress! There have been so many of them that they are not to be watched with gasps and blushes. But even so the introduction of the drama was rewritten by the sub title writer subsequent to the picture's production. The mistress becomes a wife, and she is so decent that the objection of the young man's father to the union seems altogether foolish. In the denouement this alteration of the beginning rises up to weaken the finish. And here is a case where, comparing it with some of the stuff that is allowed to pass, the modifications of the picture producer were unnecessary.

What are the standards by which a censor or the public judges the moral effect of a picture anyway? Sometimes vulgarities are let lose on the screen that are not only unnecessary, but which reach the height of offensiveness, and at other times one hears howls of supposedly righteous rage at incidents that are perfectly proper considering. All of which turns out to be more or less of a useless argument, but at any rate we hope the picture producer will refrain from an attempt to adapt the Hippodrome show to the screen, to find pictorial material in "Oh, Boy!" or any of the numerous revues current on Broadway.

One becomes rather dubious when a company says so much that is nice about itself in the manner that Paralta has been doing for the past few weeks. But, in the case of that company, all doubts can be set aside, for they have backed up their statements with the real goods—good pictures. Last week two, "The Turn of a Card" and "Carmen of the Klondike" (the latter disposed of to another distributing organization) were shown, and each is pretentious enough to rate as a special feature. By special is meant one that deserves big advertising and extra length. Both of these numbers run to seven reels. As the other Paralta pictures already shown have proven of real worth, and as those who have seen the next brace of release are unanimous in their approval of them, Paralta has succeeded—in one respect at any rate. They have made not only one or two good pictures, but a string of them.

"The Turn of a Card" has some of the cleanest, snappiest comedy seen in many a day. Mistaken identity rules the situation in fully two reels of it and the byplay between J. Warren Kerrigan and Lois Wilson is amusing to the point of being uproarious in effect. The plot is actionful from beginning to end and there are a number of thrills. All in all, it is quite a perfect picture from the standpoint of its entertainment value and little else matters. "Carmen of the Klondike" has already been mentioned here. Suffice it to say again that it is the Alaskan picture at its strongest and at its best.

The serial still continues to thrive and will probably go on doing so for some time to come, despite its faults. How many times has the writer seen a serial start off with all the promise in the world of being really convincing in further episodes? And how many times has it collapsed into a sensational melodrama molded only to suit the tastes of the less intelligent of picture-goers? Each episode must end with a thrill and the authors and directors don't seem to care how they get it as long as it's "got." They will make the heroine who has been harassed for so long a time that she would suspect her morning newspaper and evening tub of concealing death if she were normal, a sweet and trusting maiden, absolutely ready to walk into the most complicated and obvious of traps laid by the villain. The hero is always detained, usually by a blow that knocks him unconscious for a while, until the last moment, when he arrives just in time to rescue his love from an awful fate, and then it begins all over again. It is our opinion that the serial public, though it likes its thrills, would prefer them set in a more logical setting, which, however, is a thing easily wished for, but more than difficult to secure.

"The Light Within"

(Petrova Pictures—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE box office reports indicate that Mme. Petrova's first picture made by her own company and released over the First National Exhibitors' circuit played to better-than-average receipts. Such being the case, "The Light Within" should meet with even further success, for it presents, in most instances, a better story and one in which the star appears to better advantage. It would probably be improved considerably if it were reduced to the length of the usual feature. If intelligently edited the eliminations would serve to speed up the beginning and sharpen the climax to a great extent. But aside from this the admirers of Petrova will find little that does not meet with their approval. Specially as the admirers of Petrova in nine cases out of ten have eyes only for her, and of her "The Light Within" gives aplenty.

The story written by Mrs. L. Case Russell, a photoplaywright of prominence, shows Mme. Petrova as a doctor—a very great M. D. whose experiments in cures for heretofore incurable ailments have made her a boon to the world. But she is tied down to a narrow-minded, old-fashioned, impossible and foolish husband, whose main argument is the talking machine statement that "woman's place is in the home." Naturally when the lady doctor finds herself in love with a male colleague there is the beginning of a strong dramatic situation which culminates when both husband and lover lie in danger of death from anthrax poisoning with only enough antidote on hand to save one of them. Fate intervenes and saves the heroine from forcing to choose between love and duty and the husband dies of his own indiscretions while the lover lives to love again.

The intermediate action is of good entertainment value. The death of the little son due to the father's carelessness is deeply touching and the mother's only comforter, a remarkably intelligent collie dog, gets a tear or so on his own account. How is it when an animal shows appreciation of human suffering that the play upon the sympathies is always greater than with only humans as the interpreters of sorrow?

Larry Trimble's direction is decidedly individual and particularly does one notice that he seems to have inspired Mme. Petrova to greater warmth of feeling in her role. Lumsden Hare heads the supporting cast as the husband of many vices and makes much of the unrealistic part. Thomas Holding's classic features are the lover-doctor's and Freddie Verdi is good as the little son.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Laurel Carlisle, M.D. (Madame Petrova), has drifted far from her narrow-minded husband Clinton (Lumsden Hare). He insists that she give up her hospital and experimental work, but, believing this her calling, she refuses. Her main interest aside from her professional duties is her little son, Donald (Freddie Verdi). Laurel's life with Clinton becomes more unbearable with each day and when he departs on a yachting trip she is hardly sorry. It is announced in the papers that the yacht has been lost and Clinton with it. After a time Laurel openly welcomes the attentions of Dr. Leslie (Thomas Holding). One evening Clinton returns and accuses Laurel of being unfaithful to him. Her position in the world seems to prevent a divorce, so she decides not to see Leslie again. A disease breaks out among the children of the city and Donald is sent to the country. Laurel tends the unfortunate poor. Through Clinton's carelessness, Donald is stricken with pneumonia. Shortly he dies and Clinton accuses his wife of contaminating the little fellow with the deadly disease. Although her lot is seemingly unbearable because of her husband, Laurel manages to struggle on. She perfects a successful antidote for the disease, anthrax. Dr. Leslie professes his willingness to be inoculated with the disease that Laurel may experiment on him. So the experiment is begun. Clinton, half crazed with drink and foolish jealousy, destroys the antidote while the inoculation is in progress, but another tube containing the anthrax germ breaks and cuts him. So both men lie in danger of death with no antidote in sight. At the zoo, however, there is one mascarine turtle from which the serum might be made. Laurel's chauffeur steals this for her, the serum is injected in Dr. Leslie for Clinton's dissolute habits have made his condition hopeless. Leslie recovers and finds Laurel free.

Clarence Heritage, Evelyn Dumo, Fred C. Jones, Frank McDonald and Mrs. Matilda Brundage appear to advantage in the supporting roles.

BRIGHT, snappy Margarita Fischer is the star who twinkles her way through this Mutual production. Although jilted by one lover, who was too much of a worshipper of the long mazuma anyway, to ever care much for anything that couldn't be measured by the dollar sign, she found another that was finer in every way and far better suited to her.

Miss Fischer is seen at first as the little busybody trying to get a return on her money from a run-down lemon grove. In the midst of a discovery that the bugs are ruining her crop, she receives a letter from her lover, in which he politely informs her that he has married another woman. It takes more than lemons, jiltings and bugs to sour Janet's disposition, however, and she sends him back a postcard of the beautiful home next door and invites him to stop in and see her there some time.

The rest of the story deals with the manner in which she, unknowingly, shanghais the owner of the beautiful home next door into service as a butler, requisitions his house and finally steals his heart while playing the part of hostess to her former fiance who had taken her at her word and brought his bride on to see her. There is much humor in the story and the suspense carries through to the end. "Jilted Janet" was directed by Lloyd Ingraham, and is the best vehicle Miss Fischer has had for some time. The photography and cast are both good.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Janet Barnes (Marguerita Fischer) is jilted by Ernest Morgan (Edward Peil) for Suzette Sparks (Golda Madden), a young woman with money. In a spirit of pique and mischief, Janet sends a picture postcard to Morgan of a magnificent mansion near her home, belonging to Jules Graham (Jack Mower), and asks him how he likes her new home. Morgan writes back that he and his wife will visit her while on their honeymoon. Janet is greatly excited but finally gets the consent of the care-takers to let her use the Graham mansion for a few days in order to deceive Morgan.

In the meantime, Graham starts for his country estate, helps Janet get her auto started when it leaves her stalled by the roadside, falls in love with her and agrees to act as her butler when her guests come on. When the newly-married couple arrive they are entertained in regal style and Morgan, beginning to feel that he has made a mistake, makes love to Janet again. She pushes him into a lake and the honeymooners depart in a huff. Janet discovers that she has pressed into service as a butler, the man in whose house she has been entertaining and is nearly overcome. Graham, however, asks her if she won't continue to remain in his home as his wife and she accepts.

"Blue Blazes Rawden"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AS a mere glance at the title implies, this feature is William S. Hart's latest starring vehicle, a melodrama of the Northwestern lumber camp. Judging it by Hart's immediately previous effort, "Wolves of the Rail," and by his many former pictures in which the interest was always sustained and wherein suspense was raised to its highest degree, the story of Blue Blazes as set down by J. G. Hawks lacks the material to supply a full five reels with action, though it starts off with a real bang and builds to a situation of considerable strength. But the story would have served to better purpose had it occupied less footage—much less in fact.

Blue Blazes kills a worthless Englishman in a fight and takes possession of his hotel and saloon. Then enter the worthless Englishman's sweet, fond mother and unsophisticated younger brother, and Blue Blazes lies to them about the defunct member of the family—says that he was the soul of honor and died in bed instead of in his boots. This lie he tells more that their faith in the dead man may remain unshattered than to save his own face. There are many touching scenes between Blue Blazes and the kindly English gentlewoman who takes a liking to him because he was "the friend of her boy." The pathos of the situation and the suspense it creates may easily be realized, particularly when there are two jealous folk who would have the mother know the truth. The situation is, however, strung out and Blazes and his woman act so strangely toward the mother after a time that she gives evidence of possessing an intelligence slower than the sense of humor of the proverbial Britisher, so unsuspecting is she of the beautiful lie.

Hart under his own direction seems to have lost certain of his remarkable restraint in the earlier scenes. There are times when, angered, he twists his face into an indefinite mass of features. In the latter part, however, when the action subsequent to the lie arrives he is his usual fine self, silent, dominating and smouldering. Gertrude Claire, long character woman with the Ince forces, gets the most from the sympathetic role of the English mother. Maude George is an unusual type and a good one for the half breed woman. Robert McKim is villainous while alive as the worthless Englishman and Hart Hoxie and Robert Gordon are seen to advantage.

"Blue Blazes Rawden" is beautifully mounted as to exteriors. The few shots of the lumber camp confirm all that the sub-titles say regarding "God's great cathedral, the forest." The interiors present a backwoods hotel of the better type, with bar, dance hall and gambling rooms, giving the picture a true a la Hart atmosphere. Joe August's photography is all that could be desired.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Fresh from long days in the logging camp, Blue Blazes Rawden (William S. Hart) arrives at the hotel and dance hall of "Ladyfingers" Hilgard (Robert McKim), a worthless Englishman. The first thing Blazes does is to fight and beat the unbeaten bartender, Joe (Hart Hoxie) and so win the admiration of Babette (Maud George), Hilgard's woman. Blazes and Hilgard cut the cards for high stakes and success goes to the former. Believing himself out of luck, Hilgard challenges Blazes to a pistol fight in a dark room, the winner to take the hotel and Babette. He first removes the cartridges from Blazes' gun. But by a queer trick of fate, Hilgard is unable to inflict injury on Blazes. They close and grapple and Blazes comes out whole, while Hilgard lies dying. He gives the victor a letter and thereon hangs the tale. It announces the coming of Mrs. Hilgard (Gertrude Claire) and her younger son, Eric (Robert Gordon). On her arrival Blazes tells of Hilgard's death, and seeing the sweetness and trust of the mother, lies to her that he was a respected gentleman and that he died an honorable death. Believing him, she stays on, settling her dead son's affair and all the while finding something finer in Blazes than he ever knew existed in him. This state of affairs keeps working on him until he can bear it no longer. He prepares to leave. Babette, furious at his inattention, tells Eric the truth. In a rage the boy shoots at Blazes. The crowd jumps on him but Blazes commands them to set him free. Wounded, he sets out in the blinding snow, "hits the lone trail," while Eric, realizing Blazes' bigness, and hearing the true story from Joe, never lets his mother know the secret of Hilgard's death.

"Keys of the Righteous"
(Paramount—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

ENID BENNETT goes "over the top" with the "Keys of the Righteous" after C. Gardner Sullivan has laid a most effective barrage fire between the enemy and the point of vantage, with Jerome Storm advancing the colors, Thomas H. Ince commanding from the rear lines and a company of fervid, fight-loving screen artists wielding the implements of dramatic assurance, bringing down an enemy with every change of expression, with every dramatic move and with every advance toward the climax. And the little Australian, who broke into the screen without the assistance of a press agent and with nothing to herald her arrival excepting the exposition of dormant artistic ability, which awaited only the right avenue of escape to assert itself in a most potential manner, has bridged a long gap between the small and big time stuff, and will, unless the writer is all wrong, go over big.

Miss Bennett has been seen in some comparative successes on the screen, but never has she demonstrated her ability as an artist, never has she reached the depths of feeling or the heights of emotion or the quaintness of simplicity as she does in this Paramount offering. She has Mr. Sullivan, first, to thank for making the way straight, and then her appreciation turns to Thomas H. Ince and Jerome Storm. Mr. Storm, like Miss Bennett, is a new star on the horizon. As one of Mr. Ince's pupils, he reflects the genius of this master director, and the writer takes the liberty to prophesy a bright future for Director Storm if "Keys of the Righteous" be a criterion for other creations to come. There are spots in this production which, unfortunately, reflect a too great eagerness on the part of Mr. Storm to obtain realism, noticeably the scenes in the court room, where the bulldozing tactics employed by the policemen and court attendants will find no precedent in the annals of our courts, unless they be isolated incidents. The court room setting, the procedure and the general atmosphere of it all are, with the above exceptions, marvelous expositions of detailed work.

The human note is struck by author and interpreters in this photodrama with a resonance that will echo its appeal long after the five reels of pantomime have gone on to the next town or city. It is more than inanimate motion; it reflects a soul which speaks as plainly and as intelligibly as would a universal language echoing around the world. All can understand its most subtle moments; all will feel the grip which tightens as the simple, homely folks of the back woods recount the story of innocence conquering the worldly wise; the man defeating what some would call fate, and the mother rejoicing in death when it finds her kin and mate united in love.

For every foot of the five thousand feet of film that tells the story of "Keys of the Righteous" there's a reason. Every flash on the screen means something. There is no padding, no ulterior action or scenes brought in to make possible a set reelage. The material is there—no more, no less—and it is brought out with a punch, punctuated with a kick where such action becomes imperative. Miss Bennett is fortunate in having such a story to tell. She is fortunate in having Jerome Storm and Mr. Ince in command.

The supporting cast is composed of artists who know how. George Nichols personifies Peter Manning—makes it a living character. Josef Swickard gives one of the most finished, idealistic characterizations of a victim of drink that has ever been given for the review of the writer. Carl Forms and Gertrude Claire are fine in the role of good-natured back woods people. Earl Rodney, although not prominently casted, does fine while before the camera. Lydia Knott and Melbourne MacDowell both register in strong but less important roles. Lydia Knott has numerous opportunities to overact in the role of the invalid mother, but not once does she overstep the bounds of conservatism.

The author has worked up to the scene wherein the mother dies, with care and a subtleness that is seldom seen in following the action to this point. Instead of following the usual method of showing the victim of death expiring, Director Storm has reflected the scene in the face of the heroine as she kneels by the bedside with everything cut except facial emotions. "Keys of the Righteous" lies secure in its strength.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Manning (Enid Bennett) lives with her mother (Lydia Knott) and her grandfather, Peter Manning (George Nichols), in the back woods of Wisconsin. Her mother was a circus performer and had married Paul Manning (Josef Swickard), who had been educated for the ministry, against his father's wishes. The husband dared not enter the home of his father after the marriage. Later Mary was born. She had never seen her father until she had grown to womanhood, and here her father returns, a physical wreck, because of his drunken habits. Mary's mother is an invalid, and had waited year after year for her husband to return, praying that she might see him before her death. Paul is not recognized by his father until he establishes his identity. The old man becomes enraged and turns him from the house. Mary, learning that the stranger is her father, fetches him back and promises her mother before her death that she will love and respect her father.

During these days Tom Gale (Earl Rodney) comes into her life and their lives are filled with sunshine and happiness. Paul, her father, whom she has cared for, feeling that he is a burden to his daughter, leaves and goes to Ore City. Remembering her promise to her mother, Mary follows and finds her father back to the old life of drunkenness.

Her grandfather, swearing vengeance, goes to Ore City. Tom also goes in search of Mary. He meets the old man and threatens to have him arrested if he harms his granddaughter, Mary. Mary has located her father, Paul, in a disreputable dance hall, and while she is there with him the place is raided. She and her father are taken before the judge, who knows Paul as an old offender. Mary tells the judge that it is she who is to blame, not her father. He discharges both. The grandfather is united with his son and the happy party of four start back to the home in the woods.

"Daddy's Girl"

TO make one Baby Marie Osborne picture take a little colored boy, any number of domestic animals, several typical childish pranks, a selected variety of close-ups of the star and stir thoroughly, giving the mixture a five thousand-foot background, and run through it a slight vein of erring elders brought back to a sense of duty by Marie. Such a recipe is most always dutifully followed in the making of Baby Marie's pictures, and the authors of "Daddy's Girl," John W. Grey and Ramirez Torres, her latest, have not failed to put it into use again.

The colored boy is clever, the three little kittens are cute and the trick dog is entertaining, the chief typical childhood game is the kids' circus. As for the erring elders, these are Marie's father, who is unable to bear the luxuries of an inherited fortune without forgetting his matrimonial vows and an unhappily married sweetheart of former days. The nervous breakdown of Marie's mother caused by her husband's neglect and the child's pleading bring about the desired reunion and with it the happy ending. The close-ups of the star are used to advantage.

Those who have followed Marie's career to date may justly express a wish for something a little bit different after seeing "Daddy's Girl," though before a new clientele she may be just as capable of pleasing as ever. Since her leap to stardom Marie has grown fast. She is quite the cute little youngster that she was in her first two or three pictures. This natural course of events is lamentable considering the fine favor in which the little star is still held.

William Bertram directed the picture and made an average production of it. Marion Warner and Lewis J. Cody appear as Marie's parents and Herbert Standing has a small character role. Quite the most favorable impression is made by Katherine McLaren, who, despite a thankless role, succeeds by grace of expression and beauty in attracting much sympathy. This she shouldn't have done for the sake of the story, but as a display of talent her appearance is altogether successful.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When William Nordly (Herbert Standing) passes away and leaves his fortune to Baby Marie (Marie Osborne), with her mother (Marion Warner) as guardian, John (Louis J. Cody), the husband starts in to waste it and before long his activities lead him away from his wife to the company of a woman he once loved. Until his wife breaks down and his child comes through the streets in the dead of night to bring him home, things are pretty much upset, but with this act of Marie's John's eyes are opened.

"His Royal Highness"
(World Film—Five Reels)

THIS is a picture of a mythical Balkan kingdom, weak and tottering, and of an American, its antithesis in every respect, who sets it aright by injecting in it a goodly amount of native pep. The plot calls to mind McCutcheon, McGrath, Anthony Hope and the musical comedy of the past. In fact, "His Royal Highness" is the picture counterpart of a musical comedy of another day, the only difference being that a few melodramatic touches supersede the songs. It is staged after the manner of the musical comedy. The costumes of the peoples of Wallarya and Terresta, of the Balkans, being miscellaneous and gaudy. The American shows up in a white uniform with gold braid chasing itself all over his chest. The peasant costumes, too, appear to have been called out from the Shubert storehouse for an airing, and the settings might once have graced the stage of the theatre.

Carlyle Blackwell is featured as the American with pep. He uses slang in the subtitles and disregards all autocratic formalities democratically, which is as it should be. Mr. Blackwell directed in the bargain. One sometimes wishes that Mr. Blackwell the director had urged Mr. Blackwell the actor to put a bit more comedy in his part and to derive more from the conventional though easy opportunities provided in the script. There are times when it appears that he really took the story seriously, which is to be regretted, because it is doubtful if anyone else can. The picture's main asset is the contrast between the American's breezy character, indicated almost entirely in the subtitles, and the formal though tottering mythical kingdom.

The thrills include a high dive by Blackwell to the rescue of his pal and the blowing up of the "royal limousine" with a bomb, the kidnapping of the heroine and her rescue by the American. Evelyn Greeley has little to do as the heroine, but makes a pleasing impression. Lionel Belmore has a leading character part, while Kitty Johnson, Bert Honey and Kate Lester portray the other principal roles.

Raymond L. Schrock prepared the scenario and A. Moses and L. Tainguy were behind the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Christie (Carlyle Blackwell), Harvard football star, rooms with Victor Borden (Bert Honey), in reality the heir to the throne of Wallarya, a Balkan kingdom. Victor urges Jack to visit Europe with him at the close of college. Here it develops that all has been arranged for Victor to return to his kingdom on the 18th of August. It so happens, however, that he gets in a brawl while protecting his Apache sweetheart (Kitty Johnson), and Jack is obliged to take his place. Adventures follow thick and fast. There are several attempts made on his life, but eventually he comes out all right, makes peace with the neighboring kingdom by marrying the Princess (Evelyn Greeley), whom he met on the boat coming over, and decides to stay on as King for life as Victor has returned to America with his bride.

GLADYS LESLIE and J. Frank Glendon present the principal roles in Vitagraph's late feature, "The Wooing of Princess Pat," produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle from the script by William Addison Lathrop. The plot and theme of the story is analogous to those exposed by "The Prince of Graustark," and is an exposition of a royal romance. The author, Mr. Lathrop, has eliminated the American character and the wooing is confined within the borders of two small principalities in Europe. Unlike "The Prince of Graustark," "The Wooing of Princess Pat" is lacking in strength of plot and sufficient material for a five-reel production.

Director Earle's chief forte in staging this production appears to have been an unsatiable desire to bring Miss Leslie into the close-up and to substitute the little actress' unlisputed magnetism for sound dramatic situations. The author has not supplied the material and it necessarily follows that Mr. Earle could not have supplied "that which ain't." But he could have done some better. The children will like this picture, but the grown-ups will find in it little in the way of real dramatic substance. Miss Leslie looks cute and skips through her part with ability. Given a script with more substance and more weight and Miss Leslie will give a good account of her stewardship before the camera.

Some beautiful exteriors have been shot and a real touch of the winter season is felt when the scenes showing the hillsides covered with snow and Miss Leslie enjoying coasting, are flashed. Because of such scenes as the above the picture should be a winner for the children and the women patrons. The men will find this feature lacking in strong action and virility.

J. Frank Glendon is a fine type for the role opposite Miss Leslie and gives a credible performance. Bigelow Cooper, seen for the first time in some months in Vitagraph productions, does his usual good work in a character part. William Dunn does well in a role of average importance. Charles Kent is capable of handling a more important part than that of the Duke. Carlton King, Templar Saxe and J. Albert Hall do good work as the three sons. The photograph is of the best.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Eric, Iron Duke of Warburg (J. Frank Glendon) is anxious for war with the neighboring principality of Paxstadt. The Grand Duke of Paxstadt (Charles Kent) rules the destinies of this small kingdom and wishes to avoid war. General Marask (Bigelow Cooper), Eric's adviser, is a close friend of the Grand Duke, and suggests that he go on a mission to the neighboring kingdom. Marask sees in the marriage between his ruler, Eric, and the Grand Duke's daughter, Princess Pat (Gladys Leslie), a way to peace between the two kingdoms. Little Princess Pat admires General Marask.

The suggestion is made to the Grand Duke by Marask, but the little Princess revolts. Later Eric is induced to visit the Grand Duke, and comes upon Princess Pat coasting on her father's estate. She does not know who he is, but the two become good friends. The wedding is arranged and consummated, and Princess Pat becomes the first lady of the land. Count Ladislaus (William Dunn) has been banished by Eric for disobeying his orders, and carries word to Princess Pat's three brothers (Carlton King, Templar Saxe and J. Herbert Hall) that Eric abuses their sister. The three brothers go to Eric's palace and demand an explanation. They learn that the chief difficulty is that Princess Pat does not love her husband, Eric. Princess Pat admires her husband's stand, and for the first time tells him that she loves him.

(Goldwyn—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

"OUR LITTLE WIFE" is an adaptation of a stage farce by Avery Hopwood, auther of "Seven Days" and "Fair and Warmer," and serves as Madge Kennedy's third starring vehicle for Goldwyn. It is made up of complications, "Our Little Wife." The bride of a few minutes decides to take her three rejected suitors on her honeymoon so that they may not pine away and die without her. Naturally, the husband of a few minutes doesn't take over kindly to the idea, and when all four are securely stationed in a Florida resort things begin to happen. The element of farce is brisk in this section of the film and leads up to a ludicrous situation, in which the husband finds his wife in an embarassing situation with one of the trio. Of course, she is innocent, and so is the seemingly guilty intruder. It is in molding this type of situation that Hopwood excels and the laughs in this particular one are abundant.

Then the action jumps a year to the wedding anniversary. Husband forgets all about it; wifey is piqued at his inattention. Readily she sets out to save a feminine friend, now engaged to one of the trio, from a naughty party, but again does she innocently compromise herself, the girl's fiance and still a third party, until explanations prove every one innocent. There are innumerable complications introduced while the author builds to the top of his situation, little twists and turns that serve to furnish comedy on their own account, as well as to build to the very height of farce, a point where the laughs come as fast as the feet of the film.

And the results are that "Our Little Wife" is a good comedy, although it is by no means Hopwood's best. The very fact that the entire action centers about the two situations mentioned signifies that the picture is lacking in material of consequence and divided into two distinct episodes, each somewhat remote from the other. An effort has been made to bolster up the five reels by the plentiful introduction of close-ups of Miss Kennedy, a form of padding that serves neither to the credit of the star nor of the picture. The star also introduces that inebriated attitude that served to such good purpose in the stage success, "Fair and Warmer," to an irrelevant extent. Just what place it has in the telling of "Our Little Wife" is not apparent, save perhaps that it gives her a chance to further prove her ability as a comedienne.

Miss Kennedy's performance in the scenes bearing upon the plot is always favorable. Again it may be reiterated that she has the personality, the appearance and the ability of expression to place her in the first rank of screen artists. George Forth handles the role of the husband adequately. There are Walter Hiers, the fat young man (who is responsible for considerable comedy on his own account); William Davidson and Kempton Greene, who play the three rejected suitors with fine results, and Marguerite Marsh completes the cast of principals with a clever performance.

Roy Somerville prepared the continuity from Hopgood's play and produced a script that made full use of all the material for comedy available. Edward Dillon gave it a production that is entirely satisfactory, and the camera work of George Hill and David Abel is commendable in every department.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The marriage of Dodo (Madge Kennedy) to Herb (George Forth) finds Dr. Elliott (William Davidson), Tommy (Kempton Greene), a writer of verse, and Bobo (Walter Hiers), disappointed suitors every one of them, without inspiration. Fearing for them Dodo requests the trio to accompany her on her honeymoon, much to the displeasure of Herb. Arrived in the South, Herb, nettled considerably, sends a telegram to himself saying that his presence is needed in New York. He commands Dodo to accompany him home and leaves for the train alone. Tommy and Bobo also hasten to the train, but just as Elliott is leaving the hotel he hears Dodo sobbing in her room and enters to find her slightly hysterical over Herb's desertion. He tends her and offers consolation, and while in the midst of this Herb and the others return. Naturally, their conclusions are all wrong until explanations are heard.

A year later finds Dr. Elliott married to a jealous lady (Wray Page) and Bobo engaged to Angie (Marguerite Marsh). Dodo prepares for her wedding anniversary, but Herb forgets all about it. Feeling ill from the shock Dodo calls the doctor, thereby arousing his wife's suspicions. Angie calls with the news that she is attending a costume ball and that she is taking tea with a man of doubtful character in the rooms below, where the entertainment is held. In consternation Dodo calls Bobo and together they journey to the ball. Elliott decides to go for old times' sake. Angie, having decided not to take tea with the gentlemen below, goes on with the dance while Dodo, Bobo and Elliott in their efforts to save her are all compromised before their respective spouses and fiancees. The situation builds to a jolly climax when explanations are again in order and everything straightened out.

"Morgan's Raiders"

(Universal—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

VIOLET MERSEREAU'S latest work for the Universal program, "Morgan's Raiders," relates incidents growing out of the Civil War period and gives in some detail the activities of the Confederate Band known as Morgan's Men, The play was written and directed by Bess Meredith and Wilfred Lucas. The authors have succeeded in creating enough material for five reels of pictures, but have apparently forgotten that there is such a requisite as continuity in fashioning a photodrama. Miss Mersereau's fetching personality and the sentiment that looms up with the presentation of a play devoted to the recounting of incidents relative to the Civil War, and particularly to such an historic band of warriors as Morgan's Men, are reasons enough for the presentation of this picture, and the defects in technique of the drama will be overlooked undoubtedly by the average audience. It represents an average photoplay, with strong moments registered at intervals, but for the most part the production is lacking in real dramatic substance. Its action breaks in places and the directors have attempted to supply this failing by intimate views of the star. Miss Mersereau is seen in the familiar role of the tomboyish character, appearing in overalls and tattered dresses as a girl of the mountains. At no time during the run is she called upon to interpret strength in the drama or depth of emotion. It remained for her to portray the care-free, unsophisticated girl, and this she does with a fine appreciation, for it is her one strong point in working before the camera.

Some fine exteriors of mountainous country has been shot by Directors Meredith and Lucas. Much of the action takes place in the open. The story is the weakest element of the production. It has little substance in the way of support for a semblance of a plot. Miss Mersereau is the shining light in the picture and registers in spite of the flimsy material with which she has to work. The supporting cast, including Barbara Gilroy, Edward Burns and Frank Holland, is adequate. Miss Gilroy's work in this production, although of small import, points to better things in the future. She screens well and gives evidence of real dramatic ability. The photography is clear.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Betsey Dawley (Violet Mersereau), daughter of Handsome Harry Dawley (Frank Holland), lives with her father in the mountains of Kentucky. When the Civil War breaks out the people of the town of Greenburgh, Ky., are [illegible] sympathy—some with the South, the others with the North. The Dawley family were strongly in favor of the South. Handsome Harry was one of the first ones to volunteer as one of the famous band of Morgan's Raiders. He is the disowned son of one of the proudest families in Greenburgh. His father was strongly in favor of the cause for which the North was fighting.

Betsey had met and attracted the attention of John Davidson (Edward Burns). He came back to Greenburg as captain of a Yankee company of volunteers. Colonel Morgan called for a man to carry a message through the lines to the Dawley mansion, and Handsome Harry volunteered. He was shot down and Betsey, attired in the uniform of the Morgan band, carried the message through to the Dawley mansion. Dawley is her grandfather and Betsey proudly announced herself as one of Morgan's men. Dawley recognized her as his granddaughter. Several days later she saves her father and Dawley's son from Davidson's men, who had come to take him prisoner. Betsey re-unites her grandfather and her father and there is a happy reunion at the old homestead.

"'Little Red' Decides"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AN immensely colorful little comedy-drama is "'Little Red' Decides," in which a four-year-old youngster, adopted by the cowboys, proves the very joy of their several existences. There is a pathetic episode when the little boy lies seriously ill, when the cowboys, rough and burly, go about with their heads hanging; but, for the most part, the five reels offer light comedy, sprinkled with ever so many human touches that are a treat to see. That William McCoy, its author, formulated little or no plot for his picture, is an omission that can be passed over lightly in this instance. For so skilfully has Jack Cunningham brought out the humor and the human qualities of the various episodes of the picture, and so appropriate is Director Jack Conway's handling of it, that one seldom misses the element of struggle.

Barbara Connolly, as the little boy, though always obviously a girl, is one of the cutest children ever seen on the screen. No one can help loving her or "him" with the same whole-heartedness professed by the various hands of the ranch. A fine array of types was assembled to carry these roles. Frederick Vroom, as the owner, is a kindly, refined-appearing gentleman. Jack Curtis, as the gruff cowboy whose heart is completely melted by the child, is excellent, and when it comes time for him to propose to the three single women in the town, that the youngster may have a mother, he handles his opportunities with a fine sense of their comedy value. Nor should Coro Kino, as the ranch cook, be overlooked. Chinamen have appeared before in pictures, many times, but never has one displayed the histrionic ability of Kino. He has a fat part and puts it over in fine style.

The picture is laid in exteriors, for the most part, and these are always well selected. "'Little Red' Decides" has none of the strong points of the picture that one describes in superlatives. It is not dramatic, but taken as a whole, it comes as a breath of fresh air 'midst a good many breaths that are far from fresh.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Little Red (Barbara Connolly) is adopted by the Aliso Ranch after her father's death. She becomes a permanent fixture before long and cheers the hearts of all. The minister (Frank MacQuarrie) and a committee from the neighboring town of Casitas visits the ranch and tells its owner, Colonel Aliso (Frederick Vroom), that the boy should be brought up in better surroundings than those provided at the ranch. However, by donating substantially to the organ fund raised by the minister's wife, the boys manage to keep Little Red for a while longer. Then comes his serious illness, through which he pulls only after days and days when his life hangs in the balance. After that the doctor believes that the minister's home is the real place for Little Red, unless someone on the ranch marries. Tom Gilroy (Jack Curtis) is selected to enter the bonds of matrimony, but the available women in town he does not relish at all, and he returns to the ranch unsuccessful. However, the Colonel legally adopts the boy and all is happy again.

Walter Perry, Jean Hersholt, Margaret Cullington, Alice Davenport, Nellie Anderson, Maude Handforth, Percy Challenger, George Pearce, Curley Baldwin and Betty Pearce complete the cast.

"The House of Hate"

(Pathe—First Episode—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

ASIDE from starting out after the manner of a good serial, "The House of Hate," Pathe's latest, is more pretentious in setting than the usual fifteen or twenty weeks "to be continued in our next" picture. The interiors are as fine as those that ever graced a five-reel feature—are in every way as realistic and magnificent as those that one sees in a Pathe play. But probably that which exhibitors will receive with smiles and the rubbing of hands is the fact that Pearl White is the star of "The House of Hate." The only Pearl! She who established the serial in "The Perils of Pauline" and who has been steadily increasing its fame and her own popularity ever since. She who can deal a knockout blow to the jaw of her opponent with the impact of a Willard, and who can the next minute turn around and look sweet and pretty in lingerie. It is also of note that Antonio Moreno, handsome and one of the most popular leading men on the screen, puts in an appearance as the hero. So there are two leads. Without them the U. S. mail could discharge a few odd dozen of its employees, but because of the "The House of Hate" that government institution may have to hire a few more.

The story of the serial, written by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue, and scenarioized by Bertram Millhauser gets away to a flying start, in which a mysterious character is prominent. He is dressed in black and completely camouflaged by a hood and flits around from scene to scene dropping notes, threats and murders.

In episode No. 1 he kills Waldon (J. H. Gilmour), munitions manufacturer, and every relative of the man is suspected. Mr. Millhauser has gloriously succeeded in casting suspicion on every one of the principal characters and those who see the first episode will certainly be in a quandary over the identity of the Hooded Terror.

George B. Seitz, who needs no introduction to the trade, directed. Aided by a production department that hesitated at no expense, he has turned out a superlative product in these two reels. He has brought out the mystery element to a fine degree, and planted all the characters clearly. Paul Clerget, an actor of real ability, Peggy, Shaynor and J. Webb Dillon have the other principal roles.

Pathe is off again. Another serial will come and go for fifteen weeks or more, and if the exhibitor fails to derive profit from it then he will from no other serial.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Winthrop Waldon (J. H. Gilmour), munitions manufacturer, calls his heirs together to decide who among them shall take charge of the works. Tradition holds that a male Waldon has always been at the head, so Winthrop plans marrying his daughter, Pearl (Pearl White) to Haynes Waldon (J. Webb Dillon), a distant relative. Pearl, however, is very much in love with Harvey Gresham (Antonio Moreno), a chemist in her father's laboratory, and hears the news of her betrothal to Haynes in sorrow. That evening Winthrop is killed by the Hooded Terror, who claims via a note that he is the rightful heir to the Waldron plant. The Hooded Terror then kidnaps Pearl, and Gresham pursues. The chase leads to the munitions plant, where the Terror plans to crush Pearl to death between two huge castings.

"One More American"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

SOME of the strongest dramatic work shown by George Beban since the beginning of his screen career is within the five reels of "One More American," his latest Paramount offering. His last two pictures, it will be remembered, were for the most part humorous, the desired suspense being obtained by the introduction of melodramatic situations which hardly allowed for the display of his talents. In his present role, however, that rare acting ability of his, his sense of tragedy, is allowed full play, and if one dissects the emotions after watching him one comes away with a feeling that he has seen a great character actor in a great part. Only an actor of the ability and expressiveness of Beban could essay to do the scene wherein Luigi Riccardo learns that his long expected wife and child are detained at Ellis Island, with the awful prospect of being deported to Italy. Here is a scene where the star rises to unexcelled heights. His performances, so true to the pathos of the situation, will bring tears to the eyes.

Olga Printzlaue made an excellent adaptation of William DeMille's play, upon which the picture is based. The continuity is skilfully arranged and there are no loose ends to confuse. Mr. DeMille himself directed, and has laid the story in backgrounds of real atmosphere. The East Side streets, with their pushcart peddlers and ever-active masses of humanity, are realistic to a degree, and the puppet show is something quite novel and interesting. Of the supporting cast, Raymond Hatton, Helen Jerome Eddy, H. B. Carpenter, Jack Holt, Hector Dion and Camille Ankewich all stand out in parts of prominence, rendering performances that go toward making "One More American" practically the best of Beban's five-reel offerings.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Because Luigi Riccardo (George Beban) refuses to accede to the wishes of Regan (H. B. Carpenter), boss of his ward, the latter plans vengeance. Learning that his wife (Camille Ankewich) and young daughter (May Giracci) are aboard an incoming boat, he forces Dr. Ross (Hector Dion), an inspector at Ellis Island, who owes his position to the corrupt political leader, to find something the matter with the two immigrants. Luigi is in ecstasies of delight at the prospect of being reunited with his wife and child, but his happiness is short-lived, as the doctor carries out orders and puts the incoming members of Luigi's family down for deportation. Sam Potts (Jack Holt), a political reporter, who has been trying to get the goods on Regan for some time, learns of Luigi's tragic story and suspects foul play. With Rump Rundle (Raymond Hatton) he plans a frame-up on Regan, with the ultimate result that his hand is forced. The upshot of it is that Luigi's wife and child are permitted admittance to the country, while the boss gets his just deserts.

May Palmer, Ernest Joy and Signor Buzzi complete the cast.

"The Unbeliever"

(Edison Special—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

WHEN the lady sitting next to you at the theatre boldly extracts her 'kerchief from her bag and the man in front of you turns his eyes from the screen to quell the emotions arising within them, there is something with a deep-set meaning flitting across the gold fiber before them—there's a drama worth while being enacted in pantomime. This is what was seen in at least one performance, at the Rivoli last week, when Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews' "The Three Things" was shown on the screen under the title "The Unbeliever," produced by Edison, under the direction of Alan Crosland, and presenting Raymond McKee and Marguerite Courtot in the leading roles. S. L. Rothapfel made no mistake when he booked this run. It has substance—the white meat of the drama and the thrills that accompany a well-staged war drama. There's a reason for the war scenes. The author has laid a firm foundation and then entered the battle fields and the trenches with assurance and victory is hers. "The Unbeliever" crosses the line well in the lead and wins the applause of the onlookers.

A pure and simple war drama is "The Unbeliever." The author has not attempted to play upon the sympathy of an audience without first having furnished a good and sufficient excuse for demanding sympathy. You cannot resist it if you keep your eyes on the screen and unless your heart is one of stone it will incite sympathy and tears. It is in the class of screen dramas that have a purpose back of them. It holds with a grip that tightens as the plot unfolds.

Alan Crosland, who directed, with the co-operation of the United States Marine Corps, has shot the actuality in registering the backgrounds. When he sends the hero into the trenches, trenches they are—not props. Every detail conforms to the actuality from the French type of helmet adopted by our troops in France to the bobbed-wire entanglements barricading the approach of the advancing army. He has not caused hundreds of men to fall before the fire of the enemy and the lens of the camera, but he has characters, in the role of the trench soldiers, picked off one by one. He shows more of the preparedness prior to battle and less of the gruesome sights incident to the actual battle. By this method he has made possible a certain suspense which would have been absent had he driven his characters before the fire of the enemy without first working up to the point. Credit for this is due in a large measure to the author but Mr. Crosland comes in for his share in rightly interpreting her intentions.

The photography stands out in every scene with the clearness of a blue sky. The detailed work in production is noticeable throughout. The action moves at a rapid gait and for every expression on the characters' faces, for every advance in plot and for every scene shot, there's a reason. The story works to a logical conclusion, without pressure from the outside but carried on to its climax by reasonable, necessary and logical events and incidents.

Raymond McKee, although not as strong and virile a type as might be expected for the role of Philip Landicutt and lacking in the ability to express the subtler emotions which would convince an audience of his unbelief and his aristocratic birth, rises to dramatic heights at times and on the whole gives a good account of the hero. Mr. McKee has too much of the humorous within him to portray with strength and character and purpose the "unbeliever." Marguerite Courtot, as the Belgian girl, works to advantage in the lighter scenes and registers dramatic emotion at times. She could have dressed her hair, in the earlier scenes, in a more conventional style and have left a more favorable impression with her audiences. Karl Stroheim, as the German officer is an exceptionally good type, a seasoned actor and a strong, convincing character impersonator. His work in this production is highly commendable even though he is sneered at and hissed. His work stands out in bold relief. Blanche Davenport and Gertrude Norman leave lasting impressions as Belgian women and mothers. Frank de Vernon makes a fine Uncle "Jemmy." Mortimer Martini, Harold Hallacher and Earl Schenck do fine in minor roles. Darwin Karr has the audience with him and gets a full quota of sympathy. The war scenes were taken at the U. S. M. C. Cantonment, at Quantico, Va.

MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE MACHINE

Are in big demand in all parts of the country.

There is a reason

Those who understand motion picture machine construction in its modern development, describe the NEW MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE MODEL as, "the projector of the year."

You want the best—then investigate the NEW MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE.

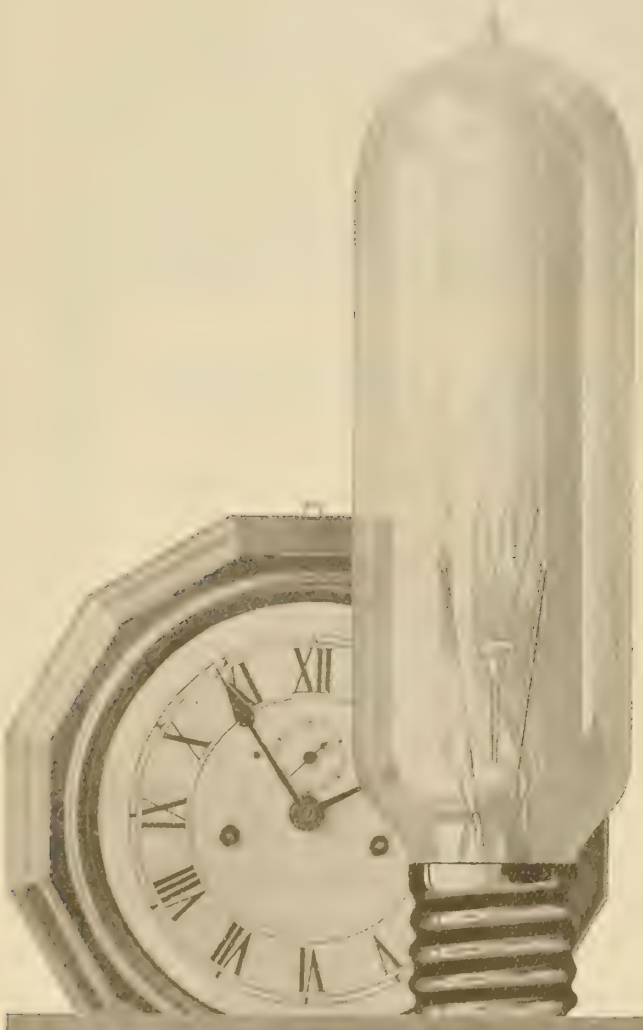
No Adjustments—Save Time



Nothing to Watch but the Film

You know what it means in the booth to have "no adjustments" to make—an end to all the fussing and regulating of sputtering carbons! It means an operator with time to watch the film. It means a reasonable booth temperature and other conditions right, so the operator can operate!

NATIONAL MAZDA projector lamps not only require no attention after they are once focused, but they do away with flickering light. They improve the pictures They dispense with the breaking of carbon-jaws and lenses.

And they save current!

They save TWO-THIRDS of the current. They effect so great an economy that within a few months they entirely repay the cost of rebuilding your apparatus. Exhibitors who want to save trouble—who want to please their audiences with better pictures—or who want to make more net profit—will get in touch at once with their nearest supply house—or Nela Specialties Division, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., 110 Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio.

A Step in the Right Direction

THE NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY announced in last week's issues of the trade papers that, on and after February 15, 1918, the list prices of their various model projectors would be increased.

Motion Picture News wishes to congratulate the Power Company on this step. It is something which we have advocated on every possible occasion. The question is whether the advance is sufficient. It was inevitable—it had to come—but it took courage to be the first to make the break. The peculiar thing is that every time we have talked with a machine manufacturer he has agreed with us, but he seemed afraid to be the first to move.

The price of raw materials has doubled in some instances; the cost of labor has increased from ten per cent up. Yet our machine manufacturers have gone straight ahead on the old basis, showing a continually lessening profit—a limit had to be reached. Others will follow suit—they will have to. For a time other manufacturers may see an increase in sales, but, in the long run, these increases, at best but small, will not prove to be worth while.

One thousand dollars profit on sales is a thousand dollars, whether it represents the sale of ten machines or twenty. The sale of ten machines, however, means a smaller overhead—a smaller manufacturing force—and just that many more purchasers in the field who are still prospects for future sales.

Aside from the manufacturers' point of view, the exhibitors should also be considered. The heart of every theatre is the projection room and all the equipment in it must be of the very best. If overhead and cost of raw materials increase, with the result that the quality of the mechanisms produced become inferior to present standards, merely in order to uphold the net profits to the company, it is not fair to the honest exhibitor.

One of the greatest evils in the theatre end of our industry has been in the sales price of projectors. This is the one commodity which has been purchased with the idea of saving every possible cent, even to cutting the profits of the sales agent down to his cash discount and then demanding time payments.

The method of sales has been such that the fly-by-night exhibitor has been encouraged to the detriment of the honest man—in fact he has counted on the supply dealer and indirectly the machine manufacturer as one of his sure financial supporters. He has known that if he handled things right he could get dealers fighting over his order regardless of credit until some one would come across with an offer which meant no profit plus ruinous time payments, and all on the promise of the exhibitor to buy other supplies through him in future—in itself an empty promise.

Recently we have seen great advancement in distributing methods. All three of the big manufacturers have come out with new sales policies which from reports are working out in fine shape. This is certainly encouraging. It is our hope that the result of these policies will be the stabilizing of prices with sales based upon legitimate sales arguments and above all service, and not as in the past with cut throat competition, on a price basis without anything to back it up.

It is our belief that no manufacturer with a reputation to uphold will reduce the quality of the material put into their machines, nor will allow individual sales agents to again run wild. Also that when the profits on their product have reached a point where something must be done in the interests of better business that they will then take the bull by the horns and increase prices. As we have said above, the one thing produced for our industry which has been kicked from pillar to post, underestimated as to actual value and looked down upon in general, has been the projection machine—the heart of the picture theatre.

The Regulation of the Rays

John W. Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., writes:

"With reference to your article on 'The Regulation of the Rays' in the February 9th issue of the Motion Picture News.

"As the author of most of the tables of condenser distances recently published, and as the advocate of a greater distance between condensers and aperture, I feel that the article in question was a criticism of my work, and as such should be open to discussion.

"Speaking frankly, I consider the author of the article in question to be in error in depicting the passage of the condenser beam through the objective lens, as shown in Fig. 1. It may be correct geometrical optics, but it would only apply to the rays from one point of the crater, and the rays from the other points of the crater would more than fill up the deficiency at the aperture plate.

"I think it would greatly facilitate matters if we first obtained a clearer idea of how the condenser beam really passes through the objective lens, and also a clearer idea of the direction of the total rays that go towards making up the condenser beam as a whole. In order to do this let us consider as a separate proposition all the rays that pass from the source (front surface of the condenser) and the image of the source (called the aerial image of the condenser). From each point of the surface of the source we have a diverging cone of rays, the angular width of the said cone depending upon the size of the crater. These cones [of rays] are directed toward the objective lens, through the aperture plate, and if we consider a cone of rays from the center of the source it will arrive at the objective as a rectangle of light somewhat larger than the aperture, and at this position [between aperture and objective] it will have a greater width than at any other position in its passage between the source and its image. The action of the lens will overcome the divergence and bring the total rays forming the cone to a focus at the image of the source (in front of the objective). It will be seen that this single cone from one point (or small area) of the source carries a full film image to the objective, and then reduces the full film image to a point at the image of the source, plainly showing that the film image is reversed at the image of the source. Also, it will be noted that the rays from one point of the source almost fill the lens tube; and a little consideration will show that the same action is taking place between each point of the source and the points of the image of the source, and when any obstruction occurs it is from the marginal points of the source.

"Now to get to the real reason for this letter, namely, what is the effect of increasing the distance between the source and the aperture?

"Let us first consider two marginal points of the source, diametrically opposite each other. They both pass through the aperture in their passage to the lens, and each one is depositing a rectangle of light at the lens. If the distance be short the rectangles of light will be larger than they would with a greater distance between the source and the aperture, and also they would be further apart; therefore, a greater part of them would be lost to the screen through not entering the lens at all, producing unevenness and loss of light. The endeavor of the tables [of condenser distances] was to include the whole of the rectangles from all points of the source within the effective diameter of the objective lens, and this is impossible when the condensers are too close to the aperture. Increasing the distance between the source and the aperture reduces the area over which the individual rectangles are deposited and also reduces the divergence of each cone making for greater efficiency and better definition.

"P. S.—There is a great difference between an 'aerial-image' and a virtual image. An aerial-image is a positive and real image when a screen is interposed to receive it; a virtual image is negative and non-existent."

In Reply: Mr. Griffiths can claim a position in the foremost ranks of projectionists because of his conscientious investigations in projector optics. For his painstaking experimental endeavors he has our warmest praise, but in some of his inferences he has departed from a proper consideration of the action of systems of lenses. Mr. Griffiths' deductions are to a considerable extent based upon experiments made with a conventional projector optical system, and photographs of the light ray action through this appartus have been offered in support of his conclusions.

The use of such a crude condenser system as is commonly employed in cine projection prohibits many important points concerning light ray action from being definitely ascertained, and this fact was pointed out in our article, now under discussion, where we said: "The study of projector optics is complicated by the fact that the condenser lens system is uncorrected, and hence its performance is hampered by a severe amount of aberration." We also said: "In view of the extensive aberration of the condenser system, it is difficult, if not impossible, to exactly trace the paths of the rays from the condenser to the aperture or the objective."

Experience, and experiments, confirm these observations of ours, and we consider that the results noticed by Mr. Griffiths when using his experimental projector system, and also some of the photographs of those experiments, are misleading, to say the least, and liable to create a mistaken idea of what constitutes efficient optical action in a motion picture projector.

Mr. Griffiths has also misinterpreted the intended purport of our article, as another quotation from the same will show. We said, in our preliminary remarks: "Some fundamental relationships between objective and condensers can be traced without consideration of the refracting effects of any of the lenses which comprise the projector optical system." Our article stands as published, and Mr. Griffiths' remarks are not to be considered as invalidating any of its statements, but we shall endeavor on the present occasion to convey our meaning to Mr. Griffiths in a clearer manner than appears to have been accomplished by the published article. Our diagram, marked Fig. 1, has been misinterpreted by Mr. Griffiths where he says it does not correctly depict the passage of the condenser beam through the machine aperture, and an examination of our article will show that we did not, at any place, state that any lines in the diagram depicted the passage of light rays. As previously mentioned the article was in the nature of a geometrical demonstration, and refraction by the lenses of the projector optical system was altogether ignored. It is correct, as Mr. Griffiths subsequently states, that a rectangular shaped bundle of rays is transmitted through the aperture, but as our article points out, this rectangular bundle of rays passing through the aperture will not be of maximum intensity unless the conditions shown in our Fig. 1 are complied with.

We are utterly at loss to comprehend the revelancy of Mr. Griffiths' allusion to the "rays from one point of the crater," for in our article the bright front surface of the forward condenser is considered as the light-source, and Mr. Griffiths knows, as well as we do, that the light proceeding from the forward condenser surface represents rays from every point of the arc crater, but perhaps Mr. Griffiths meant to refer to rays from one point of the forward condenser surface.

Let us follow, with Mr. Griffiths, the passage of the light rays from the source (the front condenser surface) to its conjugate representation out in front of the objective. We can agree that each point of the condenser surface is sending a small cone of rays to the objective through the machine aperture, and also that each of these small cones of rays which passes through the objective will take part in the formation of the so-called "aerial-image" in front of the objective.

It is true, as Mr. Griffiths subsequently remarks, that the rays from any point of the condenser surface will transmit to the objective a rectangle of light representing the complete aperture, but if he finds the cross-section of this rectangular bundle to be substantially greater than the diagonal of the machine aperture when it has arrived at the rear surface of the objective, then it is a sign that his light-source, or condenser, is at an excessive distance from the aperture. It was shown by our previous article that when the condensers are at an excessive distance from the machine aperture the entire available extent of the light-source is not utilized in illuminating the image to be projected, but when the condensers are at a suitable distance, and we have a converging beam falling upon the aperture, we will secure the most intense illumination possible from an arc and condensers, and we only require to have the cross-section of this convergent beam large enough to cover the aperture with a comfortable margin all around.

We return to Mr. Griffiths' description of the passage of the rays (from condensers and aperture) through the objective, and we agree that these rays will be converged by the objective to form an image of the light source (surface of front condenser) some distance in front of the objective. Mr. Griffiths, however, entirely ignores the fact that the machine aperture is the "aperture stop" of the entire projector optical system. In the case of a converging condenser beam, substantially equal in intensity throughout and slightly larger than the diagonal of the aperture, the aperture (being the smallest stop in the system) will intercept the edges of the circular condenser beam, and the image of the source formed in front of the objective should be rectangular in shape. As a matter of fact, the image of the source formed ahead of the objective is a rectangle when the condensers are close enough to the aperture to furnish limiting illumination, and the formation of a circular source-image ahead of the lens is prima facie evidence that the source is too far removed from the aperture, and that a convergent beam of sufficient cross-section to properly cover the aperture is not being supplied by the condensers.
